Mr. BUTLER. I do not know what the gentleman's amendment will be. I hope he does propose to sustain the export trade, and I have no doubt he thinks he does. But if you provide for this tax to be paid at the distillery there is an end of the export trade. You have almost killed it now by your special taxes on the manufacture. In order to make any spirits for export, the manufacturer must pay all these taxes, the tax on the still, on the distillery, and four dollars a barrel besides. They must pay about sixteen or eighteen cents a gallon before it can be exported, even under this bill. Now, this renders the export trade exceedingly difficult to be carried on. If you put any other restriction upon it it is gone forever.

Now, the gentleman says that we had better pay the value of the whisky or the rum exported than have any such thing as an export trade in the article. I might agree that if the mere value of the rum exported were the only consideration the gentleman would, perhaps, be correct. But the rum is absolutely necessary for many different foreign trades of the United States. Cut off the export trade in rum and alcohol and you kill your Mediterranean trade; you kill most of the trade on the Eastern continent. So necessary is rum to the trade with Africa that some years ago, when I was aiding in prosecuting a slaver, where it was claimed that the voyage was an honest voyage, we produced testimony to show that it could not be an honest voyage to Africa because no rum was on board ship, and that, therefore, it must be a slave voyage.

Mr. PRICE. Does the gentleman mean to say that no voyage to Africa can be an honest voyage unless the ship carries out rum and brings back negroes?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir. The fact is that slavers do not take out rum, while the honest traders do, bringing back palm oil, ivory, &c. Some gentleman says let them take out gold. They cannot trade with gold because gold dust is one of the things they bring back from Africa. They cannot make a profitable trade with that country without using rum. If the House chooses to break down that trade, be it so.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I suppose that the same vessel that takes out the rum takes out also missionaries?

Mr. BUTLER. Very likely; and if you cut off the trade with Africa you may cut off the carrying out of missionaries. But this is a diversion from the question which I am discussing. This is a very vital question to the interests of navigation in this country. We have already struck blow after blow at the foreign trade of the United States. If you want to give it another blow, I cannot object. If the country can stand it, we of New England can; but one thing is certain: no country has ever yet prospered without a foreign trade, and this country cannot do so.

Now, sir, I have examined this bill carefully, because my district and my State have an interest in the export trade. The bill is guarded carefully, and although the ingenuity of fraud is almost infinite, I can see no way in which any great harm can happen to the revenue by allowing this transportation for export only; because the leak heretofore has arisen from the fact that whisky could be taken out from the bonded warehouse for other purposes than export. Under this bill it can be taken out for only one purpose, that is, for export. When it once gets the export stamp upon it and goes into the export warehouse, it cannot be removed thence under the provisions of this bill, except to go out of the country.

Mr. LOGAN. It can be taken out for redistillation.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was prepared the Committee of Ways and Means, of course, did not know what would be the amount of the tax, that being a question for the determination of the House. The Committee of the Whole having now fixed the tax at fifty cents per gallon the question to be determined is whether or not western distillers can afford to pay the tax at the still and transport their product to market. For myself I am rather inclined to believe they can do so; and the only object I have in renewing the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] is to suggest that this subject be for the present passed over until we reach the question of bonded warehouses. We must have bonded warehouses at the distillery, and it may be we shall decide to have bonded warehouses for other purposes. My own impression is that we ought not to have bonded warehouses for redistillation, but we may conclude to have them for exportation. When that question shall be reached, if it should be found that sufficient safeguards cannot be provided, we can then arrange the matter. The total amount of export is not very large, and I will say with reference to the plan of this bill that in my judgment it entirely differs from any bonded warehouse system which we have hitherto adopted.

A man who bonds his goods must give a bond in double the amount of the tax, and that bond is never released until the tax is paid or the whisky is exported by proper certificate. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the system of bonded warehouses here proposed is the precise system now adopted in the custom-house; and this very day an importer of brandy or of any distilled spirits can receive them in New York and transport them in bond, in casks or boxes, to Chicago or any other western city. I have never heard of any frauds in that system of transportation. Without paying duty they can now transport brandy and wine imported from abroad in bond from New York to the interior. A bond is given for the payment of the duty. Nothing is more common, and the gentleman knows it, than the transportation of these articles in bond from the Atlantic seaports to the great interior cities. I want the gentleman to examine this system carefully. I am not certain I will not move to strike it out if there is any great fraud to be perpetrated under it.

Mr. LOGAN. Foreign liquors pay a duty of two dollars and a half to three dollars per gallon, and we have reduced the tax on distilled spirits to fifty cents per gallon. We thus leave a great difference between the duty on the foreign liquors and the tax on distilled spirits manufactured here.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly we have assimilated our tariff laws and our internal-tax laws. Having put a tax of two dollars on whisky, we placed a duty of $2 50 on foreign spirits. We can reduce that when we come to consider the tariff.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. There seems to be, Mr. Chairman, almost an infatuation on some subjects connected with whisky. I do not wonder a good many spectators stalk about and a good many spirits are abroad, because a good deal of the spirit of the country has been abroad without being held to a proper restriction. But so far as this matter of bonded warehouses is concerned, let me tell gentlemen that which is proposed in this bill is nothing like the present bonded warehouse system. What was a great source of fraud upon the bonded warehouses B before, or under the present law, was the removal of liquor for the purpose of rectification and not putting it back, or putting back something different, or making that a cover for various kinds of fraud. There is no allowance of removal for rectifying at all under this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask whether or not, in the removal of spirits in bond heretofore, they did not defraud the Government by triplicate permits of collectors?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir; and if the gentleman will be patient I will come to that if I have time in my five minutes. I say there is no removal for rectifying; and no man can rectify unless he takes whisky tax paid.

How is it in regard to duplicate and triplicate bonds? All that is distinctly guarded against in this bill. If gentlemen will look at section fifty-two and the four or five following sections they will see how the committee have provided against fraud. You can remove it, but when once removed bonds are to be taken in triplicate. Then every person is held responsible along the route from the distillery warehouse to the exportation warehouse. It is all named in the bill. It is a perfect guard, and has no likeness to anything contained in the present law.

Now, what is the present law in regard to other matters? The other day the cities of Cincinnati, Chicago, and perhaps other points at the West, were thrown open so as to have removed to them from the sea board all sorts of goods, wares, and merchandise, including foreign liquors of every kind, with next to no guards thrown around them, the tax to be paid when they reached a point in the interior, which is made for that purpose a port of entry. On the way, before the duty is paid, they are liable to all these frauds, tenfold more than are now possible under the transportation of distilled spirits at home. Thus, while you encourage almost as it were every sort of looseness in reference to foreign goods you propose to break down entirely all that relates to the exportation of a portion of the products of our own country.

Now, sir, I am perfectly willing that the Committee of the Whole shall settle this question as they please, only I want them to understand what they are settling. If the amendment which is proposed prevails, then there can be no more exportation of alcohol or rum from this country. It puts an end to it entirely. That is the question gentlemen are to meet. I do not care whether it goes from Boston or New York, or whether there is any interest in the interior of the country. Let it go from whatever quarter it may, it is just so much contributed toward turning the balance of trade in our favor and helping us pay our foreign debt. I therefore think it expedient, and I voted in the committee to sustain the idea that while we were throwing every guard around the Government to secure its revenue from this source, it would be unwise to break down a trade which was so much to the interest of the people of the country.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask my colleague to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I withdraw it.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I renew it. I desire to say that if the bill is not now so framed as to provide for a drawback for export it certainly can be so framed. I desire to say, further, that we are legislating now for the protection of the revenues of the Government. I do not understand this legislation to be in the interests of distillers; it is not for the purpose of promoting the manufacture of whisky; but we say to these men, "You may manufacture it, but you must pay." We are legislating now for the purpose of securing to the Government this tax. We are hedging these men about in every possible manner, as though we were legislating against scoundrels and knaves. We are not, then, in their interest, and it is no great hardship, it seems to me, to require these men, if they wish to export, to agree to pay the tax in the first instance the same as if they were manufacturing anything else, and when they prove it give them a drawback. Secure the Government its revenue and cut off all this machinery and all opportunity for fraud by taking the spirits from the first warehouse.

Mr. BUTLER. The difficulty with the drawback is, men export a great deal of whisky and never pay any tax. They want the Government to pay the drawback.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not see how that can be done under this bill. Gentlemen say that we can collect under this bill all the tax on whisky. If you collect all the tax before it is removed from the distillery I do not see how they can export whisky that has not paid the tax. But the tax will not be collected by a long shot if you allow them to remove the whisky from the still. There is where the fraud comes in every time. I am in favor of commerce, but we are not legislating here in the interest of commerce or of whisky. It is not for the purpose of promoting commerce, but of collecting the tax on whisky that we are legislating. Then let us tax it before they remove it. If they can prove that they have paid the tax when they want to export the liquor give them a drawback. By putting the tax so low now that they can pay it there will be no pretense that manufacturers cannot afford to pay it, and let him wait a little while if he is going to export his liquor as the manufacturers of any other article do.

Mr. INGERSOLL. How long will the Government retain the tax in its vaults before it allows the drawback?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Until the man moves his whisky, until he puts it on board ship and starts it for a foreign port.

Mr. INGERSOLL. That will not do. You must wait until you know it has reached its destination.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Very well; let the gentleman who framed the bill put it in shape. I do not care if it takes twelve months. If a man wants to export whisky let him pay the tax on it, as every other manufacturer does before he moves his goods.

Mr. PILE. I rise to oppose the amendment; and I avail myself of the opportunity of correcting a misstatement made by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means—made wholly unintentionally, of course. I understood him to say that under the bill which passed some ten days or two weeks ago, goods, wares, or merchandise, including distilled spirits, could be transported from the sea-board ports of entry to the interior ports of entry without restriction or any bond or guarantee that the Government should not be defrauded of the duties on these goods. Distilled spirits are especially excepted from that bill, and the transportation of all goods is to be under proper bonds. I have the bill in my hand as it passed the House, and the language is, "that any goods, wares, or merchandise, other than distilled spirits."

Mr. SCHENCK. Was not that put in during the progress of the bill through the House?

Mr. PILE. It was.

Mr. SCHENCK. It certainly was not in the original bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I was speaking of the law as it exists to-day, and not of any bill that has passed the House.

Mr. PILE. I was correcting a statement made by the chairman of the committee. I wish to say in addition that as the law exists to-day all goods, wares, and merchandise of every character, including distilled spirits and all kinds of imported liquors can be transported from any sea-board port of entry—New York, Boston, or any other sea-board port—to St. Louis, Cincinnati, or Chicago, without the payment of duties, upon the owner, agent, or consignee giving a bond to the custom-house officer at such Atlantic port of entry for the payment of the duties when the goods arrive, and under this system of transportation the experience of the Government is that there is no danger of fraud. I have seen no revenue officer, either in Washington or elsewhere, who claims that the transportation of goods in this way under bonds has resulted in frauds. Now, then, if we can transport imported goods, including distilled spirits, from an Atlantic port of entry to an interior port of delivery, and there require the payment of the duties on arrival, I do not see why we cannot, under the stringent provisions of this bill, transport distilled spirits from any interior portion of the country to the sea-board for the purpose of exportation.

Mr. COVODE. I heard the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, as well as the gentleman from Missouri, say that under the bill lately passed, foreign spirits could be transported in bond. That is a mistake. That was stricken out, and the bill relates to other merchandise, not spirits.

Mr. PILE. I was now speaking of the law as it exists at present, and not of the bill that passed the House some days ago. We are transporting from New York to St. Louis every week imported wines and brandies paying the duties when we withdraw them at the warehouse at St. Louis under the bond given in New York. And while it may be true, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, that we are not legislating specifically in the interest of commerce in this bill, yet when our commerce has been driven from the seas by the war and by our unfriendly and narrow-minded legislation on the subject of commerce, we ought not in this bill to strike an additional blow that will crush out and extirpate $4,000,000 of foreign trade, thus increasing the balance of trade against us, to take gold out of the country and send gold up and Government securities down. It is the blindest policy of legislation ever adopted in any country.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, with my imperfect knowledge in regard to matters of this sort I would not feel justified in saying a word about it were it not that a very large interest in my district, which has come to me personally since I returned to my seat in the House, has implored me to pay some attention to this matter now under consideration. The representations that are brought to me by very intelligent and very largely experienced men engaged in this traffic, and also my own personal observation on this subject, compel me to conclude that this whole plan of permitting whisky to be removed in any shape, or under any possible provisions of law, from the place of distillation, is to leave open the most dangerous avenues and means of fraud from which the Government is now suffering so much.

My friend here, [Mr. SCHENCK,] who has, perhaps, bestowed more labor upon this subject, and who probably understands it better than any other man in the country, will admit that it is impossible for any ingenuity or any skill to completely provide against the means of fraud that are necessarily furnished by any bill which, like this, embraces in it permission for transporting throughout the continent, and without having paid the tax, all the distilled spirits made in the country. The very nature of the case excludes the conclusion that the laws can restrain these frauds when we keep in mind the ingenuity of fraud and the corruptibility of the instruments which the Government is compelled to employ in enforcing the law. That old trinity of "Ls" which says, "Love laughs at locks," has already, in the Government's experience in failure to defeat these frauds, been duplicated in another which says, "Liquor laughs at laws." The chairman of the committee assures us that his bill contains the most stringent provisions and requires ample bonds before any removal, that a particular route shall be taken in going to the warehouse, and all that. I do not maintain that his bill is not stringent, or is not the best that can be made; but I say that whenever you permit the distilled spirits to go off on wheels, and travel across the country, you thereby necessarily enable the distiller, in collusion with the corrupted officer of the Government whom he combines with, to avoid the tax, and no law can prevent the fraud. What are bonds or oaths or revenue inspectors worth now under your laws? What are custom-house bonds and oaths ever worth? As you increase these bonds and oaths and watchers for fraud, you increase the frauds.

That is my answer to my friend's argument; not that his bill is not the best that can be devised, but that none can be devised that will prevent these frauds if you let the whisky get out of the place where it is manufactured without first paying the tax. That is my first suggestion.

My next suggestion is that in the very nature of the case the transportation of whisky across this country and to the sea-board under the pretense that it is for exportation, when it cannot be exported in the form of whisky, is on its very face exceedingly suggestive of meditated fraud. My distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] says what everybody knows, that men do not transport whisky across the ocean, because he thereby transports a barrel of worthless water in each two barrels of whisky. But then it costs more to transport it from Illinois or even Ohio to New York by land than it does to transport it across the ocean. Then who expects that whisky, one half water, will be transported as whisky to New York, there to have its water taken out by turning it into alcohol at New York, and then to be thence transported as alcohol? The bill is in this absurd upon its face, as it seems to me, because it provides for the transportation of whisky, half water, across the country for exportation.

Mr. SCHENCK. "Distilled spirits."

Mr. SHELLABARGER. That embraces whisky. I say that whisky can be transported under the provisions of this bill, because, by the third section and others, it is expressly shown that whisky is included in the words "distilled spirits." If the language of the bill is wrong, and the committee do not mean to permit the "whisky" of the country to be transported in bond, then let the bill be amended so as to provide that nothing shall be transported in bond except alcohol, and that will not only prevent the escape of whisky from taxation but will also give to the West, where most of this production is made, the change of the whisky into that which alone is exported, namely, into alcohol.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to detain the committee, but to correct a remark of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who said that my theory was wrong, that wherever whisky was transported there would be allowed drawback without paying any tax. Now, by paying the tax at the distillery it would cover all taxes. Now, in order that the committee may understand what I mean, I will ask the Clerk to read, as a part of my remarks, some sections which I shall propose as amendments to the transportation provisions of this bill when we reach them.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That from and after the date at which this act shall take effect there shall be an allowance of drawback on all rum and alcohol, on which any internal tax shall hereafter be paid, equal in amount to the tax so paid thereon and no more, when exported in good faith. The payment of said drawback to be made only when the evidence shall be furnished to the entire satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury by such person or persons who shall claim allowance of drawback, that such tax has been paid, and the said rum or alcohol so exported, landed, and delivered to the consignee or consignees at the foreign port to which it was exported—to be proved by the sworn testimony of responsible persons where exported from and exported to—the same to be paid by the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Treasurer of the United States, out of any money arising from internal tax on distilled spirits not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That no claim for drawback shall be allowed on either of the said articles which shall have been exported as aforesaid prior to the time at which this act shall take effect.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall fraudulently claim or seek to obtain an allowance of drawback on any article or articles aforesaid, on which no internal tax shall have been paid, or shall fraudulently claim any greater allowance or drawback than the tax actually paid thereon as aforesaid, such person or persons shall forfeit and pay to the Government of the United States triple the amount wrongfully or fraudulently sought to be obtained; and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period not less than one nor more than ten years.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely desired to have that proposition read, that the House might understand that in proposing to provide for the collection of the tax at the distillery I do not propose to destroy the export trade, as some gentlemen seem to apprehend. If other gentlemen think they can devise means of accomplishing more effectually the object I desire to attain let them present their suggestions to that end. This is all I desire to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to inquire whether the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means proposes to consent that this question shall be passed over until we reach that portion of the bill specifically devoted to this subject.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will, at the suggestion of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON], ask that by unanimous consent the vote on the amendment proposed by the committee and the amendment to that amendment be reserved until we reach the portions of the bill relating to that subject.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to amend the pending section by striking out in the nineteenth, twentieth, and twenty-first lines the words "and on the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, together with any building thereon." My reason for making this proposition is that I think severity of law is not wisdom of law. There are in the existing law provisions by which I believe men are now suffering imprisonment because some other men without their knowledge were engaged in distilling on their premises. Were it not for the existence of that unwise severity in the existing law, I should doubt whether I understood the provision of this bill or whether it is understood by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SCHENCK. We understand it perfectly well.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman does me the credit of saying that I understand it perfectly well.

Mr. SCHENCK. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Perhaps I say too much for myself; and as I do not desire to bandy compliments I will go on with my argument.

I understand that this tax upon the liquor is, by the provision of this section, to be a first lien upon the land on which the distillery is situated. Now, suppose that my friend, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, owns a comfortable house, with grounds and outbuildings, worth, in the aggregate, $20,000, and that his servants, during his absence, have been carrying on a distillery, the house and lot are liable to the payment of the tax, which may run up in a very few days to $20,000. In addition to that, if a widow or orphan should hold a mortgage on the property, (though I hope my friend keeps his property clear of mortgages,) that mortgage will be cut out. I say this is not wisdom of legislation. It is a part of that unwisely severe legislation which, without any disrespect to the committee, I propose to endeavor to remove by amendments wherever I may find it. For this reason I have moved this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman from New York is very much afraid of some injury being done to persons who own the land upon which distilleries are located. If he had taken the pains to turn to section seven, he would have found that no one can own a distillery under this law unless he is himself the owner of the land, or unless he produces the written consent of the owner of the fee for the occupation of the premises. So his sympathies are all thrown away on a case which can never exist.

As to the difficulty of those who lease property, let me say one of the greatest troubles with these distilleries, and especially in the gentleman's own district, has been, you can never find out who is the owner of the property upon which a distillery is located. You cannot put your finger upon the owner of the property. He seems to be a myth. So you are bandied from one to the other. Very much of the trouble, I will repeat, is in this fact of the inability to learn who is the owner of the property upon which these distilleries are located. We provide now that the business shall not be carried on without the written consent of the person who owns the property. This will prevent some enormous frauds which have been committed in the United States, and, without intending to be discourteous to the gentleman from Brooklyn, I will say that the most enormous frauds have been found in his own district.

Mr. ROBINSON. One single observation.

If the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means bases his action on the ground he has stated, that the distillery shall only be run upon the written consent of the owner of the property, and thus to hold responsible those who engage in illicit distillation with the knowledge of the owner of the property, I do not know I will object to it. But so far as the remark goes which he has made in reference to my district I will say there are many districts worse than that; and any time my friend is ready I will break a lance with him on that point. His own district is not entirely clear.

Mr. SCHENCK. The police officers are the only ones who should break up these fraudulent practices.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to stop this debate. There has been indulgence enough in the discussion of this first section of the bill, and the House will not complain if I ask unanimous consent to stop further debate on this section.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The question was taken on Mr. ROBINSON's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move an amendment to the first section. After the word "and" insert "at that rate for;" so it will read:

And the tax on such spirits shall be collected on the whole number of gauge or wine gallons when below proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of proof-spirit as defined in this act; and at that rate for any fractional part of a gallon in excess of the number of gallons in a cask or package, shall be taxed as a gallon.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope that will not be agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I hope it will.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to add the following:

Insert after the word "gallons," in the fifth line, these words: "except grape brandy, which shall pay a tax of twenty-five cents per gallon."

I wish to say a few words in explanation of that amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not object if we can have five minutes for reply.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that as the law stands at the present time the tax upon grape brandy distilled in this country pays half the tax that is imposed upon whisky. The tax now is two dollars per gallon upon whisky and one dollar upon grape brandy. The tax is now reduced from two dollars to fifty cents upon whisky, and the tax upon grape brandy ought to be reduced to twenty-five cents. Adding the sixteen and a quarter cents of other taxes will bring the tax on whisky up to sixty-six and a quarter cents per gallon. That under this bill would make the tax upon grape brandy nearly as high as it is now. Let me state my reason for this amendment. In Ohio, Michigan, Missouri, and Illinois, but especially in California, we have a great number of vineyards. In California we have hundreds of thousands of acres recently planted with grape-cuttings, and young vineyards are growing up, not yet bearing clusters of grapes, and unless discrimination is made in favor of this production our farmers will have to plow up their vineyards.

Now let me ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means if it is not proper and right that that discrimination should be made? We are to-day taxing the people of the United States, every man, woman, and child, one dollar each per annum for foreign brandies and wines. Is it not better we should discriminate a little in favor of our own farmers who are raising grapes, so that they may produce brandy and wine in this country, and thus save $30,000,000 in gold, more than the whole annual product of the mines of California? In four or five years from this time we may be able to compete with the world in the manufacture of this wine and brandy. I appeal to gentlemen to reflect for one moment on the condition of this country. I ask if thirty or forty million dollars in gold is not something to be saved? My amendment is simply that grape brandy shall pay only twenty-five cents a gallon.

Mr. MAYNARD. What is the market price of your brandy?

Mr. JOHNSON. The market price ranges from two dollars and a half to seven dollars per gallon, and we pay that for our French brandies, while our California brandy is equally as good and will take the place of the French brandy, and entirely break down that commerce which has drained us of more of our treasure than any other commodity imported into this country.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is no inadvertence on the part of the committee. They left out the discrimination in favor of grape brandy on purpose. Now, other distilled spirits pay two dollars and grape brandy pays one dollar. We supposed that the tax being put down, particularly as low as the committee have now put it, fifty cents, grape brandy could as well pay it as any other. In principle, perhaps, there is no particular distinction between that which is made from corn and that which is made from fruit. All spirits should be treated alike. There is one argument, perhaps, in favor of building up the productions of our own country. That appeal has been made from my own constituents, because we make a great deal in the Miami valley, which I represent, particularly about Cincinnati. But I think it is better to have all distilled spirits put on the same footing. There is a duty on foreign brandy now of $2 50 a gallon. With the tax on domestic brandy at fifty cents there is still a protection of two dollars on the domestic brandy. Now, with domestic brandy selling at from two dollars and a half to seven dollars per gallon, twenty-five cents would be a very low tax. But the $2 50 is the price in gold, which is forty per cent. more when reduced to currency, making a very large protection of three or four dollars on every gallon of that brandy produced in the United States. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HIGBY. Is debate closed?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. HIGBY. May I not offer an amendment and make remarks upon it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer it, but he can make no remarks.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON, it was disagreed to—ayes twenty-three, noes not counted.

Mr. HIGBY. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on brandy made from grapes, thirty cents per gallon; and if any person shall knowingly manufacture, compound, put up, sell or dispose of, or cause to be manufactured, compounded, put up, sold or disposed of, or aid or assist therein, any fluid as or for or under or with the name of brandy made from grapes which shall not be really such, he shall, on conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $1,000, and by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court; and any such simulated or compounded fluid as aforesaid shall be forfeited to the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

At this point the committee rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 822) granting a pension to Hampton Thompson;

An act (S. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon;" and Joint resolution (H. R. 264) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Covington, in the State of Maryland.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union then resumed the consideration of the

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. HIGBY. I wish to make some remarks on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed on the section.

Mr. HIGBY. This is a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is regarded as an amendment to the first section, and all debate has been closed upon that.

Mr. HIGBY. Well, it was a fraud upon us, shutting off debate, and nothing else.

The question was taken on Mr. HIGBY's amendment; and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk then read the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That proof-spirit shall be held and taken to be that alcoholic liquor which contains one half its volume of alcohol of a specific gravity of seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-nine ten-thousandths at sixty degrees Fahrenheit; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the prevention and detection of frauds by distillers of spirits, is hereby authorized to adopt, procure, and prescribe for use, at the expense of the United States, such hydrometers, saccharometers, weighing, and gauging instruments, meters, or other means for ascertaining the quantity, gravity, and producing capacity of any mash, wort, or beer used or to be used in the production of distilled spirits, and the strength and quantity of spirits subject to tax, as he may deem necessary; and he may prescribe rules and regulations to secure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing, and gauging of spirits. And in all sales of spirits hereafter made, where not otherwise specially agreed, a gallon shall be taken to be a gallon of proof-spirit, according to the foregoing standard set forth and declared for the inspection and gauging of spirits throughout the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. In line sixteen, I move to strike out the word "and" before "gauging," and to insert after "gauging" the words "and marking;" so that it will read, "and he may prescribe rules and regulations to secure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing, gauging, and marking of spirits."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I move to add to the section the words, "and officers of the United States shall not make special agreements." I understand that where whisky is seized and confiscated it is a common custom, both in New York and Philadelphia, for the United States officers, by special agreement, to sell the whisky which is fifty per cent. above proof, by the wine gallon, so that the purchaser gets a gallon and a half of proof spirits and the Government is cheated. I understand that that is done every day by special agreements.

Mr. LOGAN. I am in favor of that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that it would be better to strike out the words "where not otherwise specially agreed." Those words are in the existing law, but it does not seem to me that they ought to be here.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw my amendment, and the committee can offer any amendment they please.

Mr. MUNGEN. I move to strike out in lines seventeen and eighteen the words "where not otherwise specially agreed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk then read the third section, as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That distilled spirits, spirits, alcohol and alcoholic spirit, within the true intent and meaning of this act is that substance known as ethyl alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl, or spirit of wine, which is commonly produced by the fermentation of grain or starch or sugar, including all dilutions and mixtures of this substance; and the tax shall attach to this substance as soon as it is in existence as such, whether it be subsequently separated as pure or impure spirit, or immediately, or at any subsequent time, transferred into any other substance, either in the process of original production or by any subsequent process.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add to that section what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section three the following:

But this act shall not apply to the manufacture of vinegar where the wash is formed by adding alcoholic vapor to the vinegar ferment without the production of distilled spirits in any form by means of any process of condensation of alcoholic vapor into liquid form, before the union of such vapor with the vinegar ferment. And every person manufacturing or intending to manufacture vinegar, by any process, for sale shall furnish to the assessor of the proper district a plan and description of his premises used or intended to be used for such manufacture as required of distillers by this act; which plan and description shall be kept in the manner therein required; and such premises and every part thereof shall at all times be open to the inspection and examination of internal revenue officers as provided for in cases of distilleries. And the presence of any worm condensing room, or other apparatus for the condensation of alcoholic vapor into distilled spirits shall be evidence that such business is being carried on in violation of this act; and the manufacturer, and all materials in and about said premises, and the lot or tract of land on which the same is situated shall be forfeited to the United States; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall, on conviction, be fined not less $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the effect of the amendment I have proposed. Gentlemen will see that by this section three we describe alcoholic spirit to be that spirit generated and eliminated from the mash, wort, or wash of the grain. Therefore, if that section stands as it now is, it will be impossible for any person to manufacture vinegar unless he manufactures it from distilled spirits that have paid the tax. Under existing law the internal revenue officers have decided that vinegar cannot be made except from tax-paid spirit; while nearly every court in the United States that has spoken upon the subject has decided that vinegar may be manufactured from a certain class of spirits, or from wash or wort, without the payment of a tax upon distilled spirits. A species of low wine is made from which vinegar is made, and wherever the question has been raised the courts have decided that under the existing law that can lawfully be done.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no time for questions. I wish to explain this section. It is a very important one, and I want gentlemen to understand it.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. It was with that view that I proposed to ask a question.

Mr. ALLISON. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has decided that vinegar manufacturers cannot work under existing law, without they pay the tax on distilled spirits. Now, the effect of that is that to-day in Wisconsin and in Illinois, where the courts have decided in favor of these vinegar manufacturers, they are at work everywhere; while in the State of Iowa, where this question has not come before the courts, honest men engaged in the manufacture of vinegar are obliged to stop with large amounts of capital tied up. Now, I want this House to decide distinctly, by an unequivocal provision of law, that vinegar either can or cannot be manufactured from wash or wort or grain. I care very little personally which rule is adopted. I want no evasion, so that men in one State should have the monopoly of the manufacture of vinegar, while in other States, those who have invested a large amount of capital in the business, cannot use it in the manufacture of this very necessary article. I think the provision I have sent up is very carefully guarded, so that in no possible case can any fraud be committed upon the revenue, or if there be any chance, let it be amended so that no fraud can be committed.

Now, if this amendment is not adopted, I will propose another amendment to attach a provision to this section which shall provide that under no circumstances shall vinegar be manufactured from grain or any other preparation of grain; so there shall be no uncertainty about the matter, but all shall be treated alike. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PRICE. I think the policy of very questionable expediency of opening the door to the free manufacture of vinegar. I am of the opinion, from information received from parties who have seen the operations of this system, that while the inspector is there they will make vinegar; when the inspector has gone away they will make whisky. For that reason I am opposed to opening this door.

The same necessity will not exist under this law as did under the old law. I know that it is claimed that they could not afford to buy whisky that has honestly paid the tax in order to make vinegar of it. I have no doubt that is so. But if we reduce the tax to fifty cents per gallon, one fourth of what it was before, they can afford to buy whisky to make vinegar of, if they desire to do so. For those two reasons I am opposed to that section or any other section or proviso which looks in that direction. I do not propose to open any door or window by which these men will be able to steal from the revenues of the country any of the tax which legitimately and properly belongs to it. I hope, therefore, that neither the amendment of my colleague [Mr. ALLISON] nor anything of a similar character will prevail.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last sentence of the proposed new section. I desire simply to say that here is a distinct issue made. I agree with my colleague on the committee—for this is not an amendment of the committee, but his own proposition—as to the importance of having the law settled. The bill proposes to settle it by not permitting these distillers of whisky-vinegar to escape. The amendment now offered is a direct contradiction of the matter contained in the third section, and if adopted will be equivalent to a repeal of that section.

Now, what is the mode of proceeding in the manufacture of vinegar, which is sought by this amendment to be protected? A man sets up his distillery to convert fermented mash into vapor. When it reaches a certain point of disengaged alcoholic spirit in the shape of vapor it is proposed to transfer it to a wash composed of a little old vinegar, a little yeast, and a great deal of rain-water, converting it by means of this alcohol, amounting to about five per cent. of proof whisky, into vinegar. If the gentleman's amendment prevails the whole provision of the third section is defeated. Whether the amendment or the proposition of the committee prevails, the law in either case will be settled, and the difficulty to which the gentleman has adverted will be remedied. If the provision of the bill be sustained the law will be settled as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has settled it by his construction. If the amendment should prevail the law will be settled as the courts have technically settled it in some of the States.

Now, what equity is there in allowing vinegar-makers this advantage? The whole process, to simplify it, is this: you have at one end of the line your corn, at the other end whisky. As you are converting your corn or your mash into whisky, and first make it into vapor, the gentleman proposes that you shall stop there and conduct that vapor into a wash, thus converting the wash into vinegar. What would be the consequence of permitting distilleries to be set up to carry on this business? Why, sir, they would continue to practice all over the country, as they have practiced heretofore, their frauds, by having condensing apparatus concealed and converting the spirits from vapor into whisky. The gentleman seeks to guard against this. He first opens the door to the mischief and then seeks to shut out the mischief. Suppose he could succeed in shutting out the mischief after he had once opened the door, what then? Is there any equity in allowing this advantage to the vinegar-maker? The vinegar-maker can buy whisky, tax paid, and dilute it, bringing it to a point of dilution from which he may convert it into vinegar.

But it is proposed to begin at the other end and manufacture it as by the process of making whisky up to a certain point, there stopping and converting it into vinegar. We would thus let the vinegar manufacturer have an advantage over all other manufacturers. Everybody knows that a very large proportion of all the alcoholic spirit manufactured is used in the arts—used, for instance, in the manufacture of a silk hat, used in burnishing a pencil or the handle of a pen-holder—used in ten thousand different modes. But it is proposed to give to the vinegar manufacturer an advantage over all others. Other manufacturers are compelled to obtain the whisky tax paid, and then redistill or dilute it, as the case may be, to use it for their purposes; but the vinegar manufacturer is to be permitted to carry on the manufacture to a certain point toward whisky, and there to stop, paying no tax, but using the product thus obtained, thereby enjoying a benefit not enjoyed by any other manufacturers.

Now, it is not much under the law, as you propose to fix the tax at fifty cents. The twentieth part of fifty cents will cover the spirit intended for the manufacture of vinegar, and that will be one guard upon the vinegar manufacture. We propose spirit shall be regarded as such the moment it is disengaged by the powers of distillation, and at that moment the tax shall attach. We propose to get rid of the subterfuges now resorted to; that is, the catching it at some particular time and manufacturing it without paying a tax. The question is distinctly drawn.

The amendment of my friend from Iowa is a repeal of the third section, and he might as well put it in that form. The great virtue is in the strict definition. We escape in that way all possibility of the whisky-escaping tax.

The CHAIRMAN. (Mr. CULLOM in the chair.) The hour of half past four having arrived the tax bill will be laid aside, and the gentleman from Maine is entitled to the floor. Such was the order of the House before going into committee.

FINANCE.

Mr. BLAINE. The fact that the bonds of the United States are exempt from State and municipal taxation has created a wide-spread discontent among the people, and the belief prevails quite generally that if this exemption could be removed the local burdens of the taxpayer would be immediately and essentially lightened. Many persons assert this belief from a spirit of mischievous demagogism, and many do so from sincere and conscientious conviction. To the latter class I would beg to submit some facts and suggestions which may greatly modify, if not entirely change their conclusions.

The total gold-bearing debt of the United States, the conversion of seven-thirties completed, amounts to a little more than twenty-one hundred million dollars; of this sum total something over two hundred million dollars draw but five per cent. interest, a rate not sufficiently high to provoke hostility or suggest the necessity of taxation. Indeed it may be safely said that there never has been any popular dissatisfaction with regard to the non-taxation of the five per cents., it being agreed by common consent that such a rate of interest was not unreasonable on a loan negotiated at such a time.

The agitation may, therefore, be regarded as substantially confined to the six per cent. gold-bearing bonds, which amount to the large aggregate of nineteen hundred million dollars. Many people honestly, but thoughtlessly, believe that if this class of bonds could be taxed by local authority the whole vast volume represented by them would at once be added to the lists of the assessor. It is my purpose to show very briefly that this conclusion is totally unfounded and erroneous, and that if the right of local taxation existed in its fullest and amplest extent, but a minor fraction of the total amount of bonds could by any possibility be subjected to any more local tax than they already pay.

The entire amount of these bonds, as I have stated, is nineteen hundred million dollars; and of this total, by the best and most careful estimates attainable, at least six hundred and fifty million are now held in Europe. This amount could not, therefore, be reached by any system of local taxation, however extended, thorough, and searching. Deducting the amount thus held abroad we find the amount held at home is reduced to twelve hundred and fifty million dollars.

But of this twelve hundred and fifty millions more than one third, or to speak with accuracy, about four hundred and twenty-five millions, are held by the national banks, and no form of property in the whole United States pays so large a tax, both local and general, as these banks. The stock, the depositories, and the deposits which these four hundred and twenty-five million of bonds represent pay full local tax at the highest rate, beside a national tax averaging about two and a half per cent. Were the power of local taxation made specific and absolute on these bonds, they could not yield a dollar more than is now realized in that direction. It thus follows that the twelve hundred and fifty million of bonds in this country, presumptively escaping local taxation, must be reduced by the amount represented by the banks, and hence we find the aggregate falls to eight hundred and twenty-five millions.

The reduction, however, goes still further, for it must be remembered that the savings-banks of this country have invested their deposits in these bonds to the amount of one hundred and seventy-five millions. In some States by local law the deposits of savings-banks are exempt from taxation, as an incentive to thrift and economy. In other States, where these deposits are taxed, as in Connecticut, it has been held by judicial decision that the fact of their investment in United States bonds does not exempt them from taxation. Hence these one hundred and seventy-five millions, thus invested in savings-bank deposits, are either locally taxable, or, if exempt, it is by State law and not by virtue of the general exemption of the bonds. It thus follows that the eight hundred and twenty-five millions must be further reduced by this sum of one hundred and seventy-five millions, leaving but six hundred and fifty millions not already embraced within the scope of local taxation.

But there is a still further reduction of thirty millions held by the Life insurance companies and held on precisely the same terms as the deposits of savings-banks—that is, either taxed locally, or, if exempt, deriving the exemption from the local law. The surplus earnings and reserves of these life insurance companies invested to the extent of thirty millions in United States bonds are just as open to taxation when invested in that form as though they were in State or railroad securities. Deducting these thirty millions we find the untaxed bonds reduced to six hundred and twenty millions.

And still there is another large reduction; for the fire and marine insurance companies and the annuity and trust companies and other corporations which cannot readily be classed, hold in the aggregate over one hundred and twenty-five millions of bonds, and these are held on precisely the same basis as those held by the savings-bank and the life insurance companies. These numerous corporations have their capital stock, their reserves and their surplus earnings invested in Government bonds to the extent named, and they are in this form just as open to taxation and are actually taxed just as much as though they were invested in any other form of security. Making the deduction of this one hundred and twenty-five millions we find remaining but four hundred and ninety-five millions of the six per cent. gold-bearing bonds that are not already practically subjected to local taxation. Allowing for the possibility that one hundred millions of the five per cents are held instead of six per cents in all the channels of investment I have named, and it follows that at the outside figure there are to-day in the whole country less than six hundred millions of Government sixes, not fully subjected to the power of local taxation. And these six hundred millions are rapidly growing less as the various corporate institutions I have named continue to invest their funds more and more in the bonds. These institutions desire a security that is of steady value, not liable to great fluctuation, and at all times convertible into money; and hence they seek Government bonds in preference to any other form of investment. The high premium on the bonds induces individuals to part with them, and hence they are readily transferred to corporate ownership, where they become in effect at once liable to local taxation and are no longer obnoxious to the charge of evading or escaping their just share of municipal burden. In the hands of individuals the bonds may be concealed, but in the possession of corporations concealment is necessarily impossible.

If these statistical statements needed any verification it would be supplied by an examination of the income returns recently made under oath and published in all the large cities of the country, disclosing the fact that the amount of bonds held by the wealthy men of the country has been continually growing less, just as they have been absorbed by foreign purchase and by corporate investment. The correctness of these income returns in reference to the investment in bonds will be accepted even by the incredulous and the uncharitable when it is remembered that the interest of those making them was to exaggerate rather than depreciate the respective amounts held by them. Instead, then, of nineteen hundred millions of these bonds running free of taxation it is clear that less than six hundred millions are open to that charge—less than one third of the whole amount. The remainder, largely more than two thirds of the whole, are either held abroad, where no local taxation can reach them, or they are held at home in such form as subjects them to local taxation.

And now let us suppose that we were in possession of the full power to tax by local authority these six hundred millions of bonds presumptively owned by individuals! Would we realize anything from it? On its face the prospect might be fair and inviting, but in practice it would assuredly prove delusive and deceptive. The trouble would be that the holders of the bonds could not be found. No form of property is so easily concealed, none so readily transferred back and forth, none so difficult to trace to actual ownership. We have hundreds of millions of State bonds, city bonds, and railroad securities in this country, and yet every one knows that it is only an infinitesimal proportion of this vast investment that is ever represented on the books of assessors and tax collectors. As a pertinent illustration, I might cite the case of the bonds of my own State, of which there are over five millions in existence to-day, largely held as a favorite investment by the citizens of Maine. Of this whole sum I am safe in saying that scarcely a dollar is found on the lists of any assessor in the State. And yet the facility for concealing ownership in national bonds is far greater than in any other form of security, and the proportion in the hands of individuals that would escape the assessment of local taxes may be inferred with reasonable certainty from the analogies I have suggested, and which are familiar to all who have given the least attention to the subject. Indeed, I venture to assert with confidence that if the power of local taxation of these bonds were fully accorded to-day, the tax lists of our cities and towns would not be increased on an average one per cent. Many of those who to-day may be ambitious of parading their bonds when protected by what is deemed an offensive exemption would suddenly have none when the power of taxation applied to them. Indeed, the utter failure to realize anything from this source, if the power to test it were granted, would in the end create more dissatisfaction than that exemption, which, in theory, is offensive, but in practice is absolutely of no consequence whatever.

But it will be asked, "Why don't you tax the bonds by national authority?" Granted it will be urged that the power of local taxation would be nugatory and valueless, "that affords all the stronger reason for taxing the bonds by direct congressional enactment." In answer to this I have only to say that a tax levied directly upon the coupon is simply an abatement of interest, and that result can be reached in a better and more satisfactory and more honorable way. The determination manifested by this Congress and by the great Republican convention at Chicago to maintain the national faith has already worked a large appreciation in the value of the bonds, and with the strengthening of our credit, which results from an honest and high-toned policy, we will speedily be able to fund our debt on a lower scale of interest, running down to five, four and a half, and ultimately to four per cent. per annum. Should we proceed, however, in violation of good faith and of the uniform practice of civilized nations, to hold back part of the stipulated interest instead of effecting an honorable exchange of bonds to the mutual advantage of the Government and the public creditor, we should only punish ourselves, produce calamitous results in the business world, and permanently injure our national fame.

To withhold one per cent. of the interest under the plea of a national tax this year might be followed by withholding two per cent. next year and three per cent. the year ensuing. To enter upon such a policy would produce alarm at home and wide-spread distrust abroad, for every man holding a bond would have to count his rate of interest not on what was stipulated in the contract, but on what might be the will and caprice of Congress in its annual withholding of a portion of the interest under the pretense of a tax. Under such a policy our bonds would be returned upon us from Europe with panic-like rapidity, and the drain upon our specie resources would produce an immediate and disastrous crisis in monetary circles. If even one half our bonds held in Europe were suddenly sent home it would drain us of two hundred and fifty millions of specie, and the financial distress throughout the length and breadth of the land would be beyond the power of calculation or imagination. And yet that is the precise result involved if we should follow the policy advocated by those who urge us to tax the coupon and withhold one or two per cent. of the interest. Let us reject such counsels, and adhere to the steady, straightforward course dictated alike by good policy and good faith. And let us never forget that in the language of the Chicago platform, "the best policy to diminish our burden of debt is to so improve our credit that capitalists will seek to loan us money at lower rates of interest than we now pay, and must continue to pay, so long as repudiation, either partial or total, open or covert, is threatened or suspected."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate bill No. 206, to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central-Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon."

It further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 538) in addition to an act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators to Congress, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of five o'clock having arrived the committee will take a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At half past seven o'clock p. m. the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session, Mr. BLAINE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN stated the pending question was the amendment to the amendment to the third section of the internal tax bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question then recurred on the following amendment moved by Mr. ALLISON:

Add to section three the following:

But this act shall not apply to the manufacture of vinegar where the wash is formed by adding alcoholic vapor to the vinegar ferment without the production of distilled spirits in any form by means of any process of condensation of alcoholic vapor into liquid form, before the union of such vapor with the vinegar ferment. And every person manufacturing or intending to manufacture vinegar, by any process, for sale shall furnish to the assessor of the proper district a plan and description of his premises used or intended to be used for such manufacture as required of distillers by this act; which plan and description shall be kept in the manner therein required; and such premises and every part thereof shall at all times be open to the inspection and examination of internal revenue officers as provided for in cases of distilleries. And the presence of any worm condensing room, or other apparatus for the condensation of alcoholic vapor into distilled spirits, shall be evidence that such business is being carried on in violation of this act; and the manufacturer, and all materials in and about said premises, and the lot or tract of land on which the same is situated, shall be forfeited to the United States; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment:

And no mash, wort, or wash, fit for distillation or the production of spirits or alcohol, shall be made or fermented in any building or on any premises other than a distillery duly authorized according to law; and no mash, wort, or wash so made and fermented shall be sold or removed from any distillery before being distilled, and no person other than an authorized distiller shall by distillation, or by any other process, separate the alcoholic spirits from any fermented mash, wort, or wash, and no person shall use spirits or alcohol, or any vapor of alcoholic spirits, in manufacturing vinegar or any other article, or in any process of manufacture whatever, unless the spirits or alcohol so used shall have been produced in an authorized distillery and the tax thereon paid, or shall have been lawfully imported into the United States and the duties thereon paid. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be fined for every offense not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than two years.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that any provision of that section is required. I only want to make it certain so every manufacturer can understand what he is about and what he is doing. I think as the section stands it is very difficult for ordinary persons to understand it. I know but three or four gentlemen who thoroughly comprehend it as it now stands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That every person having in his possession or custody, or under his control, any still or distilling apparatus set up, shall register the same with the assistant assessor of the division in which said still or distilling apparatus shall be, by filing with him or duplicate statements, in writing, subscribed by such person, setting forth the particular place where such still or distilling apparatus is set up, the kind of still and its cubic contents, the owner thereof, his place of residence, and the purpose for which said still or distilling apparatus has been or is intended to be used; one of which statements shall be retained and preserved by the assistant assessor, and the other transmitted to the assessor of the district. Stills and distilling apparatus now set up shall be so registered within sixty days from the time this act takes effect, and those hereafter set up shall be so registered immediately upon their being set up. Any still or distilling apparatus not so registered, together with all personal property in the possession or custody or under the control of such person and found in the building, or in any yard or inclosure connected with the building in which the same shall be set up, shall be forfeited. And any person having in his possession or custody, or under his control, any still or distilling apparatus set up which is not so registered, shall pay a penalty of $500, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned for not less than one month nor more than two years.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to ask how the amendment to the third section was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated very distinctly that if there was no objection it would be considered as adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK. It was so quickly disposed of that—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was under the impression that it came from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to know the gentleman's objection to it.

Mr. SCHENCK. My objection is that it is entirely unnecessary. However, let it go now, and take the vote upon it again hereafter.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That every person engaged in, or intending to be engaged in, the business of a distiller or rectifier, shall give notice in writing, subscribed by him, to the assessor of the district within which such business is to be carried on, stating his name and place of residence, and if a company or firm the name and place of residence of each member thereof, the place where said business is to be carried on, and whether of distilling or rectifying. And if such business be carried on in a city, the residence and place of business shall be indicated by the name of the street and number of the building. In case of a distiller the notice shall also state the kind of stills, and the cubic contents thereof, the number and kind of boilers, the number of mash-tubs and fermenting-tubs, and the cubic contents of each tub, the number of receiving cisterns, and the cubic contents of each cistern, together with a particular description of the lot or tract of land on which the distillery is situated, with the size and description of the buildings thereon, and of what material constructed. The notice shall also state the number of hours in which the distiller will ferment each tub of mash or beer, the estimated quantity of distilled spirits which the apparatus is capable of distilling every twenty-four hours, and the names and residence of every person interested or to be interested in the business, and that said distillery and the premises connected therewith are not within six hundred feet of any premises authorized to be used for rectifying or refining distilled spirits by any process. In case of a rectifier, the notice shall state the precise location of the premises where such business is to be carried on, the name and residence of every person interested or to be interested in the business, by what process the applicant intends to rectify, purify, or refine distilled spirits, the kind and cubic contents of any still used or to be used for such purpose, and the estimated quantity of spirits which can be rectified, purified, or refined every twenty-four hours in such establishment, and that said rectifying establishment is not within six hundred feet of the premises of any distillery registered for the distillation of spirits. In case of any change in the location, form, capacity, ownership, agency, superintendency, or in the persons interested in the business of such distillery or rectifying establishment, or in the time of fermenting the mash or beer, notice thereof in writing shall be given to the said assessor or to the assistant assessor of the division within twenty-four hours of said change. And any assistant assessor receiving such notice shall immediately transmit the same to the assessor of the district. Every notice required by this section shall be in such form and shall contain such additional particulars as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may from time to time prescribe. Any person failing or refusing to give such notice shall pay a penalty of $1,000, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $2,000, and any person giving a false or fraudulent notice shall, on conviction, in addition to such penalty or fine, be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

Mr. BECK. I move to strike out the word "will," in line twenty, and insert in lieu of it the words "usually takes to;" so that it will read, "the number of hours in which the distiller usually takes to ferment each tub of mash or beer." It is impossible to tell how long it will take to ferment. I know it varies in my district from three days and a half to five days, depending upon the weather and other causes. You should not punish a man who cannot help himself. He should not be held responsible for the failure to ferment within the time, when the weather or a thousand other contingencies may prevent the fermentation.

Mr. SCHENCK. When I first read the form of expression contained in other legislation it struck me somewhat in the same way. We called a council of distillers on the subject and found that this was just the language they used. They have twenty-four-hour, forty-eight-hour, and seventy-two-hour beer. Although there may be a little difference occasioned by the temperature, yet they classify the beer in that way, and every distiller will tell in regard to a particular kind of beer what time he wants for his mode of distillation, so that the bill is in fact drawn in conformity with the notions of the distillers themselves. The amendment would make it very vague even as to the rules of the distillers themselves.

Mr. BECK. They should not be punished for failing to do what is inevitable. The time varies in extreme cold or in extreme warm weather. A thunder-storm will sometimes so affect it that it will not ferment in a very long time. If the committee, however, think that the word "will" leaves margin enough, I will not press the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it does.

Mr. SCHENCK. Permit me to say that our object is to charge upon the capacity among other things, and if we leave an uncertainty about this we run the risk of not getting the capacity taxed. The distillers themselves have their rule on the subject, and whatever time it takes to ferment they designate their beer accordingly, as twenty-four, forty-eight, or seventy-two hour beer.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw the amendment. I only desired to call attention to the subject.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That every distiller shall, on filing his notice of intention to continue or commence business with the assessor before proceeding with such business, make and execute a bond in form prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with at least two sureties, to be approved by the assessor of the district. The penal sum of said bond shall be not less than double the amount of tax on the spirits that can be distilled in his distillery during a period of fifteen days; but, in no case shall such bond be for a less sum than $10,000. The condition of the bond shall be that the principal shall faithfully comply with all the provisions of this act in relation to the duties and business of distillers, and will pay all penalties incurred or fines imposed on him for a violation of any of the said provisions; that he will not suffer the lot or tract of land on which the distillery stands, or any part thereof, or any of the distilling apparatus, to be incumbered by mortgage, judgment, or other lien during the time in which he shall carry on said business. The assessor may refuse to approve said bond when, in his judgment, the situation of the distillery is such as would enable the distiller to defraud the United States; and in case of such refusal, the distiller may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final. A new bond shall be required in case of the death, insolvency, or removal of either of the sureties, and may be required in any other contingency, at the discretion of the assessor or Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Any person failing or refusing to give the bond herebefore required, or giving any false, forged, or fraudulent bond, shall forfeit the distillery, distilling apparatus, and all real estate and premises connected therewith, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $500, nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months, nor more than two years.

Mr. STEWART. I move to strike out all after the word "business," in line nineteen, down to and including the word "final," in line twenty-four, as follows:

The assessor may refuse to approve said bond when, in his judgment, the situation of the distillery is such as would enable the distiller to defraud the United States; and in case of such refusal, the distiller may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final.

I offer the amendment for the purpose of learning from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means what this paragraph refers to. The gentleman has already provided that no distillery shall be situated within six hundred feet of a rectifying establishment. Now, the construction may be given to this, it may be implied, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has power to allow a distillery to be within six hundred feet of a rectifying establishment. I ask for information, and I hope the chairman will give it to me.

Mr. SCHENCK. That clause is copied from the existing law upon the subject, and is intended, I suppose, for greater security; so that even if it should be in the vicinity of some other establishment, or so situated as to afford some peculiar opportunities, in the opinion of the assessor, of fraud, he shall compel the party to take his case to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for him to give judgment upon it before he shall be permitted to establish a distillery. It will work no hardship, because it is precedent to the establishment of the distillery.

Mr. STEWART. I only supposed it might be implied that it is within the province of the Commissioner to say that a distillery may be within six hundred feet of a rectifying establishment.

Mr. SCHENCK. No; the provision is absolute about that, and cannot be controlled by the judgment of the Commissioner. This is a mere provision for greater security, so that if there should be any contingency which seemed to look to fraudulent arrangements the assessor might require the judgment of the Commissioner upon it before the distillery should be established. The law is positive that a distillery shall not be within six hundred feet of a rectifying establishment.

Mr. STEWART. I did not know but that the power might be implied from the language used. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That no bond of a distiller shall be approved unless he is the owner in fee, unincumbered by any mortgage, judgment, or other lien, of the lot or tract of land on which the distillery is situated, or unless he files with the assessor, in connection with his notice, the written consent of the owner of the fee, and of any mortgage, judgment creditor, or other person having a lien thereon, duly acknowledged, that the premises may be used for the purpose of distilling spirits, subject to the provisions of this act, and expressly stipulating that the lien of the United States for taxes and penalties shall have priority of such mortgage, judgment, or other incumbrance, and that in case of the forfeiture of the distillery premises, or any part thereof, the title of the same shall vest in the United States discharged from any such mortgage, judgment, or other incumbrance. In any case where the owner of a distillery, or distilling apparatus, erected prior to the passage of this act, has an estate for a term of years only, in the lot or tract of land on which the distillery is situated, the lease or other evidence of title to which shall have been duly recorded prior to the passage of this act, the value of such lot or tract of land, together with the building and distilling apparatus, shall be appraised in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the assessor is hereby authorized to accept, in lieu of the said written consent of the owner of the fee, the bond of said distiller with not less than two sureties, who shall be residents of the collection district or county, or an adjoining county in the same State in which the distillery is situated, and shall be the owners of unincumbered real estate in said district or county, or adjoining county, equal to such appraised value. The penal sum of said bond shall be equal to the appraised value of said lot or tract of land, together with the buildings and distilling apparatus, and conditioned that in case the distillery, distilling apparatus, or any part thereof, shall, by final judgment, be forfeited for the violation of any of the provisions of this act, the obligors will pay the amount stated in said bond. Said bond shall be in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That every distiller, and every person intending to engage in the business of a distiller, shall, previous to the approval of his bond, cause to be made, under the direction of the assessor of the district, an accurate plan and description, in triplicate, of the distillery and distilling apparatus, distinctly showing the location of every still, boiler, doubler, worm-tub, and receiving cistern, the course and construction of all fixed pipes used or to be used in the distillery, and of every branch thereof, and of every cock or joint thereof, and of every valve therein, together with every place, vessel, tub, or utensil from and to which any such pipe shall lead, or with which it communicates. Such plan and description shall also show the number and location and cubic contents of every still, mash-tub, and fermenting-tub, together with the cubic contents of every receiving cistern, and the color of each fixed pipe, as required in this act. One copy of said plan and description shall be kept displayed in some conspicuous place in the distillery; two copies shall be furnished to the assessor of the district, one of which shall be kept by him and the other transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The accuracy of every such plan and description shall be verified by the assessor, the draughtsman, and the distiller; and no alteration shall be made in such distillery without the consent, in writing, of the assessor, which alteration shall be shown on the original or by a supplemental plan and description, and a reference thereto noted on the original, as the assessor may direct; and any supplemental plan and description shall be executed and preserved in the same manner as the original.

During the reading of the eighth section.

Mr. INGERSOLL said: I desire to make the point of order that when the Clerk has finished reading one section it is not proper for him to commence the reading of the next section without making any pause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entirely out of order. It is not in order to interrupt the reading.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the committee to the fact that every section begins with the distinct words "And be it further enacted," the reading of which is a proclamation on the part of the Clerk that a new section has been reached. The Chair cannot instruct the Clerk to wait at the close of each section for gentlemen to offer amendments. It is not usual in committee.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I make the point of order that the Clerk ought to stop at the end of each section instead of reading right along in a monotonous tone. That is not reading the bill by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk has read the bill, as is usual with the clerks of the House, very distinctly, and each section is prefaced with the words "And be it further enacted," which is notice to gentlemen that a new section has been reached. Does the gentleman appeal?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I do; and I want to say to the Committee of Ways and Means—

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order. Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will the Chair state what the question of order is on which the appeal is taken?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is really at a loss to know what the point of order is, although he has consented to entertain the appeal. The point of order seems to be that the Clerk should adopt a new mode of reading in the House, which is rather an amendment to the rules than a point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to inquire whether this is a parliamentary point at all?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I appeal from that decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. An appeal being taken from the decision of the Chair, the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 4; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call for tellers.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It seems to me there is no such thing as a point of order pending.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a point of order. The Chair is not authorized to appoint tellers without they have been called for by the requisite number—one fifth of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is authorized to appoint tellers when no quorum votes. But the Chair is of opinion that the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] is no point of order at all.

Mr. INGERSOLL. That is a difference of opinion between the Chair and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decline to entertain any further proceedings under the point of order.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to offer an amendment to section six of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That section having been passed, it requires unanimous consent to turn back to it for the purpose of amending it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, I ask unanimous consent.

Objection was made by several members.

Mr. BECK. Does it require unanimous consent to offer any amendment to section six at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. BECK. I could state my reasons why I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is objected to, and is not in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to offer an amendment to section seven of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That requires unanimous consent, the section having been passed.

Objection was made by several members.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then I insist upon the count being made and declared upon the appeal of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has declined to entertain any further proceedings under that point of order or appeal.

Mr. CHANLER. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CHANLER. Owing to the confusion in the Hall at the time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] was on the floor, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] who had arisen for the purpose of offering an amendment, was cut off by a misunderstanding on that account.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted to the Committee of the Whole whether, under the circumstances, the gentleman from Kentucky should be allowed to offer his amendment.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to make a statement in reference to this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. There being objection to the amendment, there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. CHANLER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. What decision of the Chair does the gentleman appeal from?

Mr. CHANLER. The decision in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked unanimous consent for the gentleman from Kentucky to offer his amendment, and objection was made. The Chair has made no decision from which an appeal can be taken.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. I hope gentlemen will consent to go back to the sixth section for the purpose of amendment. There is no disposition on the part of any one to break up the committee; but we want to offer some amendments in good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again ask if unanimous consent will be given to allow the gentleman from Kentucky to move an amendment to section six of this bill.

Objection was again made by several members.

Mr. CHANLER. I move that the committee now rise.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 14, noes 47; no quorum voting.

Mr. CHANLER. I call for tellers.

Mr. BROOMALL. Does it require a quorum to decide the question upon the motion that the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not; but the discovery of the absence of a quorum arrests the transaction of business.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the roll be called.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first appoint tellers upon the motion that the committee now rise.

Mr. CHANLER and Mr. BROOMALL were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 13, noes 55.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will, under the rule, direct the Clerk to call the roll.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Boyer, Broomfield, Brooks, Buckland, Burr, Butler, Cuke, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Delano, Dodge, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hill, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Hunter, Johnson, Jones, Judd, Kelley, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, Ladin, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McKee, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Nicholson, Nunn, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Polaud, Polsley, Randall, Ross, Sawyer, Selye, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, had found itself without a quorum; that he had directed the roll to be called, and reported the absentees to the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move a call of the House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Has not a quorum answered?

The SPEAKER. A quorum has not answered.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that by the time the absentees shall have been called a quorum will be present.

The motion of Mr. SCHENCK was agreed to.

The SPEAKER directed the roll to be called, when the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Boyer, Broomfield, Brooks, Burr, Butler, Cuke, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Dodge, Donnelly, Eckley, Eldridge, Ferry, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Halsey, Hill, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Hunter, Johnson, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, Ladin, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Loughridge, Mallory, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McKee, Morrell, Morrissey, Newcomb, Nunn, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Poland, Randall, Ross, Selye, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taffe, Thomas, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward.

Mr. PRUYN. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Several MEMBERS. There is no quorum present.

Mr. SCHENCK. I should like to know, if we dispense with further proceedings under the call, what the temper of the members will be as to going on with the bill without calling for a division and again breaking up the committee. If a division is to be insisted upon when gentlemen have been voted down by those who are here we might as well, perhaps, go through with this call. I should be glad to have further proceedings under the call dispensed with if we could get along with our business in committee; but it seems to be difficult to get gentlemen to stay here and consent to be bound by the vote of a majority of the committee in attendance.

Mr. INGERSOLL. There will be no objection if consent be given to go back to section six. The proposition which I desire to submit will not occupy five minutes.

Mr. MULLINS. I cannot consent to that. The motion of Mr. PRUYN was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The doors will now be closed, and the Clerk will call the names of absentees that excuses may be presented.

Mr. MUNGEN. Is it in order to move that the House now adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MUNGEN. I make that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the names of absentees.

GEORGE M. ADAMS.

Mr. KNOTT. My colleague, Mr. ADAMS, is detained at his home by sickness.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection Mr. ADAMS will be excused.

There was no objection.

SAMUEL M. ARNELL. No excuse offered.

DELOS R. ASHLEY. No excuse offered.

JAMES M. ASHLEY.
Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire to state that Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, has been called home by the serious illness of a child.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ASHLEY has leave of absence, and his name will be omitted from the warrant which may be issued for absentees.

SAMUEL B. AXTELL. No excuse offered.
ALEXANDER H. BAILEY. No excuse offered.
JOHN D. BALDWIN. No excuse offered.
NATHANIEL P. BANKS. No excuse offered.
DEMAS BARNES. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM H. BARNUM. No excuse offered.
FERNANDO C. BEAMAN.

Mr. BLAIR. My colleague, Mr. BEAMAN, is sick and not able to be here.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, Mr. BEAMAN will be excused.

There was no objection.

JOHN F. BENJAMIN. No excuse offered.
JACOB BENTON. No excuse offered.
JOHN A. BINGHAM. No excuse offered.
BENJAMIN M. BOYER. No excuse offered.
HENRY P. H. BROMWELL. No excuse offered.
JAMES BROOKS. No excuse offered.
BENJAMIN F. BUTLER. No excuse offered.
ALBERT J. BURR.

Mr. RAUM. Mr. BURR is absent by leave of the House.

The SPEAKER. That is correct, and his name will be excluded from the warrant.

HENRY L. CAKE. No excuse offered.
Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, Mr. BROMWELL had leave of absence for ten days. Whether that leave has expired or not I do not know.

The SPEAKER. He will be regarded as having leave of absence.

JOHN C. CHURCHILL.
Mr. POMEROY. Mr. CHURCHILL has leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. His name will be excluded from the warrant.

READER W. CLARKE.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio, is absent on leave.

SIDNEY CLARKE. No excuse offered.
AMASA COBB. No excuse offered.
BURTON C. COOK.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. COOK is in ill health, and he requested me to ask the House to grant him leave of absence. I forgot it yesterday, and ask it now.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be granted now.
Mr. JUDD. I move that he be excused.
The motion was agreed to.

JOHN COVODE. No excuse offered.
SHELBY M. CULLOM. No excuse offered.
HENRY L. DAWES. No excuse offered.
IGNATIUS DONNELLY. No excuse offered.
GRENVILLE M. DODGE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has indefinite leave of absence.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Mr. COVODE is at the door, and I move that he be allowed to come in.

The SPEAKER. The doors are closed by order of the House, and he cannot be admitted at this time.

EPHRAIM R. ECKLEY. No excuse offered.
CHARLES A. ELDRIDGE. No excuse offered.
THOMAS W. FERRY. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM C. FIELDS. No excuse offered.
DARWIN A. FINNEY. No excuse offered.
JOHN FOX. No excuse offered.
ADAM J. GLOSSBRENNER.

Mr. GETZ. Mr. GLOSSBRENNER is absent by leave of the House.

The SPEAKER. His name will not be included in the warrant.

JOSEPH J. GRAVELY. No excuse offered.
JOHN A. GRISWOLD. No excuse offered.
GEORGE A. HALSEY. No excuse offered.
JOHN HILL. No excuse offered.
BENJAMIN F. HOPKINS. No excuse offered.
JULIUS HOTCHKISS. No excuse offered.
ASAHEL W. HUBBARD. No excuse offered.
RICHARD D. HUBBARD. No excuse offered.
CALVIN T. HULBURD. No excuse offered.
JAMES M. HUMPEREY. No excuse offered.

MORTON C. HUNTER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. Mr. HUNTER is absent by leave of the House.

JAMES A. JOHNSON. No excuse offered.
THOMAS L. JONES. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM D. KELLEY.

Mr. MERCUR. Mr. KELLEY was obliged to leave the House by illness, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. KELSEY. No excuse offered.
MICHAEL C. KERR. No excuse offered.
BETHUEL M. KITCHEN.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. Mr. KITCHEN is absent on leave.

The SPEAKER. His name will be excluded from the warrant.

ADDISON H. LAFLIN.

Mr. FERRISS. Mr. LAFLIN is absent on leave.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE.

Mr. BUCKLAND. Mr. LAWRENCE is absent on leave.

WILLIAM S. LINCOLN. No excuse offered.
BENJAMIN F. LOAN. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM LOUGHRIDGE.

Mr. HIGBY. I think Mr. LOUGHRIDGE is absent on leave.

The SPEAKER. He was in the House to-day.

Mr. HIGBY. I will not be positive.
SAMUEL S. MARSHALL.

Mr. VAN TRUMP. Mr. MARSHALL is absent by leave of the House.

JAMES M. MARVIN. No excuse offered.
HIRAM McCULLOUGH.

Mr. ARCHER. He is absent by leave of the House.

SAMUEL MCKEE. No excuse offered.
DANIEL J. MORRELL. No excuse offered.
JOHN MORRISSEY. No excuse offered.

DAVID A. NUNN. No excuse offered.
HALBERT E. PAINE.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. PAINE is absent on account of ill health. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

SIDNEY PERHAM.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. PERHAM is absent by leave of the House.

CHARLES E. PHELPS. No excuse offered.
LUKE P. POLAND. No excuse offered.
SAMUEL J. RANDALL.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. RANDALL is at home in Philadelphia on a matter of very great importance. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

LEWIS W. ROSS. No excuse offered.
LEWIS SELYE. No excuse offered.
JOHN P. C. SHANKS. No excuse offered.

HENRY H. STARKWEATHER.
Mr. TWICHELL. Mr. STARKWEATHER was in the committee this forenoon, but he is quite sick, and said he was unable to be present this evening. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

AARON F. STEVENS. No excuse offered.
THADDEUS STEVENS.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that Mr. STEVENS be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

FREDERICK STONE.

Mr. ARCHER. My colleague, Mr. STONE, has leave of absence until Thursday morning.

JOHN TAFFE. No excuse offered.
FRANCIS THOMAS.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that Mr. THOMAS be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN TRIMBLE.

Mr. MAYNARD. My colleague, Mr. TRIMBLE, informed me on Saturday night that he was required to go home by his affairs, and requested that I would ask leave of absence for him. I am not confident that I have fulfilled the commission he assigned me by asking leave. If he has not leave, it is my fault, and not his own. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY VAN AERNAM.

Mr. POMEROY. I think Mr. VAN AERNAM has leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.
DANIEL M. VAN AUKEN. No excuse offered.
BURT VAN HORN.

The SPEAKER. Mr. VAN HORN is absent on leave.

ROBERT T. VAN HORN.
Mr. ANDERSON. My colleague, Mr. VAN HORN, is sick. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES H. VAN WYCK.
Mr. KETCHAM. My colleague, Mr. VAN WYCK, is absent on account of sickness. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

HAMILTON WARD. No excuse offered.
CADWALADER C. WASHBURN. No excuse offered.

ELIHU B. WASHBURNE.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that Mr. WASHBURNE be excused. He was granted leave of absence from evening sessions some time since on account of the state of his health.

The motion was agreed to.

MARTIN WELKER. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM WILLIAMS. No excuse offered.

STEPHEN F. WILSON.
Mr. MERCUR. I think my colleague, Mr. WILSON, has leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that the gentleman is correct, though it is some time since the leave was granted.

FERNANDO WOOD.
Mr. TABER. My colleague, Mr. WOOD, is absent from the House on account of ill health. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRUYN. I understand that there are members enough in attendance outside the doors to make up a quorum, and I suggest that further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The call of the absentees will be completed in a moment.

FREDERICK E. WOODBRIDGE. No excuse offered.

GEORGE W. WOODWARD. No excuse offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that there are members enough outside the doors to make up a quorum, if admitted.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I move that further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to; and further proceedings in the call were dispensed with, and the doors were reopened.

Mr. SCHENCK. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with; and that the Clerk be directed to make out a full list of the absentees, noting opposite their names those who are absent by leave of the House, or who have been excused, and to publish the same conspicuously in two newspapers of this city other than the Daily Globe.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON and others objected.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, I will withdraw it now. I offered it with a view of drawing the attention of the country to the record, so that it may be known who are here and who are not.

Mr. PRUYN. The Globe publishes all that information, without any such resolution as that.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. COBURN. I rise to a question of privilege. I am recorded in the Journal, and also in the Globe, as voting in the affirmative yesterday on the question of referring the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] upon the subject of funding the public debt. I voted in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected accordingly.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business, under the order of the House, is the consideration of the tax bill in Committee of the Whole.

Accordingly the House, pursuant to order, resumed the consideration in Committee of the Whole (Mr. BLAINE in the chair) of House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to section six of this bill.

Objection was made by several members.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to going back to sections which have been passed, the Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would suggest that the Clerk announce the number of the section when a new section is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The number of the section forms no part of the bill. The Clerk reads very distinctly, and reads at the beginning of every section the enacting words, "And be it further enacted."

Mr. ROBINSON. We will all acknowledge that the Clerk reads very distinctly. But still I would suggest that the Clerk commence the reading of the section by its number.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That immediately after the passage of this act every assessor shall proceed, at the expense of the distiller, with the aid of some competent and skillful person, to be designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to make survey of each distillery registered or intended to be registered for the production of spirits in his district, to estimate and determine its true producing capacity, and in like manner shall estimate and determine the capacity of any such distillery as may hereafter be so registered in said district, a written report of which shall be made in triplicate, signed by the assessor and the person aiding in making the same, one copy of which shall be furnished to the distiller, one retained by the assessor, and the other immediately transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. If the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall at any time be satisfied that such report of the capacity of a distillery is in any respect incorrect or needs revision, he shall direct the assessor to make in like manner another survey of said distillery; the report of said survey shall be executed in triplicate and deposited as hereinbefore provided. And, in like manner, and under like restrictions and provisions, there shall be ascertained, recorded, and reported the capacity of every establishment now existing, or that may be hereafter commenced, for redistilling distilled spirits.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend the first clause of this section by striking out the words "at the expense of the distiller." My reasons for this amendment are twofold; in the first place, I think the Government should pay all these expenses, and my second and chief reason is that I dislike the relation which is likely to be created by the payment of money by a distiller to a public officer. This is a small matter, but for one I prefer that the Government should pay the expenses of this inspection.

Mr. SCHENCK. There should be some provision for the payment of the expense of inspection. I would therefore suggest to the gentleman to modify his amendment so as to strike out the word "distiller" and insert the words "United States."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I accept the suggestion, and modify my amendment accordingly.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to further amend this section by striking out after the words "United States," just inserted, the words "with the aid of some competent and skillful person, to be designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue." I make that proposition because there is no provision made for the person to be called in, unless in some subsequent part of the bill which I have not yet seen; and it would be difficult for the Commissioner to designate some person who is not an officer.

If my amendment should prevail, then the assessor or the assistant assessor, who is the proper person, could make this inspection.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think it very necessary that some skillful person should be employed, even at some expense, so that this service should be correctly performed.

Mr. ROBINSON. If this is not amended in some way there will be infinite confusion.

The amendment of Mr. ROBINSON was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for any assessor to assess a special tax upon any distiller, or for the collector to collect the same, or for any distiller who has heretofore paid a special tax as such to continue the business of distilling, until such distiller shall have given the bond required by this act, and shall have complied with the provisions of law having reference to the registration and survey of distilleries, and having reference to the arrangement and construction of distilleries and the premises connected therewith, in manner and as required by this act; nor shall it be lawful for any assessor of internal revenue to assess, or for any collector to collect, any special tax for distilling on any premises distant less than six hundred feet from any premises authorized to be used for rectifying, nor shall any assessor assess or collector collect any special tax for rectifying distilled spirits on any premises distant less than six hundred feet from any authorized distillery. Where ever, at the date of the passage of this act, any rectifying establishment shall exist within six hundred feet of any distillery, the machinery, tools, implements, and apparatus for carrying on the business of rectifying and of distilling, respectively, shall be appraised in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and the assessor shall immediately notify the distiller or rectifier having the least amount invested in machinery, tools, implements, and apparatus that his business of distilling or rectifying, as the case may be, must be discontinued at such place within thirty days; and if any distiller or rectifier shall fail to discontinue such business on the premises within thirty days after the receipt of such notice, he shall be liable to all penalties, forfeitures, and punishments incurred for carrying on the business of a distiller or rectifier without having paid the special tax required by law. In all cases where a distillery and rectifying establishment, distant the one from the other less than six hundred feet, are occupied by the same person, said person shall have the right to elect which business shall be discontinued at that place; and if any premises used for distilling be distant less than six hundred feet from any premises used for rectifying, but in a different collection district, it shall be the duty of the assessors of both of the adjoining districts immediately on the passage of this act to report the fact to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall require the appraisal herein provided for, and shall direct which business shall be discontinued, and shall notify the assessor of the district in which such premises are situated in order that the same may be discontinued as hereinbefore provided. In all cases where rectifying or distilling shall be discontinued under the provisions of this section, and the time for which the special tax for rectifying or distilling was paid remains unexpired, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to refund out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on requisition of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a proportionate part of any sum originally paid for special tax therefor, which shall be in such ratio to the whole sum paid as the unexpired time for which special tax was paid shall bear to the whole term for which the same was paid. Any collector or assessor of internal revenue who shall fail to perform any duty imposed by this section, or shall assess or collect any special tax in violation of its provisions, shall be liable to a penalty of $5,000 for each offense.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to amend this section, so far as it provides for the distance between distilling and rectifying establishments, by striking out "six hundred feet" and inserting "two hundred feet." I will state my reason for that amendment.

I am well aware that the distance "six hundred feet" was prescribed to prevent fraud; and if mere distance would do it, and that were all, I would not move my amendment. But the Committee of the Whole, I think, will see that great loss might accrue to individuals without any proportionate gain to the Government. This section provides that where there are two or more distilleries, or two rectifying establishments or a distillery and one or more rectifying establishments, within six hundred feet of each other, then those which are worth least shall be given up and abandoned in favor of the larger one at the cost of the owner. That, of course, crowds out the small men to the benefit of the large ones. Perhaps that is wise enough if you are going to crowd out either.

Let me suppose a case. There is a street upon which there are three rectifying establishments and one distillery within five or six hundred feet. There may be good-will attached to these establishments. But this section, as it now stands, would crowd out the small establishments, and leave the whole of the good-will and business in the hands of the larger one; all for the purpose of getting these establishments a few feet further apart.

Now, it will be a great deal easier to prevent a man from carrying his whisky six hundred feet than it will be to destroy the business of two or three men on the opposite side of the same street, for instance. This section provides that the distiller or rectifier, having the least amount invested in machinery, tools, &c., shall give up his business, lose his machinery, and surrender his good-will to the one having a larger amount invested. I do not think there is gain enough in saving frauds by the distance to compensate for the loss to the individual.

I think two hundred feet between these establishments will be ample space to allow the revenue officer to pass. We ought to have the space wide enough for that, to see that no harm is done, and that will save the harm in a degree. I think the Committee of Ways and Means will agree with me that in view of the great difficulties, the great losses, and the great wrongs that will result from this section as it now stands, it will be better to have it amended by reducing this distance from six hundred feet to two hundred feet, or in some other manner which will give relief.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am well aware that this is a pretty hard rule to be enforced; but it is one of those very important rules without the enforcement of which and provision for which in the law I very much doubt whether we will make our law effective in all respects. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] says those establishments ought to be far enough apart to permit revenue officers to pass between them. Sir, they need to be a little further apart than that. We have discovered that pipes have been laid under buildings, under streets, &c., in order to connect establishments of this kind. And one great means of security against such attempts at fraud is to get those buildings reasonably far apart. I was myself of the opinion they should be twelve hundred feet apart to break up all possibility of connection. The committee settled upon six hundred feet. After an examination of a great many practices which prevailed I am satisfied with that distance. I hope it will not be made less.

A provision has also been made where they are near together. I can state in behalf of the committee, while we have been appealed to most earnestly and urgently from some of the principal cities to make a provision of this kind, that while we require those hereafter to be erected to be six hundred feet apart, it is only reasonable we should let those who have gone into business to stand as they now are. That is, we shall permit those who have for the last four or five years, in nine cases out of ten, and I may say ninety out of a hundred, defrauded the Treasury, to go on, and let this only apply to those who are to go into business hereafter.

Mr. BUTLER. If that is necessary, why not make the principal distiller who takes the business take the rest within six hundred feet?

Mr. SCHENCK. We have not the power.

Mr. BUTLER. Then do not license him.

Mr. SCHENCK. We have not the power to make one man take another man's property.

Mr. PRUYN. The reasoning of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is based on what has passed away. All these things were done when the tax was two dollars per gallon on whisky, and now it is proposed in this bill to reduce the tax to fifty cents a gallon. The chairman's reasoning is confined to another condition of things than those provided for in this bill. All these evasions were resorted to when the tax was fixed at two dollars a gallon. Now, sir, I hold this provision to be most extraordinary. Here is a man who has acquired his property in the regular way. He has paid for it and owns it. This provision says that he shall not use it, and yet provides no just compensation whatever. There is no State of the Union which would appropriate private property without compensation. The Constitution of the United States prohibits the taking of private property for public use without compensation. Yet, sir, you take this property, sweep it away from the man who owns it, and provide no compensation whatever. It strikes me that the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is fair, that the larger one should be put to the election whether he will go on with the business and buy the smaller one out or permit the smaller one to buy him out. I am not prepared at this moment to offer an amendment that will meet this case; but I hope the committee will pass over this section so an amendment can be prepared. The principle enunciated by the gentleman from Massachusetts is unquestionably the right one. We should not deprive any man of the use of his property without making him just compensation therefor. But, as I have said, I am not prepared with the proper amendment. I move, therefore, that this section be passed over for the present.

Mr. LOGAN. If gentlemen had examined this section they would not have deemed it was necessary to amend it. What is the reason for any law? What is the reason for this? Now, sir, there is abundance of evidence to show that rectifying establishments, many of them, near distilleries, use pipes in connection with the cisterns of the distillery, in connection with the mash-tubs or the receiving cisterns, so as to run the whisky from the distillery into the rectifying establishment. Then it is rectified in the rectifying establishment; and under this and the old law whenever whisky is rectified it goes upon the market as tax paid, the tax being compelled to be paid before it is rectified. Yet the gentlemen say this is a hardship. Sir, it is no hardship. Honest men in this business ask that it shall be done. I have a document here from which I have already read, the proceedings of the distillers' convention, at which the rectifiers of every State of the Union were represented. It was composed of the best men in the business from the different cities and States. Now, these men representing the distilling interest passed a resolution recommending that no license should be granted to any distillery upon the same premises with a rectifying establishment, or within six hundred feet of any premises used for rectifying. That is what the rectifiers themselves say we should do in order to prevent fraud. If they can stand it I do not think we should complain.

Mr. PRUYN. Does the gentleman mean to assert that gentlemen engaged in any business have a right to ask this to be done—to ask us to annihilate the rights of private property?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; I do not say they have a right to ask Congress to do any more than any other citizens have a right to ask. But they held a convention and passed resolutions determining for themselves what they thought would be necessary to protect them against the frauds of these illicit distillers. But outside of that, I put this to the House, not as an argument, but to show that there is a kind of anxiety here to do more for these men than they ask to be done for them. Now, I tell gentlemen if you put your rectifying establishment within two hundred feet of your distillery all you have to do in the city is to attach a common hose and connect the rectifying establishment and the distillery together over the tops of the houses and with a syphon draw out every particle of whisky from the tanks. It can be done in the night. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GRISWOLD. For the benefit of my friend, I will give him the evidence of one of the largest rectifiers and distillers in my own State. His name is Tracey. When the business was conducted in a legitimate way he paid into the Government Treasury over five hundred thousand dollars in nine months as tax on whisky manufactured by him. His evidence before the committee was that although this would work hardship to him from the fact that he would have to abandon expensive buildings which he had erected for the purpose, still he was convinced of the necessity of this provision, and he was willing to submit to the law rather than to have the committee abandon it.

Mr. PRUYN. I would like to say a word in answer to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the amendment, and move to add "fifty," a formal amendment, so as to allow debate. I am not convinced even by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] or my friend from New York, [Mr. GRISWOLD,] still less by the resolution of the large distillers in the whisky convention. I understand now where this proposition comes from. It comes from the large distillers and rectifiers, who propose to crush out the little ones. Precisely that and nothing more.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me a question. This does not prevent distillers from being close together, nor the rectifying establishments being close together, but prevents the distilleries being close to the rectifying establishments. So, therefore, it cannot be crushing out the little ones.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand it perfectly. The gentleman has not made it any clearer. If there be any rectifying establishment within six hundred feet of any distillery then the one that is less in amount—and the rectifying establishments are always the largest—has a right to crush out the other without paying any damages, compensation, or giving him any relief whatever. Now, I say it is unjust, unfair, and unchristian for us to legislate to destroy one man's property for the benefit of another without compensation. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that if you give a license to a large rectifier, which, by the terms of the law, takes away the property of the smaller one, you should make him take the property at a valuation of his neighbor that he is going to crush out. My friend from Ohio says that cannot be done. Let us see. What can you say to the large establishment? You can say, "Sir, you shall not have your license, which crowds out your neighbor from his business, unless you take all the distillery establishments within six hundred feet." Is not that right? Mr. Tracey, mentioned to us, I have no doubt would like to have all the small distillers wiped out. The large rectifiers are the very men who want to crush out the small ones. That is part of the game. Now, then, the least I desire is, if you are going to kill these small men for the benefit of the large ones, let the large men pay for the property they destroy. I, for one, will not stand in this committee without raising my voice against taking one man's property for the benefit of another without compensation.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot see the difference in effect between the proposition—

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Debate is exhausted on the amendment, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The gentleman from Iowa is replying to an amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the last amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to the gentleman's withdrawing it. Mr. Chairman, I see no difference in principle between the proposition made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] and the proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means. He is willing that the distillery and the rectifying establishment shall be separated two hundred feet from each other, but not six hundred feet. Now, I should like to know what difference there is between his proposition and that of the committee except in degree?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman does not mean to misrepresent me?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. BUTLER. I put it at two hundred feet for the purpose of calling attention to the subject and asking time to prepare an amendment to cover the case.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, we have had before the Committee of Ways and Means a great many persons in reference to this very proposition, and one gentleman who is a very large distiller and rectifier in the city of New York, having his two establishments in juxtaposition, came before us and said that he wanted us to strike out the proposition that the distiller should be required to own the property in fee on which his distillery is erected, and he also objected to this six hundred feet proposition, because he said he had invested $50,000 in an alcohol distillery which would be destroyed if this law went into operation. But he made his principal argument against the sixth section of the bill, which requires that every distiller shall own in fee the property on which his distillery is located; and he said, "If you allow that provision to remain in the bill I care not a fig about the other proposition in regard to rectifying establishments, because the effect of that section will be to drive the business of distillation out of the great cities where land is dear into the country where land is cheap." And he said, "If this proposition in the sixth section prevails my distillery and rectifying house must go out of the city of New York, because I cannot afford to invest the amount of money necessary to carry on business there where real estate is worth so much." I believe, sir, it is the wish of all those who desire to see the tax collected that the business of distillation shall be driven out of the great cities where all the frauds are committed. It is no hardship on the rectifier to be compelled to remove his rectifying house six hundred feet from a distillery, but all the evidence is that frauds have been committed by means of pipes extending from the cistern-room of the distillery into the rectifying establishment, underground and in various ways, so that the distilled spirits never reach the distillery warehouse at all, but go from the receiving cistern into the rectifying establishment, and thence to the market.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. ALLISON. I will.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Have you any evidence that any fraud has been committed by collusion between a distillery and a rectifying establishment when separated two hundred feet?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that we have any evidence of it when separated two hundred feet or one hundred and ninety-nine feet or one hundred and ninety-nine and a half feet. But we require that these distilleries and rectifying establishments shall not be on the same square, in the same block of buildings, but that they shall be separated by a street or avenue.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the distance seven hundred feet. Now, I have noticed the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] and I really cannot see why it is that he should oppose the proposition to require that there shall be this distance between a distillery and a rectifying establishment and be in favor of two hundred feet.

Mr. BUTLER. I have said three times that I am not in favor of it.

Mr. EGGLESTON. Well, he is certainly opposed to six hundred feet. It is well known to every gentleman here who looks the subject honestly and squarely in the face that the business of making whisky, if the tax is paid to the Government upon it, must be driven from the cities. Talk about making whisky in the city of New York or Boston, bringing your corn from the country where it is produced at ten and twelve cents a bushel, and competing with the men who make it there in the corn-fields! It is useless for gentlemen to argue with me that it can be done honestly and the tax paid to the Government, for I know it cannot be done. Take Chicago as a criterion. It costs about seven cents a gallon to take the corn from Chicago to the city of New York before making it into whisky, while you can transport the whisky at about three cents a gallon. The difference in the cost of making the whisky in the West and the cost of making it in the city of New York, or any of our eastern cities, is about four cents per gallon. You cannot make whisky in a legitimate way in New York, Boston, or any of your eastern cities and compete with those who make it in the West. If the tax is honestly paid this business must be carried on not where ground is reckoned by the foot or the hundred feet, but where it is reckoned by the acre. In the West you do not find the distilleries in the large cities, but outside, near the large corn-growing sections. It is there that whisky can be made cheaply; and when the business is honestly carried on those who desire whisky in New York, Boston, &c., must send out there to get it. The more protection you can by legislation throw around this branch of business the better it will be, and the more taxes will be collected.

Mr. PRUYN. Mr. Chairman, I entered upon this discussion supposing the question at issue to be that indicated in the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] not as to the particular distance which it may be proper should exist between the distillery and the rectifying establishment, but whether, when the two establishments are situated within a given distance of each other, the smaller should be sacrificed to the greater. That is the question involved here, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has, it seems to me, been battling a shadow. I do not make any point as to the proper distance, whether it be two hundred or five hundred or one thousand feet; but the question is whether when one man owns a property—

Mr. LOGAN. I would like the gentleman to explain to the House, if he can, at what time this thing of putting the rectifying establishment close to the distillery began, whether it did not begin within a year or two, about the same time these frauds commenced?

Mr. PRUYN. I know nothing about that; it is not the question involved here at all. The question of distance is a minor question.

Mr. ALLISON. The gentleman says I have been "battling a shadow." Why does he not propose a substantial amendment embracing his point?

Mr. PRUYN. The question really presented here, and that which I propose to discuss, is this: if there are two establishments near to each other, one worth $10,000 and the other worth $9,000, shall the man owning the $9,000 establishment be required to close it up and sacrifice his property, while the man owning the $10,000 establishment is permitted to go on with his business? Is this just or right? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has put distinctly to the House the question whether the license to the party owning the $10,000 establishment cannot and ought not to be conditioned on his paying for the $9,000 property. I hold that there is no moral right, no right under the established principles of our Government, by which the property of a man may be sacrificed for public purposes without compensation being made either by the Government or by the other party involved in the matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to understand the gentleman's position, and therefore I would like to ask him this question: does he deny the power of Congress to provide by law that no license shall be issued to a rectifier whose establishment is within six hundred feet of a distillery?

Mr. PRUYN. That is not the point at all.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is precisely the point.

Mr. PRUYN. The question which we have to look at is not as to the extent of an arbitrary and unqualified power, but as to what is right and just. I ask the gentleman whether he would like his property to be sacrificed to the interests of anybody without one dollar being paid for it?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I submit that that is an evasion of my question, not an answer to it. If we may declare by law that no license shall be issued to a rectifier whose establishment is within six hundred feet of a distillery, we may provide directly that rectifying establishments and distilleries shall not be within six hundred feet of each other.

Mr. PRUYN. It is an established principle of this Government, recognized everywhere, that private property shall not be taken for public purposes without just compensation. The provision of the pending section contemplates the taking of private property, either for promoting the public interests in this respect, or for that which would in this view be more objectionable, to promote the interests of the person owning the larger of two adjacent establishments.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PILE. I renew the amendment for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRUYN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] to what their proposition involves. They say that where a rectifying establishment and a distillery are within less than six hundred feet of each other the owner of the rectifying establishment should be compelled to buy out the distillery, if the latter is worth less than the rectifying establishment.

Mr. PRUYN. If he wants a license.

Mr. PILE. Now, why should he be compelled to buy it when he cannot use it in his own name? I want to know whether there is any more authority in law and justice for compelling one man to buy property which he cannot use than for compelling the other man to remove his property? There may be hardship either way. But when the property of one man happens to be worth five dollars less than another piece of property adjoining, though he may have five times more property in other localities and in other branches of business, is it right to compel the man owning the more valuable property, though the difference is only five dollars, to buy out a property which he cannot use, which is worthless to him?

Mr. PRUYN. The gentleman is supposing, in the very case he puts, that this unjust legislation is to take effect.

Mr. PILE. There is as much injustice one way as the other.

Mr. PRUYN. Then do not legislate in that way.

Mr. PILE. If the gentleman's argument proves anything, it proves too much.

Mr. PRUYN. Not at all. I say do not do injustice to either party.

Mr. PILE. I wish, while upon the floor, to answer the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL,] who asks whether there has been a single case of fraud where the distillery and the rectifying establishment have been within two hundred feet of each other. I wish to say that, in the city of St. Louis, a hidden pipe was discovered running from a large distillery to a large rectifying establishment nearly four hundred feet distant. By digging in the night under the wall of a house a pipe was discovered running through the middle of a cellar wall. The parties implicated, including one man who is a Government officer, have been indicted.

Mr. INGERSOLL. This question, involving the right of the citizen to his property, is of too great importance to be passed upon hastily. Now, sir, let me illustrate the operation of the provision contained in this section. Neither the distilling nor the rectification of whisky is a new business in this country, both having been carried on years ago all over the United States, although not so extensively as within the last five or ten years. Now, let me suppose a case the parallel of which can be found in any town where distilling is carried on to any considerable extent. On one lot there is a distillery valued at $75,000. On another lot, within three hundred feet of that distillery, is a rectifying establishment worth $50,000. Both have been in operation ten years. They were not established to aid each other in defrauding the Government of its revenue. Both were established to do a legitimate business, (we have recognized the whisky business as legitimate by licensing it and collecting revenue from it.) By this bill it is proposed that a valuation of the two establishments shall be made, and that if the distillery shall be found to be worth more than the rectifying establishment the latter shall be confiscated. You do confiscate it if you deprive the owner of the use of his property for the purpose for which it was erected.

Mr. LOGAN. He can remove it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. He cannot.

Mr. LOGAN. Why so?

Mr. INGERSOLL. He cannot remove it without expense. It is possible, I confess, to remove it; but you confiscate his property when you make him suffer $10,000 damages. I ask whether this is not taking private property for public use without compensation?

Mr. LOGAN. What is the remedy?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am not here to propose a remedy. If you will let the section pass over for the present we will prepare an amendment. We ought to protect the rectifier who has been doing an honest business. We ought certainly to stop a moment before we confiscate property worth perhaps $100,000 without any compensation therefor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman where he gets the power for the regulations provided for rectifiers for the last three years or more?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I say that a man who carries on a fraudulent rectifying establishment is not entitled to any rights; but I propose when an honest man has invested money in this business, and has carried it on without any suspicion being attached to him, that his property shall not be confiscated without compensation.

Mr. PILE, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to make it eight hundred feet.

Mr. Chairman, let us see what all this storm means. It is provided no rectifying establishment or distillery shall be within less than six hundred feet of one another. Gentlemen do not object to that. They would keep these rectifiers and distillers far apart, or some distance apart. That settles the principle so far. What next? It may be there are now existing some within that distance. They propose not to permit the election between those so situated, but to strike out that sentence. If you strike out that sentence what is the condition of things? Neither of them will be permitted to go on. Is that what is desired? Is that what they propose?

Mr. PRUYN. No, sir.

Mr. SCHENCK. What is done in this bill? Gentlemen admit these establishments must be kept apart from each other, and any one who knows anything about the subject will not fail to admit their proximity is one of the great sources of fraud. There are some existing within this distance. What do we do? We propose a rule of election. The Government might refuse to permit either of them to go on. The Government might propose one of them might pay a special license and go on with the business, but that would be a greater hardship than if a bill of this kind passed. What is proposed? If there are one or more within the limited distance, there shall be a rule of election made, so the least damage shall be done. That is the whole of it. Gentlemen concede everything if they say they must be kept apart, but when they are within the limited distance they will not allow the Government to adopt any rule of election. It is a practical rule by which the least amount of damage to property is done.

Mr. PRUYN. You do not pay the sufferer.

Mr. SCHENCK. Pay the sufferer for what? These gentlemen talk about confiscating property! There is no confiscation of private property for public use. There is no property taken for the Government. There is no confiscation of property at all. As I have said, the Government could refuse to license either of these. It does not go to that extent. It does not propose such a hardship as that. As it cannot permit with safety the remaining of two or three so near each other it adopts the rule of election. It does not take anything from anybody. It refuses to concede the privilege of going on with the business under these dangerous circumstances, as it has the perfect right to do. It fixes a rule of election as to which one shall remove, so that the least possible loss shall inure to any one. That is the whole of this case.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I move to amend in line fifty-four, after the word "revenue," by inserting the words "an amount equal to the damage sustained by such person as shall be ascertained by a board of three freeholders appointed for that purpose."

The CHAIRMAN. That must be suspended until the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is disposed of.

Mr. BUTLER. I propose to withdraw the one already offered and submit this instead, which I think will be what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MCCORMICK] desires, and will meet the difficulty. After the word "days," in line twenty-nine, I move to insert the following:

And the person assuming the business thereby shall, before he is licensed, pay or satisfy the person discontinuing the business for his losses so occasioned by taking his property at the appraisement.

This amendment, it seems to me, is most clearly right. Here are two men standing side by side, and you say to one of them, "You must discontinue your business because the other one is going to take it under the law." Now, I agree that you have the power to do this, the power to abrogate every contract in the United States. You have power to take every man's property in the United States. It is not a question of power, but it is a question how shall you exercise that power. Justly or unjustly? Having the power, then, we come to two men side by side and say to one of them "Sir, you stop your business and give it to this other man." Why? Because he wants it, and can make a profit out of it, and has more property than you. Now, when you say that to him, all I desire is that you shall also say to the other man, "You shall not do that unless you take the property of your neighbor thus destroyed, have it appraised with all the machinery, tools, and fixtures, together with the good will, and pay for it."

Mr. PRUYN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. PRUYN. I will either oppose the amendment or move to amend it by inserting one half the amount.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to the gentleman speaking. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized, having risen to oppose the amendment.

Mr. PRUYN. I will go on then and make my remarks, and if I am out of order the Chair will rule me out.

Mr. LOGAN. The gentleman has been advocating it all the time.

Mr. PRUYN. There is no rule which requires me to say in advance what position I may take.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman who rises to oppose an amendment has precedence to one who rises to concur in it.

Mr. PRUYN. I simply wish to know, then, if, after the gentleman closes his argument, I can move to amend?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can then move an amendment, and the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. LOGAN. I am sorry to cause any feeling on the part of the gentleman. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] that the allusion on his part to the fact that he is not governed by these large distillery conventions, and has not been seven months preparing these amendments, may be very kind toward the committee. I do not say it is not; but I will say this: that so far as the time is concerned, although I have been with the committee but very little for the last three months, I do not think that any committee ever worked harder in this House than this committee have done during this session. These constant flings at their seven months' labor may be well enough, perhaps; but the fact remains that the committee have done the best they could, and that is all anybody can ask.

But to the point. So far as the crushing out of these small distilleries is concerned the gentleman mistakes the purpose and meaning of this section of the bill. It certainly does not crush out the small men. The gentleman argues as though one distiller would crush out another, or one rectifier another. The provision is that the distillery shall not be within six hundred feet of the rectifying establishment, or vice versa. The distilleries may be together and the rectifying establishments may be together. A dozen of either kind may be together, but one of the rectifying establishments shall not be close to a distillery. If the gentleman had examined this question as thoroughly as the Committee of Ways and Means has he certainly would not have felt so exasperated about the rights of these individuals. Why, sir, it is the first time I ever heard that men who have persistently and constantly defrauded the Government for two years are injured in their rights when you merely require them to move their machinery away so that frauds cannot be perpetrated.

Mr. BUTLER. You do not require them to do it. You only require one of them to do it.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; and the one that can move the most easily. That seems to be fair.

Mr. STEWART. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to know what, on investigation, the Committee of Ways and Means find to be the fact as to the ownership of distilleries and rectifying establishments, and whether it is not generally the case that they are owned by the same persons?

Mr. LOGAN. The same parties almost always. In nine cases out of ten the man who owns the distillery owns the rectifying establishment.

Mr. BUTLER. That does not apply to this case.

Mr. LOGAN. It does; and they are put near each other especially for fraudulent purposes, as the evidence shows: I will give you an instance, and I could name the man. In New York city there was a very large distiller who had a rectifying establishment close to his distillery. The rectifying establishment was in the name of another party. He distilled, I believe, six thousand gallons a day, or some very large amount. Every morning he returned two thousand gallons. Well, how was it? A pipe leading through the wall of the house into his receiving-cistern filled the tube of the rectifying establishment, which held four thousand gallons; and thus every night the Government was defrauded out of $8,000 by the distillery being near the rectifying establishment. After a while it was detected, and the man who had the rectifying establishment was charged by the distiller—because he wanted to get rid of the charge of fraud against himself—with stealing the whisky. And the rectifier sold out to the other man, and left the city or disappeared. Now, this statement was made to me by the distiller himself, and I could give his name if necessary. The evidence showed the facts, and he admitted them, and said it was true. Now, if such frauds can be perpetrated on the Government by the proximity of the rectifying establishment to the distillery, I ask gentlemen if they are not ready to resort to any means that are legal means in order to protect the revenues of the country, and to protect the Government against these frauds?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have the rule read which was enforced just now.

Mr. PRUYN. Oh, I do not question the correctness of the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule will be read for the information of the committee generally.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Where debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed, in committee, five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which any member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate on the amendment; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to the amendment."

Mr. PRUYN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words which relate to pecuniary damages the words "three fourths of the amount;" and I wish to speak to that proposition.

Mr. Chairman, I have frequently in conversation with members of this House and in private circles admitted the great ability of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and the facility he possesses in placing before this House, in the strongest and clearest manner, his views on any subject which he presents to it. On this occasion he has attempted to elude the great principle involved in this discussion, but I want to hold him to it and make him respond to it. Now, sir, in the fifth of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States there is this provision: "Nor shall private property be taken for public uses without just compensation." Now, whether we actually take possession of the property, or say to the man that he shall not use it for the purpose for which it is designed, no matter which, he suffers a damage for which the Constitution intended he should be compensated. The case mentioned here of a Mr. Travis, one of the most highly respectable and honorable men engaged in the distillation and rectifying of spirits, is not the case now before us. As I understand it, Mr. Travis owned both establishments, and he was put to his election whether he would use the one or the other, and he chose the greater establishment.

But here, it strikes me, is a clear case where a man's property is virtually taken away from him for the public good—for that is the declared object of this provision—for the benefit of the public Treasury, and to secure the collection of the largest amount of revenue from this business. For that purpose you take away from the owner of the smaller establishment the benefit to be derived from his business, in a measure confiscating it, and let the larger owner use his property as he pleases, without compensating the former in any way. I hold that a measure of this kind is unconstitutional, arbitrary, and unnecessary. I say nothing about this matter of two hundred feet or five hundred feet or a thousand feet; I do not care anything about that. Let the Committee of Ways and Means settle that matter as they please. But I beg them not to invade private rights in a manner not warranted by the Constitution.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MULLINS. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MULLINS. The rule emphatically states that whoever addresses the Chair first shall be entitled to the floor. Now, I rose to speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PRUYN.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was addressed simultaneously by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MULLINS] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] and happened to recognize the gentleman from Illinois as entitled to the floor to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PRUYN.] The Chair will endeavor to assign the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee at some future time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York. If I could, I would move to strike out all but the first sentence of this section. It seems to me we can dispense with all this machinery and detail in regard to who shall buy out the other, by simply refusing to license either party, where there are two establishments within six hundred feet of each other. I think we can compromise upon that without attempting to provide how A shall buy out B or B shall buy out A.

Mr. PRUYN. I think the act will be held to be unconstitutional if we pass it. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. BUTLER, to strike out "six hundred feet" and insert "two hundred feet."

Mr. BUTLER. I will withdraw that amendment for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] to offer an amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend this section by striking out the following:

Authorized to be used for rectifying, nor shall any assessor assess or collector collect any special tax for rectifying distilled spirits on any premises distant less than six hundred feet from any authorized distillery. Wherever, at the date of the passage of this act, any rectifying establishment shall exist within six hundred feet of any distillery, the machinery, tools, implements, and apparatus for carrying on the business of rectifying and of distilling, respectively, shall be appraised in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and the assessor shall immediately notify the distiller or rectifier, having the least amount invested in machinery, tools, implements, and apparatus, that his business of distilling or rectifying, as the case may be, must be discontinued at such place within thirty days; and if any distiller or rectifier shall fail to discontinue such business on the premises within thirty days after the receipt of such notice, he shall be liable to all penalties, forfeitures, and punishments incurred for carrying on the business of a distiller or rectifier without having paid the special tax required by law.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Used for rectifying. Nor shall any assessor assess or collector collect any special tax for rectifying distilled spirits on any premises distant less than six hundred feet from any distillery, when the distillery and rectifying establishment are occupied and used by different persons. But.

Mr. PRUYN. That will exempt them from all tax.

Mr. SCHENCK. No; this section will continue, after the amendment, as follows:

But in all cases where a distillery and rectifying establishment, distant the one from the other less than six hundred feet, are occupied by the same person, said person shall have a right to elect which business shall be discontinued at that place, &c.

My object by this amendment is to establish no principle of election between two persons, but to leave them to work out the difficulty between themselves; so that neither of them shall be permitted, by special tax or license, to distill or rectify while the establishments are so situated. Of course, if either of them should rectify or distill without a special tax or license, he would be subject to all the penalties for illicit distillation or illicit rectifying. I propose this amendment now, intending to withdraw it when I shall have made an explanation. If it shall be the pleasure of the Committee of the Whole to make the change proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] I shall then offer a complete modification of the section. I prefer, however, that the section shall stand as it is. I believe that the rule of election which it proposes is not a bad one; I believe it is not, in its operation, an unjust one; and, stupid as I may be, I cannot for my life see how it in any way takes private property for public uses. We do not propose to take anybody's property. We simply propose that where there are two establishments which cannot both be licensed a rule of election shall be established by which one may be licensed. But we take nothing from either. Where a choice must be made we decline to give to one the advantage of carrying on the business. That is the whole of it.

One word further. It has been frequently said that this section proposes a discrimination in favor of the large rectifiers and the large distillers as against those engaged in the business in a smaller way—the poor men. Well, sir, they are none of them entitled to any particular sympathy.

Mr. INGERSOLL. They have rights of property.

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes; and we do not propose to interfere with their rights of property. Notwithstanding all the gentleman's knowledge of the law, I insist on that. But when gentlemen talk about the section having been put in its present form because these large operators had the ear of the Committee of Ways and Means, I say once for all, for myself and the committee, that we scorn all such insinuations as unfit to be replied to. The committee has in this, as in other things, attempted to do its duty according to the best information it could obtain; and neither big distillers nor little distillers, big rectifiers nor little rectifiers, have had the ear or the influence of the committee or been favored in one way or another. We have tried to keep them all in subordination to the law, so far as we could frame provisions for that purpose. I give notice that I shall not reply hereafter to any such mean insinuations, for I consider them unworthy to be replied to.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] withdraw his amendment or let it stand?

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw it that a vote may be taken on the other proposition. If that be adopted, I shall propose a modification of the whole section. As I have already said, I prefer the section as reported by the committee. If that should not receive the approval of the Committee of the Whole, I shall then offer an amendment taking away any election between these parties, leaving them to determine between themselves which of them shall go on.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman from Ohio withdraw his amendment after I have taken the floor for the purpose of discussing it?

The CHAIRMAN. It cannot be withdrawn if objection is made.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not desire to prevent the gentleman from discussing it, and I will not withdraw the amendment at present.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I did not oppose this amendment of the gentleman from Ohio before, because I was willing that there should be no election made by law in favor of one man and against another; and I thought the gentleman from Ohio had come to the conclusion to settle this matter in that way, so that in the case of two men, doing business side by side, equally good or equally bad, Congress should not legislate the establishment of one out of existence for the benefit of the other. I think that a fair proposition; and I trust we shall have a vote on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I sat here yesterday with great patience during the half hour's lecture which the gentleman from Ohio administered to the majority of the House. We took that lecture with good nature. We recognize the right of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to scold us. But now he proposes to commence again, and talks about "mean insinuations." Why, sir, I never said a word about the large rectifiers until their resolutions were produced here by the committee in justification of the provisions of their bill. The resolutions of a convention of the large rectifiers were produced here as a justification of fixing the distance at six hundred feet; and it happened that that convention and the Committee on Ways and Means got exactly together—as to the proper distance—to a foot; ay, to an inch; ay, to a quarter of an inch.

That seemed to be a little difficult to do. It can happen only once in six hundred times at least. It did happen, however. These large distillers and these large rectifiers in their convention agreed with our friends on the Committee of Ways and Means precisely. That, of course, was entirely accidental. I never thought of it until they produced it here. They show where they got their system. I am willing to let the distance be twelve hundred feet if they will allow fair play, the little and big to stand as equals before the law, a principle for which I have been fighting for the last five years.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RAUM. I wish at the proper time to move a proviso.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I understand the gentleman from Ohio does not persist in the amendment which he proposes. My colleague withdraws his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, my object is to say to the committee, it seems to me, on the whole, if it be necessary to establish a rule that there should not be a distillery and rectifying establishment within six hundred feet of each other, and I assume that to be so on the evidence submitted to us, I think it wise not to undertake to decide by law who shall have the business. It is clear we may say by law when a distillery and a rectifying establishment are found within six hundred feet of each other, owned and kept by the same persons, that they shall not be licensed, but I doubt the wisdom of saying the property of one of these persons shall go to the benefit of the other; that he shall have no benefit of it and the other shall go on. Leave them to settle the matter for themselves. They will agree the distillery shall have the place of the rectifying establishment, or the rectifying establishment shall have the place of the distillery. If not, somebody else will do the business and pay the Government the revenue to be derived from this tax. I think it is entirely safe to say when they are within six hundred feet of each other they shall not be licensed. I understand the gentleman from Ohio has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I objected to its being withdrawn.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am willing to take the amendment, if I cannot get the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. With all deference to the gentleman I think the amendment is best. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. RAUM. I move the following:

Strike out the word "but" and insert:
And in all cases where the owners of the distillery and rectifying establishments thus situated shall join in an application for the assessment of a special tax on one of such establishments, then it shall be lawful for the proper assessor to assess the same, and it shall be lawful in such case for such establishment to be operated under the provisions of this act; and.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARDING. I move the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio:

Provided, This act shall not be taken to prohibit the producing of alcohol in a distillery by primary continuous distillation.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order at this point.

Mr. PAINE. I move an amendment to the amendment to come in at that portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio which is copied from the section and which forbids an assessor to assess and a collector to collect, &c.:

Nor shall the processes of distillation and rectification be both carried on within a distance of six hundred feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved that the committee rise.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move the following, to come in before the word "but:"

And any person who shall make any pipe or hose for any distillery over six hundred feet long shall be guilty of a "high misdemeanor."

[Laughter.]

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the appropriateness of this amendment will be quite evident to the committee. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has said that they can connect by pipes and hose and run them under the street or over the tops of the houses, and so conduct away the liquor from the distillery into the rectifying establishment. If the distance is six hundred feet you should make it a misdemeanor, a penal offense, for anybody to make hose that length. Therefore I move the amendment. If it is done by an officer of the United States, being a misdemeanor, it would be an impeachable offense; and as our managers seem to be continuing on in that line it might give them something to do by prosecuting these transgressors.

Mr. MÜNGEN. Any objection to making two hose of three hundred feet each?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will not occupy the time any longer. The thing is so evident that I have no doubt it will be adopted.

Mr. MÜLLINS. I rise to oppose the amendment. The gentleman from New York, it seems, does not confine his amendment strictly to these persons engaged in distilling, but to those who make hose six hundred feet or more in length. Now, he might get his town burned up and himself in it if such a proposition should prevail. Therefore I shall vote against it for humanity's sake. Now, one word upon the question that has agitated the committee pretty much the entire night. Gentlemen claiming to be learned in the law—I do not pretend to be one of that class; I claim, however, to understand what is common sense and common law—say you cannot prohibit these distilleries and rectifiers within a definite limit without an infringement of vested rights. I ask these gentlemen who hold in their pockets licenses to practice law whether or not it is not a privilege which we give to the distiller or rectifier to carry on their business? You have got the privilege sanctioned by the Government of the United States. It is the privilege you are creating. But you say if it is prohibited within a less distance than six hundred feet then it is trenching on vested rights, and you have no right to confiscate the property. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, who makes that argument, whether he has not said things here which are directly at issue with it. He has declared that the whisky ring is in open violation of law, and at war with the body-politic of the United States. Then if we capture it, have we not a right to confiscate it?

It looks to me as if, notwithstanding the desperate fight we have had with the rebels, the hardest fight we have got after all is with this whisky ring. But we expect to lick them. For one I believe the committee has given us a bill that will hold water. [Laughter.] I believe furthermore that we shall have these distillers tight, and that we shall get about nine tenths of every gallon of whisky that is distilled. But I will warrant I know who will get the balance. It will be the party that we have got to meet this fall. Nevertheless, we will brand the packages "U. S. & Co.," for they belong to us.

The proposition of the committee that parties shall not receive a license whose establishments are within six hundred feet, puts a quietus to them. We have the right to refuse a license in such cases. They derive their privileges from us, and we infringe no man's rights by this provision. You may say this is nonsense. But you grant these licenses and make them pay the tax on them. So you grant licenses to build big powder-houses. Even the town corporations require slaughter-pens to move out, to say nothing of the Government of the United States. If, then, the corporation of a little town can move slaughter-pens away—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Inasmuch as I made my motion for the benefit of the gentleman from Tennessee, I withdraw it.

Mr. MÜLLINS. I return my most hearty thanks to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

The question was then taken on Mr. SCHENCK's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose now to follow up the amendment just adopted, by inserting the words "and used" after "occupied" in the twenty-sixth line; so that the clause will read:

In all cases where a distillery and rectifying establishment, distant the one from the other less than six hundred feet, are occupied and used by the same person, said person shall have the right to elect which business shall be discontinued at that place.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move now to strike out all after the word "place," in line thirty-eight, down to and including the word "provided," in line forty-eight, as follows:

And if any premises used for distilling be distant less than six hundred feet from any premises used for rectifying, but in a different collection district, it shall be the duty of the assessors of both of the adjoining districts immediately on the passage of this act to report the fact to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall require the appraisement herein provided for, and shall direct which business shall be discontinued, and shall notify the assessor of the district in which such premises are situated in order that the same may be discontinued as hereinbefore provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MÜNGEN. I move to add to the section the following proviso:

Provided, That the offices of assessor and assistant or deputy assessors, collector and assistant or deputy collectors, in each and every collection district of the United States be, and the same are hereby, abolished; and that the duties now devolving upon said officers may be discharged by the officers who, by the different States, are or may be appointed or elected and authorized to return the amount of taxable property, and to collect and receive the ordinary taxes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I make the point of order that that proviso is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARDING. I offer the following to come in at the end of the section:

Provided, That this act shall not be deemed to prohibit the producing of alcohol in a distillery by primary continuous distillation.

Mr. MÜNGEN. I rise to a point of order. Only three or four gentlemen on the other side have a right to say anything about this bill, and I object to anybody else saying a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no objection to the gentleman entertaining that opinion.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the matter with the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MÜNGEN. I have been trying all day to get in my amendment, and I think it very strange that a proviso stating who shall collect the revenue is not germane to a bill to provide for the more efficient collection of the revenue tax.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The amendment seems to be germane and appropriate.

Mr. INGERSOLL. And it ought to be adopted.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. Chairman, I would like the distinguished members of the Committee of Ways and Means to inform me whether by the provisions of this bill, and of the section now under consideration, the privilege heretofore accorded by the law to distillers, of running up by continuous process to the production of alcohol, is permitted, or whether it is designed by this limitation to compel the great distilleries of the West that produce alcohol entirely to stop short of that mark and remove the spirit away into other establishments and there redistill it into alcohol? That is my question. I desire to get information on that point.

Now, sir, I will say to the House, in explanation of this amendment, that heretofore a great contest has prevailed in relation to this privilege. Those who manufacture alcohol by secondary distillation are compelled to buy their distilled spirits, which is usually manufactured in the West, where grain is cheap, take it to New York, and there redistill it, producing alcohol. That is one mode of producing alcohol. Another mode is in the great distilleries of the West to continue the process of distillation, beginning with the grain or molasses, and running it on in the same establishment and producing alcohol by one continuous process, which is much cheaper and more profitable. It condenses eight or ten barrels into one; and yet the capacity of the distillery, if you produce alcohol in this way, is just as easily ascertained as if you only produced proof-spirits. I know that the Commissioner, who had this subject under consideration, made a report in favor of those who were compelled to purchase their spirits, and I know that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue informed me that if we allowed the distilleries to produce alcohol the secondary establishments would be compelled to suspend business.

Mr. LOGAN. Will my colleague [Mr. HARDING] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. Can you run spirits up to the degree of alcohol in a common still or distillery where you have not the alcohol column?

Mr. HARDING. I can answer the gentleman that such is the process of producing the article in Peoria.

Mr. LOGAN. Outside of alcohol establishments?

Mr. HARDING. By the machinery they use in their distilleries.

Mr. LOGAN. I guess not; I do not think the gentleman from Peoria [Mr. INGERSOLL] will say that.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am not a practical distiller; but I know they run it up very high. And with an alcohol column they can distill their high wines into alcohol in the same building.

Mr. HIGBY. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ARCHER asked and obtained leave of absence for three days.

Mr. MAYNARD asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, [Mr. TRIMBLE.]

Mr. HIGBY. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ELIOT: The petition of Old Dominion Steamship Company and others, praying for certain amendments in the laws relating to pilotage of steamers.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of Thomas Sinclair and others, lithographers, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, complaining that the productive interests of the country are suffering and its industry paralyzed for want of efficient protection against the cheaper labor and capital of foreign countries, and praying that Congress will resume consideration of the tariff bill which failed in the House of Representatives March, 1867, for want of time, and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

Also, the petition of J. H. Tingley and 41 others, carpet manufacturers, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of workers in Inquirer Paper Mills, and machinists of Philadelphia, complaining of the depression of industry and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, a memorial of William Sellers & Co., and others, machinists, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, complaining of the inadequacy of customs duties to protect the industry of the country against the cheaper labor and capital of foreign countries, and praying for the reconsideration and passage of the general tariff bill which failed in the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Also, a memorial of Richard Norris & Sons, locomotive builders, and others, manufacturers and working men of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, representing that the productive interests of the country are suffering and its industry paralyzed for want of sufficient protection against the cheaper labor and capital of foreign countries, &c., and praying that Congress will resume consideration of the tariff bill which failed in the House of Representatives March, 1867, and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

By Mr. MÜNGEN: The petition of P. Beeler and 5 others, tobaccoists, of St. Mary's, Ohio, relative to tax on tobacco.

By Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania: The petition of William Blair, of Ohio, a soldier of the war of 1812, for a pension.

By Mr. WELKER: The petition of Charles D. Welsh, Charles M. Goaters, Charles H. Cragin, Riley A. Shinn, and Charles T. Peck, a committee on behalf of the city of Georgetown, asking authority by act of Congress for said city to subscribe the sum of $300,000 to build a railroad for said city to connect the Alexandria, Loudoun, and Hampshire railroad, and to levy a tax for that purpose.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 24, 1868.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union of Washington city, in favor of the passage of the bill making eight hours a legal day's work; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from S. N. Goodall, in favor of putting the Indian department under the control of the Freedmen's Bureau; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of Captain James Kelly, asking pay as captain in the United States Army from July 1, 1864, to September 16, 1867; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY. I present a petition from the president and faculty of Yale College, stating that they have learned with regret that the Legislature of California has recently passed an act conveying away to certain individuals a large tract of the most interesting portion of the Yosemite valley. They believe that the statute of California is in violation of the plighted faith of that State in accepting this grant from the United States, and they earnestly and respectfully protest against the ratification and confirmation by Congress of any conveyance of any part of the Yosemite valley in the State of California to individuals. As similar papers are before the Committee on Private Land Claims, I move the reference of the petition to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY presented a petition of citizens of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLEY. I offer the memorial of sundry citizens, merchants and manufacturers and business men of Wheeling, West Virginia, in reference to the bridging of the Ohio river. The memorialists state that while they do not object to the building of bridges across this important navigable thoroughfare, they pray that they may be built in such manner as will not obstruct the navigation. Congress having assumed this stream to be what it is, a national highway, they claim that the erection of piers in the river, with spaces of not more than three hundred feet between them, is an unnecessary obstruction, and they pray that it may be imperative upon all parties building bridges across the Ohio river to construct them so that there shall not be less than five hundred feet clear water way. They earnestly pray that Congress will take that matter into consideration. I believe such memorials go to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; I move the reference of this to the same committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY presented the petition of Susana Gray, praying compensation for property destroyed by United States troops in Alexandria county, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee. I present the petition of Rehuna Brown, a resident of the county of McMinn, State of Tennessee, widow of Henry Brown, deceased, late a private in company K, tenth regiment Tennessee cavalry, praying Congress to grant her a pension to begin about the 1st of January, A. D. 1864, the date of her husband's death in the military prison at Richmond, Virginia, of small-pox, contracted while in the service of the United States as a soldier. I move this petition, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I present a communication addressed to myself from Judge J. Morrison, one of the most eminent lawyers of the State of Indiana, together with an abstract of the case and a full record of the cause relative to the confiscation in the United States district court in the State of Indiana of $109,000 of bonds of the State of Indiana, confiscated upon the ground that Mr. Samuel Miller, the owner of them, a citizen of the State of Virginia, was engaged in the rebellion. The record shows that the cause was heard, and the confiscation had and the bonds sold; that afterward, and after the close of the war, Mr. Miller having an opportunity to go to the State of Indiana and be heard, the cause was reviewed before the judges of the district court and circuit court of the United States. The cause was reviewed and full evidence heard, and it was established that there was no ground for the confiscation, and upon that rehearing the moiety, being about forty thousand dollars, which would have gone to the informer, was by the court decreed to go to Mr. Miller upon the ground that the decree ought not to stand. The moiety going to the Government of the United States having been paid into the Treasury by the clerk in the mean time, was beyond the control of the court, but as the court has now set aside the decree so far as it had the power to do so, Mr. Miller appeals to Congress to grant him a return of his money. I ask the attention of the Committee on Claims to the subject, to which committee I move its reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is suggested by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WILLEY] that that ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary. I am not sure but that it ought to go there, and I will make that motion at his suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reference will be so changed, no objection being made.

Mr. JOHNSON. I present the memorial of the committee of the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association of the Union. They state that several years ago, during the war, they took possession of the property, made it their own; have endeavored to preserve it upon considerations which will suggest themselves to every man who recollects that it is the resting-place of Washington; that their funds are now exhausted; that the revenue they derived at the commencement of their trust was from the passage money that was received from a boat which was used for the purpose of carrying persons to that sacred place; that that boat was taken possession of by the Government during the war, so that that source of revenue was of course lost to them; that they are now without funds; that the extent of the loss consequent upon the Government's taking possession of the boat is about nine thousand dollars, and they pray Congress to allow them that amount. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Claims, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the petition of J. W. L. Barnes, chairman of the Workingmen's State central committee of Massachusetts, setting forth at length what is regarded as a misappropriation of public lands, and especially protesting against the recent treaty with the Osage Indians. I had at first proposed to present this petition in executive session, but considering that this subject has already been called to the attention of the Senate in legislative session, and that the petition relates not only to the treaty with the Osage Indians but also to the general subject of public lands, I present it in open session, and move its reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORELL, of Maine. I have several remonstrances of a similar character which I was holding for an executive session; but inasmuch as the subject has been brought up in open session, I present the petition of Abraham Ross and one hundred and ten others, citizens residing on the Osage reserve, praying that the pending treaty may be rejected; also a protest of Hon. N. B. Blanton and others, of the same purport; also a protest of Alexander Ryett. These memorials all protest against the ratification of the pending Osage treaty. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I had a large number of petitions of similar character, and had them referred in executive session. I do not know that there is any importance in it, but petitions of the same character sent to me I had referred to the committee in executive session.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 402) for the removal of causes in certain cases from the State courts to the United States courts, to report it with an amendment.

I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 275) to amend an act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports," approved March 2, 1833, to report the same adversely, it having been provided for in the bill I have just now reported; and I move that this last bill be indefinitely postponed, so as to get it off the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Ap-propositions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1068) to provide for certain claims against the Department of Agriculture, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 365) constituting eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to take up the bill at this time. Is there any objection?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I object.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I call for a vote on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not in order until the morning business is through with.

Mr. CONNESS. If there be any more morning business, of course I will give way.

Mr. HOWARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 562) relating to the Freedmen's Bureau and providing for its discontinuance; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROSS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. No. 256) relating to the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company; which was ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. HOWE it was—Ordered, That Matthias Harris have leave to withdraw his petition from the files of the Senate.

EIGHT-HOUR LABOR SYSTEM.

Mr. CONNESS. Now, sir, I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 365.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 365) constituting eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer an amendment. I am drawing it up.

Mr. HARLAN. While the Senator is preparing his amendment, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up a joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) in relation to the Maquoketa river, in the State of Iowa, reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] from the Committee on the Judiciary. I am sure no Senator will have any objection to it.

Mr. CONNESS. I presume the preparation of the amendment will only occupy a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am now prepared to offer it.

Mr. HARLAN. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. My amendment is to insert in line six, after the words "United States," the following words:

And unless otherwise provided by law the rate of wages paid by the United States shall be the current rate for the same labor for the same time at the place of employment.

I have no objection to this bill provided the cost of labor is not increased to the United States beyond that paid by private establishments. That, I believe, is the law now.

Mr. CONNESS. Let the bill be read as it is proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed, or who may be hereafter employed, by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, and unless otherwise provided by law the rate of wages paid by the United States shall be the current rate for the same labor for the same time at the place of employment; and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. The passage of the bill with this amendment would amount to nothing. Practically, the loss to the Government by the passage of the bill without the amendment will be nothing. For six months in the year men employed by the Government of the United States do not labor more than eight hours now. It would simply be a reduction of two hours' labor during the warm season of the year, and every man who labors knows very well, by experience, that he can perform as much labor in eight hours as he can in ten, taking the average of the season through. There can be no doubt of that. He comes to his labor each day with renewed vigor in consequence of the lesser number of hours that he has spent in delving at his employment. As I have stated on another occasion in the Senate, I know by actual experience that when I worked at a mechanical employment, and worked by the piece, as it is termed, being paid for the amount of work I did, I never was so well satisfied with the amount of work I did, nor the quality of it, as when I worked about eight hours a day; and that, I think, will be the experience of every intelligent mechanic and working man.

I do not wish to extend discussion upon this measure, unless it shall come from other quarters; but I hope this amendment will not be adopted by the Senate. It is but a very small boon that the working men of America ask from the Congress of the United States, namely: that the example be set by the Government of reducing the number of hours of labor. I know that the passage of this bill cannot control in the labor of the country; but the example to be set by the Government, by the passage of this bill, is due to the laboring men of the country, in my opinion. I know that labor in the main, like every other commodity, must depend upon the demand and supply. But, sir, I for one will be glad, a thousand times glad, when the industry of the country shall become accommodated to a reduced number of hours in the performance of labor. After forty or fifty years of such advance in the production of the world's fabrics by the great improvements that have been made by inventions, and the application of steam as a power, by which the capital of the world has been aggregated and increased many fold, I think it is time that the bones and muscles of the country were promised a small percentage of cessation and rest from labor as a consequence of that great increase in the productive industries of the country. I shall only be astonished, Mr. President, if any Senator shall rise in his place and oppose setting the example by the passage of this act.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to a law that fixes the number of hours for a day's labor, because I do not believe it will control the higher law of supply and demand; and all that I seek by this amendment is to announce the principle that privileges should not be conferred on a man simply because he works for the Government. I believe in equal rights. I think a certain amount of labor should command a certain price and a fair price; but I know of no reason why because a man works for the Government he should have higher pay for the same labor than when he works for anybody else. That is the principle of my amendment. I have no doubt private individuals would reduce the rate of wages if their employes worked a less number of hours, unless there was great demand for that particular work, when the price of wages would rise. If by law the number of hours of daily labor was fixed at eight in all the States of the Union, undoubtedly the price of eight hours' work would be less than the price of ten hours' work. All I desire is, if the United States Government chooses to take the lead in making eight hours a day's work, that it shall not be compelled to pay for that eight hours' work more than any private individual would pay. To vote against this amendment would be to declare that a laborer for the United States is a privileged character, is entiled to higher wages than he would be if he worked for an individual. There is no justice in this, no righteousness in it, and it seems to me that any Senator who votes to pay more for work done for the Government than would be paid if the same work was done for an individual votes to make a discrimination in favor of the Government employes, which would be unjust, improper, and unpopular. My own impression is that our laws ought rather to be framed to dissuade people from seeking employment under the Government, and certainly no discrimination should be made in favor of the employes in the Government dock-yards or navy-yards that does not extend to private ship-yards; and this effort to give privileges and special privileges to those who are working for the Government is wrong in itself, impolitic, and unjust. It will tend, of course, largely to increase the expenditures of the Government, because it will make Government employment desirable, and men will seek it.

There is no reason in the world why, with this amendment, the bill should not pass, and with the amendment I have no objection whatever to it. If only the same rule, the same law which prevails in regard to private transactions, is allowed to prevail in regard to the Government, I have no objection to the bill, for then the same amount of work done for the United States will bear the same price as if done for an individual, no more and no less. I am for special privileges to none and equality to all; no discrimination in favor of a man because he works for the United States, and no discrimination against him. If eight hours are regarded as enough for a day's labor, be it so. I have never seen the time since I arrived at manhood when eight hours a day covered the period of my labor, and I do not think that most of those who are here have passed through their lives on the eight-hour rule with any success in life. A man to succeed in anything he undertakes must generally work more than eight hours a day. But still, if eight hours be deemed a fair day's labor, let it be so; but there is no reason why the United States should pay more for that labor than any individual would.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, I have supported this measure because in very large numbers the working men of the United States have petitioned Congress for it. The extent of this law, the field of its operation, is not very large. Of course it only reaches to those who are employed by the Government of the United States; but, as is suggested by the Senator from California, it may be very valuable as an example. Its influence on the private employments of the country may be beneficial to the laboring classes. My opinion is that eight hours of labor, faithfully applied, are quite sufficient, and that the health of the laborer and the general interests of society will be promoted by this reform.

I do not think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio is necessarily connected with this proposition. There may be reasons why the wages of those employed by the Government should not be regulated by the wages paid by private employers in the particular locality. Take the city of Washington, for example. Private employment here is very limited; enterprise is very limited; and if you would say that the laborer for the Government should have no more than the man who works for a private citizen perhaps you would fix an unfortunate standard. It may be so in other localities; and in other localities the employe of the Government may not have as uniform and steady employment as those who work in the shops of private individuals. Therefore it may be proper that the wages should be different. At any rate, it is not necessary as an accompaniment of this bill, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, I am not in favor of it. I think it virtually defeats the object of this bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Of course it does.

Mr. MORTON. It proposes to adjust the rate of wages according to the length of time during which labor is performed. Now, as the eight-hour rule is not generally adopted in this country, and only in a very few places, it will require an immediate reduction of the rate of wages at our national workshops and places of employment to the amount paid for eight hours, or, in other words, it will reduce the amount of wages paid one fifth. The effect of it would be to bring down the rate of wages, because the time for labor is shortened that much.

I intend to vote for this bill; and I will state briefly my reason for so doing. I think it is a good way to try the experiment which is now being discussed throughout the United States, and has been for some time. In the first place, the fundamental proposition on which this proposal is based is, that in regular mechanical employments men will perform as much labor in eight hours per day as they will in ten hours. It is claimed that the rest, and the intellectual vigor and freshness imparted to operatives, will enable them to perform as much labor in eight hours as in ten. That is an experiment which can be very well tested in the Government workshops; for instance, in the navy-yards and arsenals. If it shall turn out that there will be substantially as much labor performed in eight hours as in ten then the question is decided in favor of the eight-hour system, and it ought to be adopted, because the country gets as much labor in the shorter time, and therefore can afford to pay just the same price for it. If the Government gets as much labor performed in eight hours as in ten the Government can afford to pay just the same price.

But, Mr. President, there are two or three other questions connected with this. If it shall turn out upon experiment that there is not as much labor performed in eight hours as in ten, that the amount of labor performed falls off twenty per cent., then the next question that comes up is this: can employers, manufacturers, and other persons who employ labor regularly afford to pay as much for labor when twenty per cent. of that labor is withdrawn as they can pay for it at this time? Can they afford to pay as much for eighty per cent. as they can for a hundred per cent. and compete with the world in our manufactures? Take the manufacturers and ship-builders, all those who are carrying on extensive employments, or even the smaller employers, the farming community, for example, can they afford to pay as much for eight hours' labor as they can for ten, and compete successfully with foreign competition, and get along prosperously? If they cannot, the question is decided against the eight-hour system, except upon another hypothesis; and what is that? That the laboring men can afford to lose twenty per cent. of their wages on account of laboring two hours less during the day. If they can afford to take twenty per cent. off their wages and have enough left to support their families and live upon comfortably, to educate their children and do as well as they are doing now, then the question is settled in favor of the eight-hour system.

These several questions are all connected with each other, but the first question, and one the settlement of which will perhaps settle all the rest, is this: whether it is true, as argued, that as much labor will be performed in eight hours as in ten if the eight-hour system shall become the regular system. Is there enough gained to the operatives; is there additional vigor imparted to them and additional industry which will bring about the performance of as much labor in eight hours as in ten? If that is determined affirmatively by the experiment in the Government work-shops, it goes very far to settle the whole question. But, sir, it cannot be settled, and the experiment cannot be made, if the wages in the very beginning are reduced twenty per cent., which would be the practical effect of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, because, as I understand his amendment, it proposes that the wages shall be reduced, as the hours are in point of time, to those paid by private persons in similar employment.

Mr. STEWART. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio certainly, on no theory, would be right, and I think on a moment's reflection the Senator himself will see that, because I believe it is admitted on all hands that men will do more work per hour if they work eight hours than they will if they work ten hours a day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Who admits it?

Mr. STEWART. If not admitted, I think it is a self-evident proposition. I think it is one of those axioms that require very little demonstration. I say a man will do more per hour who is only required to work eight hours a day than will a man who is required to work ten hours. The less number of hours a man works the more he can do in the hours that he does work. That, I believe, will be taken as true. This being so, it would not be fair to say that when we reduce the number of hours' work from ten hours to eight hours per day the wages shall be reduced pro rata. That would be saying that an hour of the ten hours' was as good as an hour of the eight hours. That would not be fair, because the theory is that men can do more per hour if they only work eight hours than if they work ten, so that eight hours' labor becomes equivalent to ten hours' labor. Certainly, if a man only works a single hour a day, he can do more in that hour, make greater exertions, than if he had to work every hour in the day. So to adjust the wages pro rata according to the number of hours would not be fair.

I do not agree with the Senator from Indiana in saying that the only question involved in this is the amount of labor. I think there are a good many other questions.

Mr. MORTON. I did not intend to say that. I said that if the first question was decided in the affirmative it would settle the point that the eight-hour system should be adopted. I said that if it turned out on experiment that as much labor was performed in the Government workshops in a day of eight hours as there is now in ten that would settle the question in favor of the eight-hour system.

Mr. STEWART. But the converse of that proposition, I maintain, would not necessarily be true, and I do not suppose the Senator wished to be so understood. The system would not necessarily be rejected if there was not as much work done in the eight hours, because there might be other good results flowing from it.

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. There might be greater comfort given to the workman; there might be an improvement in the condition of society; and if there should be an approximate amount of labor, something near the same amount as now, the other good results might be sufficient to justify the adoption of the reform.

I have no idea but that taking the term of years through which men labor, an individual will, in the course of his life, accomplish more with eight hours a day than he will with ten hours a day labor. I think he will live longer, so that in the course of his natural life he will do more work if he works eight hours a day regularly than he will if he works ten hours. If you put the value of men on the amount of labor they can do in the course of their natural lives I think men will be more valuable who work eight hours a day than if they work ten hours a day. I think they will accomplish more in the course of their natural lives; they will not wear out so soon, and if there is any object in prolonging human life and increasing the aggregate of human happiness the argument would be in favor of this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator presents this matter in view of the statistics of mortality, as to the effect of prolonged labor upon human life, and struck as I am with that aspect of the case, I feel a little alarmed for myself, and for a good many others around me; and I beg to inquire of the Senator whether the bill cannot be amended in some way to embrace the members of the Senate, and put them on an eight hour allowance, which I hope will prolong their lives; because if it is true, as the Senator says, that ten hours labor tends to abbreviate human existence, I should prepare myself to bid farewell to almost all the gentlemen I see around me.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think that is material, because, from the indications in the Senator's State, and others, there is a greater supply of material for Senators than for labor, and by working up gentlemen here we may reduce the supply so as to correspond with the demand. The supply of Senators far exceeds the demand.

Mr. COLE. Mr. President, I know too well the importance of time to spend more than a moment in discussing this question. A few weeks ago I had the honor to present to the Senate a very long petition signed by the mechanics and laboring men of California, asking for the passage of some law of this sort. It was got up by some twenty or thirty separate laboring associations, and I believe that no people in the world are better able to judge of the necessity or propriety of a measure of this kind than the laboring classes within that State. There are, indeed, comparatively but few of the people of the world who perform manual labor, not enough in proportion to the whole. I have a great admiration for that king of Prussia who requires each of his sons to learn some trade, and to follow during his youth some mechanical pursuit. If all those who are able to perform manual or mechanical labor were to devote some small portion of their time to that pursuit there would be no necessity for people working more than two or three hours a day.

I suppose the operation of this bill will be to bring all mechanical labor down to the eight-hour system. I presume that is to be the result of it if we pass it. I believe that eight hours' labor in the mechanical pursuits, and in all other branches of labor, is quite sufficient; that the residue of the time not devoted to sleep would well be devoted to the improvement of the mind and social faculties; and all American citizens should be enabled to devote some portion of their time to the cultivation of the intellect. Our Republic stands upon the intelligence of the people; it has no other foundation; and unless the people are provided by law with some protection against the requirement which is now put upon them by the exorbitant demands of capitalists, they will not be so well prepared to perform the duties of American citizenship. I am therefore very anxious for the passage of this bill.

The fact is that in this age of machinery an immense amount of labor is performed in a very short time. I believe in Great Britain the labor of one hundred and fifty or two hundred millions is performed through the agency of machinery, while the persons engaged in directing that machinery number but very few millions. We take advantage of these advances that have been made in the invention and use of machinery. At the present time, by the use of machinery, the farmers of our country who formerly devoted their winters to threshing out their crops are able to perform that work in a day or two, and the consequence is that their sons are enabled to attend the public schools, and thus to improve themselves the better to perform the duties of citizenship. It seems to me every argument is in favor of this bill. I am decidedly in favor of its passage.

Mr. WILSON. I shall vote against the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio, for the reason that I wish to give the eight-hour labor movement a fair trial. I think the Government of the United States, employing a few hundred mechanics and laborers, can afford to try this experiment, and I shall vote to try the experiment. During the past few years much has been said and written on the subject of the hours of labor. I think the discussions have been conducive to the interests of the toiling men of the country. In nearly all departments of industry the hours of labor are less than they were forty years ago. During this same period the prices of labor have been increased, and the condition of the laboring men of the country improved. Reared upon a farm until I came to the age of manhood, I was accustomed to work at least thirteen hours a day. After attaining the age of twenty-one I entered a mechanic's shop and worked more than fifteen hours a day. It is true I might have made the hours of labor less if I had chosen; but it was the custom to work more hours then than now, and I was anxious to work as many hours and to accomplish as much as others, or as my strength would permit. Within one generation the hours of labor have been diminished, both where men worked by the piece or by the day, on the farms or in the workshops, to the advantage, in my opinion, of all concerned.

I have heard much and read much of what has been said and written on the subject of the hours of labor. I have not been convinced that toiling men can accomplish as much work in eight hours as in ten hours, or that they will receive as much compensation for eight hours of labor as for ten hours. It may not be for the permanent interests of those who have nothing but their labor to sell to lessen the hours of toil from ten hours to eight hours. If it is not, they will feel it and discover it quite as soon as any other portion of the people, and they can readily abandon an experiment that has failed. It may be for the material, intellectual, and moral interests of the masses of the people whose lot it is to toil for their subsistence to reduce the hours of labor, and if the reduction of the hours of labor will be conducive to the interests of laboring men and laboring women that reduction will be a source of gratification to every benevolent heart and generous mind.

In this matter of manual labor I look only to the rights and interests of labor. In this country and in this age, as in other countries and in other ages, capital needs no champion; it will take care of itself, and will secure, if not the lion's share, at least its full share of profits in all departments of industry. On general principles I am not anxious to stimulate labor in our country. The departments of productive industry are open to all, and offer incentives to toil. We are made for something higher and better in this country than to pile up annually $1,000,000,000. What we want to grow in this Christian land of achieved free institutions is a strong healthy race of men and women with cultivated heads and hearts and consciences. Whatever tends to dignify manual labor or to lighten its burdens, to increase its rewards or enlarge its knowledge, should receive our sympathies and command our support. Animated by these sentiments I shall vote against the amendment and for the bill as it came from the Representatives of the people.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I am under no stress of weather to define my position, but I am at liberty to speak of this bill and say of it just what I think about it. I am not in any hurry to try any experiments. This is called an experiment, and it certainly is an experiment, so far as we are concerned. I have entire confidence in the intelligence and the education of the working men of this country to understand why this bill is introduced, and I do not mean any reflection upon anybody, for there has been considerable said in various parts of the country in relation to the subject, but it is introduced for the purpose of obtaining votes somehow and somewhere.

Sir, I believe it is a degradation of the working men of this country to deprive them of the privilege of making contracts to work for just whatever sum and for whatever time they please. There are some men who would be greatly distressed and injured if this bill should pass and it should become the habit and custom of the country. It is absurd to suppose that a man can earn as much in eight hours as he can in any larger number of hours; that is to say, if he is a man of average strength. If he is a broken down man of course he cannot labor the full number of hours; but if he is a man of average strength he can earn more in a larger number of hours than in eight hours.

Mr. CONNESS. How do you know that? Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I know that of my own experience, Mr. President. I sprung from the laboring classes. I have labored myself never less than twelve hours in all my life since I was fifteen years of age, and most of the time much more than that. I believe in leaving the people of this country at perfect liberty to make any contracts they please; and as I was observing, if this should become the rule and custom of the country, a man with a large family, who was compelled to work all of his time that his strength would permit, would be unable to support his family, because he could not obtain employment so as to work more than eight hours in the day; for whenever he happened to be employed with other hands he would be compelled to leave off and be discharged at the same moment that other men left off and were discharged.

I am also opposed to this bill for the reason suggested by the Senator from Ohio. It is already a great evil that men are seeking after governmental employment in preference to remaining at home in their ordinary and common avocations; and I say to you, Mr. President, that those people who are left at home, who are compelled to work a larger number of hours for the same price, will look with no favor upon a project of this kind which is to create and establish a favored few who obtain the Government employment.

It is said that the same amount of labor can be performed in eight hours as in ten. Look at the fact. Here are parties engaged with machinery that cannot be driven and is not driven beyond a certain rate of speed. Will the parties who are engaged with such machinery be able to produce any more by working a less number of hours per day when that machinery revolves or moves at the same rate of speed that it did before? Let us illustrate this. Take farming. Here is a man who drives his team in the field, follows the plow; can he make his horses or his oxen move over the same amount of ground in eight hours that he could in ten? It is absurd to suppose so. Take the establishment where there is one gang of hands that goes on and works through the day time, and another through the night, alternating; is it not obvious that the employers will be compelled to increase the number of hands for such an establishment as that to the amount of fifty per cent. in order to have three gangs of hands to fill up all the time? Certainly it is. But after all if this bill should pass it would result in the end in a reduction of the amount of wages, and I trust it will not pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I intend to vote against this amendment, and I desire to say a word upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope we shall go on and get a vote on this measure, which will be in a very short time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will lead to debate.

Mr. CONNESS. Oh, no; it will not.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to express the same hope. I have no doubt we shall get to a vote in a short time; while if it goes over now it will perhaps take an hour or two on some other day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business can be passed over informally, if there be no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I object.

Mr. CONNESS. That being the case, I move to postpone the business now before the Senate for half an hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That requires a two-thirds vote.

Mr. CONNESS. Very well; we shall get it. I hope the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will consent to that, because we shall get a vote in that time on this measure.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If a vote could be taken on this measure without debate I should not feel authorized to interpose.

Mr. CONNESS. There will be very little further debate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But at the same time I shall not feel authorized to give my own consent, if I have any control over the question, that the bill now before the Senate, which has been two days before the Senate, and which certainly ought to be pressed to an early vote, shall give place to any bill unless it be one of very marked and peculiar character.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator will permit me, I will say to him that this is a bill of a very marked character, and I hope he will consent to the postponement.

Mr. NYE. We can pass it in fifteen minutes.

Mr. CONNESS. Certainly we can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on postponing the order of the day for thirty minutes.

Mr. CONNESS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose the Senator is aware that if the bill is postponed for half an hour, or an hour, it does not come up of necessity at the end of that time. It can be brought up then by a vote.

Mr. CONNESS. Everybody knows that the Senate will take up the appropriation bill then. I hope the Senator will not occupy time on that question.

Mr. POMEROY. I know it will be taken up, but it is not like laying it aside informally by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not want any misunderstanding about it. I do not want this appropriation bill to lose its place so that I shall be compelled to struggle with any other bill.

Mr. CONNESS. There is no other bill that will antagonize it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. While I have charge of this bill, I think it is my duty to present it squarely to the Senate. If the Senate say they will take up some other bill in preference to this, then of course I shall submit my individual judgment to theirs. If the motion is to postpone this bill for thirty minutes, and it comes up at the end of that time, I can understand that proposition. If it is simply to postpone this bill and take up the other bill—

Mr. CONNESS. There is no proposition to go on with any other bill than the appropriation bill when this shall be done with—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. "When this shall be done with!"

Mr. CONNESS. It will not occupy more than half an hour, certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is very problematical.

Mr. CONNESS. Give us half an hour on it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Maine, I think, would have his bill up at the end of thirty minutes, provided we lay it over in that way; because I do not agree with the Senator from Kansas that this bill that we are now speaking of would be the unfinished business of yesterday, and would therefore override the special order.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are making the appropriation bill a special order for a particular hour to-day. That is exactly the form in which we always put special orders, that is, to postpone to an hour certain. That, of course, requires a two-thirds vote; and when that hour comes, the unfinished business of yesterday not being before the Senate, of course, as the Chair ruled two or three days ago on just such a question, the bill will come up, but it requires two thirds to make it the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All these questions are under the control of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. At this period of the session we ought not to defer any longer the appropriation bills. There are several appropriation bills that ought to be passed; and I myself will vote with the Senator from Maine against everything until those bills are disposed of. At any rate, all business of minor importance should give way to them; and this measure has been here a long time, and is not so very important as the Senator from California imagines, nor is it so easily disposed of. I hope we shall go on with the regular appropriation bill. There are many amendments pending to it, and I have many myself to offer, and we might as well go on with it. This other matter will lead to general debate and is of very little importance; and I think we ought not to postpone the great business of the session—the appropriation bills—which must be acted on and should not be crowded off. And allow me to say that this habit of getting up some bill in the morning hour, when everything is taken up as a matter of course, and then crowding off the regular business by beseeching and begging, &c., so hard to resist in the Senate, I think ought not to be carried any further. We ought to go on with the regular, legitimate legislative business, and this eight-hour bill can be taken up at some other time.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire briefly to say that it is the fault of my honorable friend from Ohio more than of any other Senator that this bill has been before us so long. At the last session of Congress a similar bill was referred to the committee of which he is the able chairman; but no word has ever come from that committee in relation to it. This is another bill that has passed the House of Representatives in the mean time, and I hope that we shall dispose of it this morning. There is no danger of its leading to any extended debate now. There is no danger that the Senate will not resume the consideration of the appropriation bill as soon as we vote on this measure, and I hope the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will consent to let this measure be disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think it is quite the thing to appeal to me to exercise a personal judgment on this question. While I have the charge of the appropriation bill it is my duty to keep it in its order before the Senate. If the Senate choose to lay it aside and take up some other bill which ought to have precedence of it for the time being, I am entirely content with their judgment. Further than that, I do not think I ought to exercise a personal judgment about it.

Mr. NYE. We are all with the Senator; but let us vote on this bill. We have nothing to do but to take the vote on it. Nobody proposes to talk on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on postponing the order of the day for thirty minutes, on which question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Conness, Cragin, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McCreery, McDonald, Morgan, Morton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Thayer, Wade, Willey, Wilson, and Yates—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conkling, Corbett, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, and Williams—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Doolittle, Drake, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Norton, Rice, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Tipton, Van Winkle, and Vickers—17.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 24, and the nays 15. So the order of the day is postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a question of order; and that is, that it requires a two-thirds vote to postpone a bill to a particular hour by the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To make a bill a special order requires a two-thirds vote; but this is not a motion to make it a special order. The Chair does not think it comes within that rule.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I think if this bill passes at all, it ought to pass without being incumbered by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. Several things are to be considered in this connection. There is very frequently a great difference between skilled and common labor in the labor-markets of the country. It is often very important that the Government should employ labor of the highest degree of skill and pay unusual rates. Under the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, however, it would be impossible for the Government officers to employ any person in any particular trade or employment at rates above the common average in the labor market.

Again, the Senator forgets that we have laws fixing the rate of compensation for particular Government labor here at the seat of Government, and in other parts of the country. As to the employment of other laborers the rates are unfixed. The operation of his amendment, therefore, when it comes to be applied practically, may be found to nullify the proposed law, or to embarrass the Government in the transaction of public business.

We have never heard any complaints, so far as I know, that labor is unduly paid by the Government; that it is inordinately paid; that the rates of compensation allowed by Government officers to those employed by them ought to be reduced, either generally in the country or at particular points; and I take it for granted that upon this question we can rely upon our own agents that they will not pay larger rates than are proper to secure that labor which is necessary in the public service. I see no necessity, therefore, for loading down this bill with a condition or a limitation upon our public officers, which will be found, in practice, extremely inconvenient and operative against the public interests.

There is another point in this same connection. It is very often necessary that particular work to be done by the Government should be done in great haste. A vessel is to be fitted out for some public service in foreign waters, and it may be necessary to pay a little above the ordinary rates in order to secure the work being done promptly and efficiently. Why should you incumber now your public officers with a limitation which may prevent them in an emergency, and when temporary labor is needed, from paying above the ordinary market rate, when by your limitation you prevent them from obtaining the skilled labor at the particular city or place where your public business is to be transacted.

Upon these considerations, in my judgment, it is perfectly clear that if we pass this bill at all we ought not to incumber and embarrass it with the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] expressed some doubt whether a Senator could be found with courage enough to oppose this bill. I rather think in spite of that that I shall say a word or two against it. I have seen a bloodier hour than this upon questions of this sort; so that I am not particularly alarmed so far as that is concerned.

Mr. President, the question here is a very simple one so far as persons in the Government employ are concerned. It is whether we shall pay them one fifth more than persons doing the same kind of labor in private employ receive. That is all there is in it. Is the Senator from Pennsylvania aware that there is a law which requires the Government to pay the highest rate of wages that is paid by private establishments for the same kind of labor? If so, what is the danger arising from the amendment of the Senator from Ohio? It simply says that if you choose to cut down the time of labor in the Government works you shall proportionately cut down the pay; so that those employed by the Government shall not receive more, in fact, than laborers doing the same kind of work in private employ receive for their labor. That is all the question that arises on the proposed amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

What propriety is there in their receiving more? Whether labor is too high or too low I do not know. Usually the law of demand and supply regulates all those matters. There are as good men, skilled laborers, let me tell the Senator from Pennsylvania, out of the navy-yards and the Government work-shops as there are in them; so there is no danger of the Government failing to get skilled labor, if persons desire to go there, because they get the same pay there, and generally under greater advantages. It is known that all laborers prefer to work for the Government, and why? Because their pay is sure and regular; they consider it an advantage, and thence comes the rush to get into Government employment. In addition to that you now propose to give one fifth more for the same kind of labor to persons who work for the Government than is given to persons who work for private individuals. That is precisely the effect of it; and I suggest to gentlemen who make such a cry about economy that they take this matter into consideration, because it will amount to a very large sum of money; how much I cannot tell, because I have not calculated it; but enough to offset all the sheets of paper, and all the newspapers, and all the penknives, and all the little matters of that description of which we have heard so much.

But gentlemen, when they come to a matter which is supposed to affect politics, do not stop to consider how it is to affect the finances of the Government, or how it is to affect the Treasury. I do not make any distinction between parties on that account, for I see on both sides of this Chamber gentlemen representing different parties, running in the same direction, each trying to see which will get ahead of the other.

The Senator from California [Mr. COLE] has advanced or elaborated an argument which would have struck me with some force had it not been for what I see before me. He says that it is absolutely necessary for the development, physically and intellectually, of the laborers of the country that we cut down the time of employment to eight hours a day; that ten hours a day are too much for anybody to work and have time left for the ordinary improvement which we desire all our people to attain. Now, sir, as a general principle, I believe that experience has proved that intellectual development had better be left to the individual. Give the facilities for obtaining information which our system has given, in those certainly which were the free States of the Union for a long period of time, and leave to the individual to do something for himself. Leave the question of improvement to competition, that competition which arises from the nature of our institutions, and you obtain far more than you do by attempting to legislate men into intellectuality. Why, sir, it struck me very singularly how the rule worked. Here is my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON.] He is on the same footing of argument, that men want time for improvement; eight hours is enough to labor. He tells us in the same breath that he worked thirteen hours a day in the field and fifteen hours in the work-shop. My honorable friend from California [Mr. CONNESS] also spoke of his experience in labor. What a specimen of dwarfs we have here arising from too much labor in these two honorable Senators! Men working thirteen or fifteen hours a day have by their own exertions, from their own manhood, and their own talent, and their own power, won their way to the Senate of the United States, and are here the peers of the ablest; and certainly they do not exhibit any very striking indications of great suffering in a physical point of view. My friend from Massachusetts especially does not look as if he had lost either blood or muscle by the labor that he has performed. And yet this argument is gravely advanced in this country, where we know what men do by their own exertions, that we must legislate men from ten hours down to eight in order to give an opportunity for physical and intellectual development; and we are told that our people are injured in this country by too much work! Another argument is that we have such great improvements in machinery and power derived from various natural sources that we do not need so many hours labor on the part of men. I suppose pretty soon we shall get it along down so that we shall not need any muscular labor at all; machinery will do everything! I suppose next we shall come down to six hours a day. But I should like to know whether machinery will ever be so improved as to operate to reverse the rule of nature so that a man cannot do so much in ten hours as he can in eight! I did not know that that was the operation of machinery. That is imputing to machinery a new and singular power that I never before heard of. I did not know that while it lessened labor or increased power it at the same time dwarfed the individual man who directed it!

In my judgment, all this argument, as well as the argument that arises from the desire to make an experiment, amounts to very little. I have not heard of anybody that demanded this except the men working in the Government employ. They think themselves snug in their places, and therefore it is very convenient for them, getting the same wages that people get outside for ten hours' work, to have their time contracted to eight. There are a few thousand—I do not know how many—in the Government employ in the different navy-yards and arsenals. But how does that number compare with the immense number of mechanics and working men throughout the country; and how, to elaborate a little the idea stated by my friend from Vermont, will all the other mechanics in the country feel when they look on and see that those who are in the Government employ are a favored class by the legislation of Congress, and are receiving as much for eight hours' labor as they can receive for ten? Let me tell gentlemen that I do not think this will amount to much in the way of gaining popularity.

Now, sir, I object to this principally on account of the principle involved. I am opposed utterly to the idea of regulating hours of labor by law. The thing has been proposed in several State Legislatures, and I have not heard of any that have adopted it.

Mr. CONNESS. Several have.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know but that there may be one or two such instances.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In those cases the State laws permit special contracts for a longer time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But you see the way we are placed is this: it is no question of special contract how much they shall be paid, letting every man contract for himself; but the question is whether we shall raise the wages of the laborers in Government employ one fifth, because that is the effect of it, by cutting of one fifth of the labor and leaving the wages the same. That is the question, so that we do not stand upon any equality with legislation of the kind that is suggested. But all these attempts to regulate labor by legislation, providing by law how much or how little a man shall work, go upon a false principle. They have a tendency to bring all men to a level, a stupid man upon a level with a smart and capable one. Why not leave men to make their own bargains, and make the best they can of their own powers, physical and intellectual? This is of the same nature with those societies that have been formed in different places, more especially in Great Britain, to regulate the time and the pay of labor. What is the effect? It reduces men precisely to the point where they are all alike; the smart, capable, intelligent man can get no more and do no more than the stupid and lazy one; and when my friend from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] talks about trying an experiment, let me ask him if he supposes that the men in the navy-yards, sure of the same pay for eight hours a day that they now get for ten hours, will go to work to try his experiment and see if they cannot do as much in eight hours as they do in ten? He goes upon the assumption that the moment you pass the law and fix the time of labor at eight hours a day then all the men who work the eight hours will try his experiment to ascertain if they cannot do as much for the Government in eight hours as they could in ten. Do you suppose they will work any harder than they do now? Do you suppose they will be any more laborious? My honorable friend from California [Mr. CONNESS] says that when he worked by the piece he found that he could do as much in eight hours as he could in ten, accomplish as much. Put your laborers in the navy-yards and arsenals to work by the piece, and they will try the same experiment and see how much they can do, and as a general rule, I reckon, they will be glad to work two more hours if they get more pay for doing so. They do not work by the piece as a general rule, unless perhaps to some extent in the armories, but by the day, and they get the same pay whether they do much or little work. What chance is there, then, to try the experiment that my honorable friend from Indiana speaks of? None at all that I can perceive.

Sir, the whole thing, where it has been tried, so far as my reading and observation go, anywhere, has had only the effect to prevent that competition which is of so much importance and consequence to all people in all countries by way of improvement, and more especially in a country like ours.

I oppose it, therefore, upon principle, and because I believe that no good can come of it, and much evil probably will. The moment we have passed this bill there becomes an excitement throughout the country upon the same subject between employer and employed, and the evil example will go forth from this place. Let men make their contracts as they please; let this matter be regulated by that great regulator, demand and supply; and so long as it continues to be, those who are smart, capable, and intelligent, who make themselves skilled workmen, will receive the rewards of their labor, and those who have less capacity and less industry will not be on a level with them, but will receive an adequate reward for their labor.

Is there anything in mechanical labor that should give it the advantage in legislation over all other labor? How many hours a day do our agriculturists work, as a general rule? Do they confine themselves on their own farms to eight hours a day? How many hours do professional men work, and is their labor less exhausting than mechanical labor? Is the labor that we perform in our offices less exhaustive? And yet nobody thinks of providing hours by law for labor of that description. I do not see many men about me who have been injured by such work. Perhaps my honorable friend from Nevada, [Mr. NIXE]—he points to himself—may have hurt himself in that way; but when we hear him speak here, as he does with eloquence and wit so frequently, and with a voice that certainly seems to possess power, we are not apt to suspect that any very serious injury has been done him by the labor he has performed, nor do I see anybody else here that suffers from that cause.

Mr. STEWART. Is that any reason why we should not legislate for the laborer?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The honorable Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is an exception to all general rules. He knows, because he knows. He talks about axioms and things that other people have a difficulty of understanding in fact or in logic. Things strike his mind, appear to him at once, which other people have to labor to attain a knowledge of. That is an advantage he has over us; he certainly has a great advantage over me physically as well as mentally; but I do not think I was ever hurt much by the work I have done.

Now, Mr. President, I regard this thing, in plain language, as a humbug. That is my habit of looking at it. I say it with no disrespect to gentlemen who differ from me, but I think it is a mere sham in itself, a matter that had better be let alone, better be left to regulate itself, and it will regulate itself well. Nobody is hurt in this country by work. It is a country where men, if they are disposed to labor at all, can get along by labor. There are facilities afforded to labor of all kinds, mechanical, agricultural, intellectual; anything that a man chooses to do he can do, and his labor is rewarded. Why, sir, what do we hear every day of different sections of this country except the great demand for labor, the want of labor, the readiness with which men stand to pay for labor if they can have it? Is there any need, therefore, of our regulating and providing how much or how little a man shall receive, according to law? I see no such necessity, and I shall, therefore, vote for the amendment, and whether the amendment prevails or not I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, I do not like to let this bill go to a vote without expressing as briefly as possible the reasons which control my action upon it. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, because if any such bill as this is to pass it is just to the Government that the amendment should prevail.

The bill, in its application to the Government and those employed by the Government, is not like some of the laws which have been adopted by some of the States on the same subject, as the laws adopted by some of the States, my own State among the number, provide for the duration of eight hours as constituting a day's work, unless the parties shall otherwise agree. The present bill is a declaration of a bonus by the Government of the United States of twenty per cent. to its employés. But if what is termed the eight-hour rule is to be applied in the relations between the Government and its employés, it seems to me essential that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio should prevail.

Sir, I must say that from the beginning of this agitation upon the subject of an eight-hour law my opinions have been very similar to those of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN.] In this country the agitation for an eight-hour law did not begin with the industrious laborer; it began with clamorous demagogues in search of votes. And, sir, as a principle, instead of being a benefit to the American working man it is striking a deadly blow at his rights; for if I were a day laborer, as the laboring man is commonly termed, either working at agricultural or mechanical pursuits, or an operative in a factory, I never would consent that the Government under which I live should interfere either with my rates of wages or with my hours of labor. And sooner or later the working men of this country will awaken, if they have not already awakened, to the danger of permitting such legislation to be considered a part of the right-ful operation of Government. Reverse the law which you are attempting to make, and instead of by legislation making eight hours the rule of a day's labor legislate that sixteen hours shall be the rule of a day's labor, and the working men of this country would clearly see the manner in which Government was exceeding its just bounds and limitations.

Sir, believing that any such interference with the relations between capital and labor in a free Government can work only the evil, believing that such legislation as this is an ignoring of the experience of six hundred years, and carrying us back to the days of sumptuary laws and of interference between capital and labor which had been witnessed in the older countries of Europe, I do not desire, for one, to see such experiments revived at the present day in this country.

I have no doubt that under the practical operation of our system of Government the relations of capital to labor will adjust themselves in accordance with the law of supply and demand equitably and best for the permanent prosperity of all parties. Neither have

I any doubt that governmental interference, either Federal or State, can work only evil.

Allusion has been made to the practical working of these laws in the States where they have been established. I know of such practical operation only in my own State. There the law, framed as I have said to be dependent upon the agreement between the parties, has been in operation now for something more than a year, and the law is simply waste paper so far as affecting the relations between the employer and the employé, because both employer and employé have found out by experience that they can make their bargains better for themselves than the Government can make them for them. For a little time the law operated evil in introducing discord between the employer and the employé; but fortunately the influence of our system, the law of supply and demand, the impulse of self-interest on the part of the laborer himself, soon overrode the law and left it where it is to-day, a piece of waste paper, a simple monument of folly in legislation. And the same clamorous demagogues who started originally the demand that in this free country Government should undertake to regulate the relations of capital and labor now insist that the liberty of the parties to contract shall be taken away from them by the action of Government, insist that the failure of the eight-hour law is owing to the fact that we have left to capital and labor the poor privilege of making their own agreements. Fortunately, I am not aware that the people of any State have yet come to the conclusion that in a republican government it is best for us to say that men shall not make their own bargains, but that Legislatures shall make their bargains for them; and without that principle involved in your bills, which shall deny to employer and employed the right of making their own contracts, your eight-hour laws will forever remain waste paper upon your statute-books, the source of discontent and disagreement between capital and labor.

Because, then, the effort which is made here is one which is avowedly to influence legislation by example throughout the United States, I do feel as if in the Senate of the United States, at least, there might be one last refuge for the exercise of common sense upon a subject like this.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The amendment was read, being to insert after the words "United States," in line six, these words:

And unless otherwise provided by law the rate of wages paid by the United States shall be the current rate for the same labor for the same time at the place of employment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Corbett, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Howard, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ross, Sherman, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Williams—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cole, Conkling, Connors, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Tipton, Wade, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Cameron, Chandler, Drake, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Norton, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Trumbull, Vickers, Willey, and Yates—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to inquire whether the time assigned for this bill has expired?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time fixed has expired.

Mr. CONNESS. Let us take the question.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to make one remark before I vote for this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call for the order of the day.

Mr. CONNESS. I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania to withhold his remarks at present. I, too, wish to speak; but let us have a vote on this bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Then I will simply say that if I had time, and the Senate would listen to me, I think I could make an answer to the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut. I think they do great injustice to those who vote for this bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Cole, Connors, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Fowler, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Thayer, Tipton, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Corbett, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sumner, and Van Winkle—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Cameron, Cattell, Conkling, Drake, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Trumbull, Vickers, and Willey—19.

So the bill was passed.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. The title of the bill ought to be changed, it seems to me, to read: A bill to give to Government employes twenty-five per cent. more wages than employes in private establishments receive.

Mr. CONNESS. That is an eccentricity of the honorable Senator from Ohio. The bill has a very good title as it stands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1059) to relieve from disabilities certain persons in States lately in rebellion; and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is House bill No. 605.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

The reading of the bill was continued from the point reached yesterday, and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations were acted on in their order as reached in the reading of the bill.

The first amendment reached was in line seven hundred and sixteen, to strike out "four" and insert "seven," and to strike out "$7,200" and insert "$12,600," so as to appropriate $12,600 for seven clerks of class four in the War Department, instead of $7,200 for four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line seven hundred and nineteen, under the head "War Department," to insert:

For four clerks of class three, $6,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head "War Department," to strike out "six," in line seven hundred and twenty-three, and insert "eight;" and in the same line to strike out "$7,200" and insert "$9,600;" so as to make the clause read:

For three clerks of class two, $4,200; eight clerks of class one, $9,600; one messenger, $1,000; one assistant, at $840; one laborer, at $720; two assistant messengers, at $840 each, $1,680.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven hundred and thirty, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "three clerks;" in the same line to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$5,400;" in line seven hundred and thirty-one, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "nine clerks;" in line seven hundred and thirty-two to strike out

"$1,600" and insert "$14,400;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Adjutant General:

For three clerks of class four, $5,400; nine clerks of class three, $14,400; twenty-seven clerks of class two, $37,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head "Office of Adjutant General," in line seven hundred and thirty-five to strike out "twenty-six" and insert "forty," and to strike out "$31,200" and insert "$48,000."

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "forty" and inserting "sixty," and by increasing the appropriation from $48,000 to $72,000. The number of clerks of the first class in this Department is now one hundred and twenty, and I propose to reduce it one half.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. These are temporary clerks, and will be provided for by a provision to be offered by the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILSON. This is in the Adjutant General's department of the War Department.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We have appropriated for all the clerks that are provided for by law as permanent clerks. When we come to the question of providing for temporary clerks the Senator's motion will be in order.

Mr. WILSON. Very well; I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven hundred and forty-two, to strike out "four" and insert "nineteen," and to strike out "$6,400" and insert "$30,400;" so as to appropriate $30,400 for nineteen clerks of class three in the office of the Quartermaster General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven hundred and forty-four, to strike out "seven" and insert "forty-two," and to strike out "$9,800" and insert "$58,800;" so as to appropriate $58,800 for forty-two clerks of class two in the office of the Quartermaster General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven hundred and seventy-seven, to strike out "four" and insert "fourteen," and to strike out "$5,600" and insert "$19,600;" so as to appropriate $19,600 for fourteen clerks of class two in the office of the Commissary General.

Mr. POMEROY. I wish to inquire whether this amendment adds more clerks?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; it is only providing for clerks in this office in conformity to the existing law.

Mr. POMEROY. I see that the House of Representatives have only provided for four, and our committee propose fourteen. The House must have had some knowledge on the subject different from the knowledge of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We provided according to the estimates, and according to the statutes authorizing these clerks. On a former occasion they were authorized during the continuance of the war.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In line seven hundred and seventy the word "each" should be inserted after "dollars."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made unless it is objected to. The reading will proceed.

The next amendment was in line seven hundred and seventy-nine, to strike out "eight" and insert "twenty-four," and to strike out "$9,600" and insert "$28,800;" so as to appropriate $28,800 for twenty-four clerks of class one in the office of the Commissary General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven hundred and eighty-five, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks," and to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$3,800;" in line seven hundred and eighty-six, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" in line seven hundred and eighty-seven, to strike out "$1,600" and insert "$3,200;" in line seven hundred and eighty-eight, to strike out "two" and insert "four;" and to strike out "$2,800" and insert "$5,600;" in line seven hundred and eighty-nine, to strike out "four" and insert "twenty-five;" and in line seven hundred and ninety, to strike out "$4,800" and insert "$80,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Surgeon General:
For two clerks of class four, $3,600; for two clerks of class three, $3,200; for four clerks of class two, $5,600; for twenty-five clerks of class one, $30,000; for one messenger, $1,000; one laborer, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven hundred and ninety-four, to strike out "three" and insert "four," and to strike out "$5,400" and insert "$7,200;" in line seven hundred and ninety-six, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" in line seven hundred and ninety-seven, to strike out "$5,600" and insert "$7,000;" in line seven hundred and ninety-eight, to strike out "three" and insert "five," and to strike out "$3,600" and insert "$6,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Chief Engineer:
For four clerks of class four, $7,200; for four clerks of class three, $6,400; for five clerks of class two, $7,000; for five clerks of class one, $6,000; for two messengers, at $1,000 each, $2,000; and one laborer, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and three, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "four clerks," and to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$7,200;" in line eight hundred and five, to strike out "four" and insert "eight;" in line eight hundred and six, to strike out "$5,600" and insert "$11,200;" in line eight hundred and seven, to strike out "seven" and insert "twenty;" in line eight hundred and eight, to strike out "$8,400" and insert "$24,000;" and after "dollars," in line eight hundred and nine, to insert "two laborers at $720 each, $1,440;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Chief of Ordnance:
For four clerks of class four, $7,200; for one clerk of class three, $1,600; for eight clerks of class two, $11,200; for twenty clerks of class one, $24,000; one messenger, $1,000; two laborers, at $720 each, $1,440.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to strike out the clause commencing with line eight hundred and three, on page 33, and ending at line eight hundred and eleven, on page 34, and to insert in lieu of the provision there made the words which I send to the Chair. I merely desire to say that my proposition reduces the number of clerks from thirty-three to twenty-five, and reduces the amount of expense nearly four thousand dollars. It is more acceptable to the Chief of Ordnance to have the clerks in his office classified in the manner I propose, as I have a letter from him showing, and I believe it is satisfactory to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator proposes to strike out all in regard to the ordnance office.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes, sir, and to insert in lieu of it what I have sent to the Chair, and I ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

For chief clerk, $2,000.
For six clerks of class four, $10,800.
For six clerks of class three, $9,600.
For eight clerks of class two, $11,200.
For four clerks of class one, $4,800.
For one messenger, $1,000.
For three laborers, at $720 each, $2,160.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This proposition may add to the efficiency of the force of that bureau, and if the honorable Senator from Vermont is satisfied of that fact, I shall not complain; but the effect of it is, I believe, simply to change the grade of the clerks, to transfer them from lower to higher grades.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It gives the bureau one chief clerk and cuts off a large number of clerks of class one, so as to have but twenty-five clerks in all, and the chief of the bureau prefers that to the arrangement in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But then you increase the grades.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But there is an actual saving of near four thousand dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Vermont proposes to provide an officer for whom there is no authority of law. There is no chief clerk in this office now. I ask if the amendment comes from a committee?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It does not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does it not come from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No, sir; I merely introduce it on my own motion based upon a letter of the Chief of Ordnance, General Dyer.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is against the rule.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think, under the circumstances, I ought to invoke the rule.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the rule apply to a reduction of appropriations? Is it not confined to an increase?

Mr. SHERMAN. This is an increase.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No; it is a reduction.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no rule against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule does not apply unless the amendment increases the appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. It changes the existing law, and is not reported by a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it increased the appropriation the proposition would not be in order, but the Chair understands that it does not. It is an amendment to an amendment without increasing the amount appropriated. It is, therefore, in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am rather surprised that my friend from Vermont should propose this amendment. It raises nearly all the clerks in the bureau of ordnance one grade. It provides for one chief clerk and for six clerks of class four in lieu of four clerks of that class allowed by the Committee on Appropriations, and instead of twenty clerks of class one it proposes only three or four, allowing more of the higher grades. That raises the question we have had so much difficulty about, as to the grade of these employés. Their grade is now fixed by law, and this is not the time to increase it. This application has been made from nearly every bureau in the Treasury Department, and, if it is done in the Ordnance Bureau, complaint will be made, and we shall be compelled again to go over the subject of the grades of the officers in the Treasury Department. We have laid all these applications aside for this session, on the principle that we would not at this time attempt to reorganize the various bureaus.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Has it not already been done in the Treasury Department?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill does it in some of the bureaus of that Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There are various changes made by the committee throughout this bill in the parts of it relating to the Treasury Department.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Only putting in what was left out.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I see in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury eleven clerks of class four provided for instead of five, and so on throughout there is quite an increase of the number and an increase of the aggregate amount appropriated.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Perhaps I had better state to the Senate precisely how that is. The House of Representatives framed this bill on the basis of the peace establishment anterior to the war, and left out all the clerks who were denominated war clerks created in 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, and who were expected to continue during the exigency caused by the war. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate having the whole subject before them, the attention of the Departments having been called to it by the action of the other House, came to the conclusion that, in the particulars indicated by the amendments they have reported to this bill, it was not safe to leave out this year those clerks who were appointed for that exigency. So following the appropriations of last year, and following the law authorizing the employment of these clerks during that exigency, we have increased the appropriations to cover those particular clerks appropriated for last year, and also provided for by the statute to which I have referred.

There has been no attempt in this bill to classify any of these Departments; in fact, the Committee on Appropriations have stentily resisted it, and I am inclined to think that the Senator from Vermont will do well not to press his amendment, because it is a classification of one bureau in the War Department for reasons which would apply perhaps to all the Departments. It is simply raising these persons to a higher degree and a larger pay without imposing on them any additional duties.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am rather surprised, I confess, at the opposition to this amendment. Here is a plain proposition reducing the number of clerks in this bureau from thirty-three to twenty-five, and reducing the absolute amount of expenditure nearly four thousand dollars. What harm, pray, could arise if this practice should be introduced and cover all the Departments? I would be glad to see it done. If we can reduce the force, and reduce the expenditure at the same time, who is to be harmed? Is not the Government benefited? If these officers, as I have no doubt is the case, could make their Departments more efficient by employing men of a different grade, why should we not grant them the authority, and cut off from the lower end? I am perfectly willing.

Mr. SHERMAN. The result would be that next session we should have an application from this same Department for more clerical force, or they would assign temporary clerks to it. I warn the Senator from Vermont that if he opens the door in the Bureau of Ordnance for this kind of reform, as he calls it, he might as well take up the whole subject and open it. As to the Treasury Department, we have a bill here carefully prepared, which does in every bureau of that Department precisely what he proposes now to do as to the Bureau of Ordnance, which proposes to nominally reduce the number and increase the salary by promoting the clerks a grade.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. And reduce the whole expense.

Mr. SHERMAN. It reduces the whole expense nominally; but that, I take it, will be covered up by temporary clerks, and in other ways.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have no idea that there will be an application next year for any increase of service. I have merely proposed to change the proposition offered by the Committee on Appropriations. They propose four clerks of class four; I propose six. They propose one clerk of class three; I propose six. They propose eight clerks of class two; I propose the same. They propose twenty clerks of class one; I propose four.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words the amendment promotes them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have here a table carefully prepared by the chief clerk of the War Department for the use of the committee, showing precisely what was desirable in this office, and we made the bill conform to it. It will be seen by this table that this bureau has its fair proportion of the higher classes of clerks, and I think it would hardly be fair to the other bureaus to allow this increase of the higher clerkships to be made here. It will certainly lead to a similar application from the other Departments, and I do not believe it will add one particle to the efficiency of the force.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and fifty-two; after the word "general" to insert "corner of F and Fifteenth streets," and in line eight hundred and fifty-five, to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Building occupied by Paymaster General, corner of F and Fifteenth streets:
For superintendent, watchmen, rent, fuel, lights, and miscellaneous items, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and seventy-two, to strike out "six" and insert "four;" after "dollars," in line eight hundred and seventy-five, to insert "four clerks of the first class, $4,800;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,200; one fourth-class clerk, (also as disbursing clerk), $2,000; four clerks of the fourth class, $7,400; five clerks of the third class, $8,000; three clerks of the second class, $4,200; four clerks of the first class, $4,800; one messenger, $1,000; one assistant messenger, $840; two laborers, $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and eighty-three, to strike out "third," before "class," and insert "fourth;" in the same line to strike out "$1,600" and insert "$1,800;" after "dollars," in line eight hundred and eighty-four, to insert "two clerks of the third class, $3,200;" in line eight hundred and eighty-five, to strike out "three clerks" and insert "one clerk;" and in line eight hundred and eighty-six, to strike out "$4,200" and insert "$1,400;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, $3,500; for civil engineer, $2,000; chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk of the fourth class, $1,800; two clerks of the third class, $3,200; one clerk of the second class, $1,400; one clerk of the first class, $1,200; one draughtsman, $1,400; one messenger, $700; two laborers, $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "dollars," in line eight hundred and ninety-four, to insert "one clerk of the fourth class, $1,800;" in line eight hundred and ninety-six, to strike out "second" before "class" and insert "third;" in the same line to strike out "$2,800" and insert "$3,200;" in line eight hundred and ninety-seven, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "three clerks," and in the same line to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$3,600;" so as to make the clause read:

For the compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, $3,500; chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk of the fourth class, $1,800; two clerks of the third class, $3,200; three clerks of the first class, $3,600; one messenger, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line nine hundred and two, to strike out "second" before "class" and insert "third," and in line nine hundred and three to strike out "$1,400" and insert "$1,600;" so as to make the clause read:

For the compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Navigation, $3,500; chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk of the third class, $1,600; one clerk of the first class, $1,200; one messenger, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "dollars," in line nine hundred and thirty-one, to insert "one clerk of the fourth class, $1,800; three clerks of the third class, $4,800;" in line nine hundred and thirty-three, to strike out "four" and insert "six;" in line nine hundred and thirty-four, to strike out "$5,600" and insert "$7,200;" in line nine hundred and thirty-five, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "three clerks;" and in the same line to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$3,600;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, $3,500; chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk of the fourth class, $1,800; three clerks of the third class, $4,800; six clerks of the second class, $7,200; three clerks of the first class, $3,600; one messenger, $1,000; one laborer, $725.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines nine hundred and forty-two and nine hundred and forty-three, to strike out "two clerks of the second class, $2,800," and to insert "one clerk of the fourth class, $1,800; one clerk of the third class, $1,600;" and after dollars, in line nine hundred and forty-three, to insert "one laborer, $720;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the chief of the bureau of medicine and surgery, $3,500; one clerk of the fourth class, $1,800; one clerk of the third class, $1,600; one messenger, $1,000; one laborer, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ten hundred and forty-one, to strike out "Fifth" before "Auditor" and insert "First;" and in the same line, after the word "Department," to insert "and revised and certified by the First Comptroller according to law;" so as to make the clause read:

Agricultural statistics:
For collecting statistics and material for annual report, $10,000: Provided, That hereafter the accounts of the Agricultural Department shall be audited by the First Auditor of the Treasury Department, and revised and certified by the First Comptroller according to law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ten hundred and forty-eight, to increase the appropriation "for purchases for library, laboratory, and museum" for the Department of Agriculture from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, after line ten hundred and sixty-seven:

Department of Education:
For compensation of commissioner of education, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class four, $1,200; and one clerk of class three, $1,600.
For stationery, blank books, freight, express charges, library, miscellaneous items, and extra clerical help, $10,600; in all, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ten hundred and ninety-four, to increase the appropriation "for wages of workmen and adjusters" at the branch mint at San Francisco from $150,000 to $191,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for the San Francisco branch mint, to strike out "$80,000," in line ten hundred and ninety-six, and insert "in addition to available profits, $69,000," and to strike out the following proviso in lines ten hundred and ninety-seven, ten hundred and ninety-eight, ten hundred and ninety-nine, and eleven hundred:

Provided, That hereafter all the "available profits" of the United States Mint and branches shall be covered into the Treasury, to be expended only by a specific appropriation.

So as to make the clause read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, repairs, and wastage, in addition to available profits, $69,000.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and forty-five, to increase the appropriation "for salaries of the clerks and messengers in the office of Assistant Treasurer at Boston" from $15,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and forty-eight, to increase the appropriation "for salaries of clerks, messengers, and watchmen in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at New York" from $60,000 to $126,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance direct me to move to amend the amendment by making the amount $157,120, which is the estimate.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and fifty-one, to increase the appropriation "for salaries of clerks, messengers, and watchmen in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at Philadelphia" from $15,000 to $24,885.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and fifty-four, to strike out "six" and insert "ten;" and in line eleven hundred and fifty-five, after the word "thousand" to insert "five hundred and sixty;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of clerks, messengers, and watchmen in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis, $10,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and fifty-seven, to strike out "six" and to insert "nine;" and in line eleven hundred and fifty-eight, after the word "thousand" to insert "six hundred;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of clerks, porter, and watchmen in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at New Orleans, $9,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and sixty, to strike out "five" and to insert "six;" and in line eleven hundred and sixty-one, after the word "thousand" to insert "nine hundred;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation to stamp clerk, cashier, and clerk in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco, $6,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and sixty-four, to insert "eight hundred" before the word "dollars;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of the depository at Santa Fe, and the clerk, watchman, and porter in his office, $4,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and sixty-eight, to strike out "three" and to insert "five;" and also to strike out "five hundred" and to insert "nine hundred and forty;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of clerks in the office of the depository at Louisville, $5,940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and seventy-one, to insert "six hundred" before the word "dollars;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of clerks in the office of the depository at Chicago, $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and seventy-three, to strike out "two" and insert "three" before "thousand;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of clerks and watchmen in the office of the depository at Pittsburg, $3,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and seventy-six, to strike out "three" and insert "seven," and also to insert after the word "thousand" the words "six hundred;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of clerks and messengers in the office of the depository at Baltimore, $7,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven hundred and seventy-nine, to strike out "eight" and to insert "ten," and after the word "thousand" to insert the words "two hundred;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of clerks in the office of the depository at Cincinnati, $10,200.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to move to insert "$14,850" instead of the appropriation made in that clause.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to say that the appropriation now is precisely in harmony with the provisions of the law. There was an estimate submitted for $4,000 additional, but there was no evidence which authorized the Committee on Appropriations to allow it. If the Senator has information on that subject I should like to hear it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a letter in my hand from the Secretary, in which he desires this amount, on account of the large increased character of the business, for the employment of some additional clerical force in the city of Cincinnati, and the Committee on Finance concluded to allow it, after examination.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Committee on Finance have examined the question so as to be satisfied that that additional force is necessary I submit it to the Senate without opposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the committee, to strike out "$10,200" and insert "$14,850."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following section:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of section ten of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1867, be, and they are hereby, extended to one additional newspaper in the District of Columbia from the date of the approval of said act, the same to be selected by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations are now gone through with, with the exception of the amendment which was passed over on page 18, from line four hundred and thirty-one to line four hundred and thirty-eight, in relation to the clerks of the First Auditor of the Treasury, which will now be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let that be passed over for the present. I have quite a number of amendments to offer from the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have some other amendments that I desire to offer. On page 36, line eight hundred and eighty, I move to strike out the words "chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, $3,500 for." That officer receives compensation as an officer of the Navy, and this appropriation is not necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 37, line eight hundred and ninety-two, I move to strike out the words "chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, $3,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 37, line nine hundred, I move to strike out the words, "chief of the Bureau of Navigation, $3,500."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why do you strike those out?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Because they are officers of the Navy and get their pay in that way.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 38, line nine hundred and six, I move to strike out the words, "chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, $3,500."

Mr. COLE. I suggest to the Senator that by these amendments he leaves each clause to read, "for compensation of the chief clerk," &c., without specifying the bureau.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The words "of the Bureau of Ordnance" should also be inserted in line nine hundred and seven, after the words "chief clerk." I add that to my amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask to have a similar amendment made in the clauses relating to the Bureaus of Yards and Docks, Equipment and Recruiting, and Navigation, by inserting the title of the bureau after the words "chief clerk."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 38, line nine hundred and twenty-two, I move to strike out the words, "chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, $3,500," and to insert after the words "chief clerk," in line nine hundred and twenty-three, the words "of the Bureau of Construction and Repair."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 38, line nine hundred and twenty-two, I move to strike out the words, "chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, $3,500," and to insert after the words "chief clerk," in line nine hundred and twenty-three, the words "of the Bureau of Steam Engineering."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 38, line nine hundred and twenty-nine, I move to strike out the words "chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, $3,500," and after the words "chief clerk," in line nine hundred and thirty-one to insert "of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 3, line fifty-two, in the clause "one special policeman, $864," I move to strike out "$864" and to insert "$1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page twenty, line four hundred and seventy-nine, I move to strike out "four" where it first occurs, and to insert "five."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have an amendment to that clause.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will it cover that?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well; then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report quite a number of amendments to this bill, and I will commence on page 20. In line four hundred and seventy-seven I move to strike out "seven" and insert "nine;" in line four hundred and seventy-nine I move to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "forty;" in line four hundred and eighty I move to strike out the words "four of them transferred from Third Auditor's office;" in line four hundred and eighty-one I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-seven;" in lines four hundred and eighty-three and four hundred and eighty-four I move to strike out the words in parenthesis "including additional to two clerks of class three transferred to class four;" and at the end of the clause I move to strike out "$191,060" and to insert "$229,160;" so that the clause, if thus amended, will read:

For compensation of the Auditor of the Treasury, for the Post Office Department, chief clerk, nine clerks of class four, (additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk,) forty clerks of class three, sixty-four clerks of class two, thirty-seven clerks of class one, one messenger, one assistant messenger, and eleven laborers, employed in his office, in all $229,160.

Mr. POMEROY. Has that amendment been before the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. An amendment covering much broader ground has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I have consulted with the chairman of that committee about it; but instead of offering the amendment in broad terms, as I proposed to do, I will take it up in detail, changing and modifying the bill so as to meet the case. The amendments I shall offer are not quite so extensive as the Finance Committee reported. This identical matter has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. POMEROY. If the rule has been complied with, I have no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We had notice of the amendment, and considered it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If any Senator desires an explanation of this amendment, I have here a long letter from the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department, which can be read. The Committee on Finance have examined it carefully. This amendment continues the present force.

Mr. POMEROY. I was about to inquire whether it provided for any increase of the present force?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. POMEROY. There has been before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads an application for some officer there to be paid an additional salary, who should have charge of the foreign mails.

Mr. SHERMAN. This has nothing to do with that. That relates to the Post Office Department; this is in regard to the Auditor in the Treasury Department.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The amendment does not provide for any additional force. It simply makes a provision that the Committee on Appropriations did not feel that they had any authority to make without its coming from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POMEROY. While this clause provides for the office of an Auditor of the Treasury, he is the Auditor who audits the accounts of the Post Office Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 23, line five hundred and forty-two, I move to strike out "six" and to insert "eight," before "million," so that the clause will read:

For salaries and expenses of collectors, assessors, assistant assessors, revenue agents, inspectors, and superintendents of exports and drawbacks, together with the expense of carrying into effect the various provisions of the several acts providing internal revenue, excepting items otherwise estimated for, $8,000,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is quite an important amendment. I should like to hear an explanation of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain it. The present expenditures of the Internal Revenue Bureau are something over nine million dollars. The estimates for this year were $9,000,000; but the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, without having any official information on the subject, went upon the supposition that the reduction of the revenue would, as a matter of course, reduce the expenditures. Careful examinations have been had on this subject, and I will read what is said by Mr. Rollins in regard to it. Senators will observe that this item covers the salaries and expenses of collectors, assessors, and the army of officials employed by the Internal Revenue Bureau. Mr. Rollins says:

"The amount actually drawn from the Treasury thus far during the present fiscal year to meet the expense of assessing and collecting the revenue has been at the rate of about nine million dollars per annum. Should the changes which I understand the Committee of Ways and Means to favor be incorporated into the statute, I cannot think that the reduction of expenditures would be more than $800,000. The receipts last year were, in round numbers, $265,000,000, and the estimated receipts under the proposed changes are somewhere about one hundred and sixty million dollars, making a reduction of some forty per cent.; but it will be at once apparent that the expenses of assessment and collection cannot be reduced in the same ratio. Assessors and collectors are paid a salary of $1,500 per annum, and, in addition to this, a commission decreasing as the collections of the several districts increase. It is presumed that there will be no reduction in the salaries paid to these officers, and, as the rate of commissions decreases with an increase of the amount collected, a diminution of collections cannot result in a corresponding diminution of commissions. The amount paid for rent of offices cannot be materially reduced, and many other incidental expenses will be as great when small amounts are collected as now. In some of the city districts there can be under the proposed changes a reduction in the number of assistant assessors, but in a large portion of the country at present there is but one assistant assessor for a county, and in some cases one of these officers attends to two or three counties. Of course, so long as taxes are to be collected from distillers and brewers, or in fact so long as taxes of any kind are to be collected, an assistant assessor cannot effectually supervise much more territory than he does at present."

It is understood to be the intention of the Committee of Ways and Means to recommend the imposition of a light tax upon sales upon many of the manufacturers whose products are exempted from the excise tax to which they have heretofore been subject, and it is evident that the expense of assessing a tax of one tenth or one half of one per cent. will be as great as that of assessing a tax of five per cent. While the amount of work to be performed by revenue officers will somewhat diminish, I cannot think the reduction of expenses can safely be estimated at more than $800,000."

In addition to that the new tax bill now pending in the House of Representatives, which will pass in some form, will largely increase the machinery for collecting the tax on whisky and tobacco, and will, no doubt, add to the product of the tax. The estimate of Mr. Rollins is that the amount of the expenditures will be at least $8,200,000. The Committee on Finance concluded to appropriate $8,000,000. I have a letter also from the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that if only $6,000,000 were appropriated undoubtedly the amount would be exhausted by next winter, and a deficiency would have to be called for. I see no object in the world, as the mere amount of the appropriation cannot limit the amount of expenditures, in cutting down the amount in this way. We might as well make an appropriation sufficient to cover the expenditures. As the expenditures are regulated by law and the amount of the salaries, and the commissions and the expenses of the offices are fixed by law, there can be no object in cutting down the mere aggregate of appropriation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Does not a portion of the $8,000,000 go to pay special agents and others appointed ad libitum?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; it does.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then it is not fixed by law, because the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint as many agents as he pleases and pay them what he pleases.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are probably three or four hundred officers whose pay is not fixed by law. I think the pay of some of those special agents is fixed by law. At any rate, the whole thing is regulated by law. The law in that case authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make certain allowances, and they all come out of this fund.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The more we appropriate the more of these persons may be employed. My understanding is that there is no limitation upon this authority. The Senate passed a bill some months ago, I think, limiting the number of special agents to be employed in the Departments, and regulating the subject; but it has never passed the other House, and has not become a law. My understanding is that the Secretary is exercising the authority, either with or without law, to appoint special agents and fix their compensation, and that we have these agents all over the United States. Now, if we appropriate $8,000,000 instead of $6,000,000, we know that the pressure will be very great to get these places, and very likely a great many more will be appointed than would be if a less amount was appropriated.

Mr. SHERMAN. That does not follow at all. This is a fund set apart for the payment of the compensation of collectors and assessors and all expenses of the internal revenue. If Congress has been unwise in allowing the appointment of special agents to too great a number, Congress should change that law; but as a matter of course that will not affect the amount to be appropriated. The Committee on Finance took a business view of the subject. My own impression is that the expense of collecting the revenue will come to about nine millions probably next year, as this year, and a deficiency will be called for; but it is utterly idle to cut down the appropriation from nine to six millions without any reason. Experience has shown that $9,000,000 is required to carry on that service.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The estimates for this year are $9,000,000. The appropriation last year was $6,000,000. The House of Representatives, in presenting the bill to the Senate, followed the appropriation of last year. The Senator from Ohio perhaps knows, but I do not, whether the $6,000,000 last year was found to be adequate for that service.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; there was a deficiency.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think there has been any deficiency this year; and unless there was a surplus from a former year, it would appear that the inference which the House drew from the fact that $6,000,000 was appropriated last year for this service without any application for a deficiency bill this year was justified. The Committee on Appropriations had no information on this subject except a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, such as has been read by the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I rise only, to say, therefore, in justification of the action of the Committee on Appropriations, that finding that the appropriation last year was $6,000,000, and that no deficiency was asked for this year, and not being apprised that the services of this Department for this year are any larger than those of last year, we very readily accepted the proposition from the House, and took it this year at what it was last year.

Then there is another consideration about it which I submit to the Senator from Ohio, and that is, that we are to meet together again in December, and if it should be found then that this fund of $6,000,000 is running short an application for an increase can then be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that the expense last year was a little over nine million dollars. For the current year now running on I have already read the statement of the Commissioner, that the expenditures are on the basis of about nine million dollars. It is not worth while for us to appropriate much less. We propose to appropriate $8,000,000; and, indeed, I have no doubt that a deficiency will be called for, even with that sum. It is scarcely worth while to make appropriations with a view to deficiency bills. We had better appropriate at once what is sufficient. Let me say here that there is no country in the world where the same amount of internal revenue and excise is collected at so cheap a rate as in this country. The entire expense of collecting our internal revenue is less than four per cent.—between three and four per cent. In England it is over six per cent. A great deal of misapprehension exists in the public mind in regard to the expense of collecting our internal revenue. The expense of collecting the internal revenue is a little less pro rata than the expense of collecting customs, although the great body of them is collected in the single port of New York, the entire expense being about nine million dollars for collecting about two hundred and sixty-five million dollars of internal revenue, and the expense of collecting customs being about the same—nine million dollars—for collecting a much smaller sum in gold. I merely make that observation in passing to show that this sum is not at all out of the way.

Mr. POMEROY. There are districts where the expense does not exceed one per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. That may be; but I am taking the whole country together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 23, line five hundred and fifty-four, I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert "one hundred." It is evidently a mistake.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think that is so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to state first how that happened. This is the appropriation for the contingent fund for the Treasury Department. Heretofore the contingent fund has been divided between the Treasury proper and the heads of the various bureaus. Now they are all put under the head of the Department, and I think very properly so; and the estimate was $136,200. We struck out the appropriation for the bureaus, and gave the entire sum to the head of the Department for distribution among the bureaus, holding him responsible instead of the heads of the bureaus.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is on page 23, line five hundred and fifty-four, to strike out "ten" and insert "one hundred" before the word "thousand."

Mr. CONNESS. How will it read then?

The CHIEF CLERK. The clause, if amended, will read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses of the Treasury Department:

In the office of the Secretary of the Treasury and the several bureaus, including copying, labor, binding, sealing ships' registers, translating foreign languages, advertising, and extra clerk hire for preparing and collecting information to be laid before Congress, and for miscellaneous items, $100,000.

Mr. CONNESS. And the bill now reads "$10,000?"

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator must not suppose that this is an increase. Formerly we used to appropriate for the contingent expenses of each bureau; but here they are all put together. It is probably a less amount than is usually appropriated.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is something like $36,200 less.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 23, after line five hundred and fifty-seven, I move to insert the following:

For temporary clerks in the Treasury Department, $150,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to classify the clerks according to the character of their services.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is not that an increase?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; it is a little less than it was. I will explain the matter to the Senate so that they will understand it. The ordinary appropriation for temporary clerks and for the extra allowance to officers is $210,000. We had a good deal of controversy here two or three times about this item, especially the extra allowance to officers and employes. Early this session a bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Finance reorganizing the Treasury Department, which would absorb this item, and which provided for a redistribution of the employes of the Treasury Department; but the Committee on Finance, after some consideration, concluded that now was not a favorable time for the reorganization of the Treasury Department. That bill generally increased the compensation of the employes. It will, however, be necessary for the present to keep up an appropriation for temporary clerks. Every one of these clerks is now employed. They are divided among the different bureaus. The great body of them, I believe, are now in the Second Auditor's office and the other Auditors' offices. They are all now employed, and probably a greater number than this appropriation provides for would be required. It is necessary to keep up this appropriation. I have here letters without number that I could read to the Senate upon it. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury stating that he cannot get along without these clerks; and I have no doubt of the fact. The Committee on Appropriations examined it, and I believe they are satisfied of the fact. I have nothing further to say in regard to it. It is a matter of which every Senator can judge as well as I.

It must be remembered that the Treasury Department are now discharging duties growing out of the war. The House Committee on Appropriations cut down this bill upon the basis of expenditures before the war. That might possibly be correct as to some of the Departments, but it is not as to the Treasury Department. The great mass of accounts that sprang up during the war are now going through the different offices there. It is necessary to preserve and continue the war force until those claims are disposed of. In my judgment, without additional clerical force beyond what was fixed as the regular force before the war, it is impossible to carry on the operations of the Treasury Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not suppose it is of any avail to try to resist an appropriation for anything that is asked for by the Treasury Department. This is an old acquaintance under a new name. We used to call this extra compensation to the clerks. Now it is called $175,000 for the employment of temporary clerks. One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars is a very considerable sum; and that is to be placed at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to employ such clerks as he pleases, and for such purposes as he pleases; and the reason given for it by the Senator from Ohio is that this bill is framed on the basis of the business which was done in this Department before the war.

But if you will look through the bill you will find that he has been increasing the clerks at the rate of a score at a time all along through the bill, upon the ground that the House of Representatives had made a mistake in framing the bill, and had framed it on the old peace establishment when there was not near as much business in the Treasury Department as there is now. A very few moments ago the number of clerks was increased very largely in some of the bureaus of the Treasury Department; and we find by looking at the bill all along through it amendments increasing the number of clerks. I have right before me now, on page 17, an increase of six clerks of class four; that is the highest class of clerks, I believe, they have in the Departments, an increase from five to eleven by this bill. But that was not sufficient. It was sufficient to carry all these increases without objection in the Senate, to state that this bill had been framed under a misapprehension. Then after getting through with all those they come in with a small sum of $175,000 for temporary clerks; and the reason for that is the same as in the other cases, that this bill has been framed on the basis of the business done in the Department before the war. As I said when I rose, I have no other object than simply to call attention to it; I do not suppose it will be of any use to attempt to defeat it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Perhaps I ought to say a word in explanation for the benefit of the Senator from Illinois, if of nobody else. I once stated, but I suppose it escaped the attention of the Senator from Illinois, although my remarks were called out by his inquiry, that the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the House seemed to have based this bill upon the clerical force authorized anterior to the war. There was an additional clerical force which was authorized during the war that was left out. The representations to the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate from the several Departments were that the service would suffer by leaving out this last class of clerks, the clerks who were called war clerks, and who had been provided for by the statutes in the years 1863, 1864, and 1865; that in many of the bureaus there was still a necessity for continuing these clerks. We had the information from each of the bureaus in the Treasury, in the War, and in the Navy Department, and addressed ourselves to the absolute necessity in those several bureaus for a longer continuance of this class of clerks. The apparent increase of clerks to which the Senator refers here is not, in fact, an increase of clerks. It is simply a continuance of the clerks provided for by law heretofore, as I have stated. Therefore, all the amendments which have been presented to the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate have been to supply clerks absolutely provided for by law heretofore, and the necessity for the continuance of whom became obvious to the committee upon as careful an examination as they were able to give to the subject.

Now, it is said that outside of the clerks which were authorized anterior to the war, and outside of what I have denominated the war clerks, there is a large number of clerks called temporary clerks. How many? The committee had no precise information on that subject. They were provided for by an appropriation of $210,000 last year, and by former appropriations for the supply of temporary clerks in the several Departments, at the discretion of the heads of the Departments, up, of course, to the amount of the appropriation. That was a subject that the Committee on Appropriations did not think belonged to them, and therefore we sent all those applications for temporary clerks, and the appropriations necessary for temporary clerks, to the Committee on Finance, whose duty we believed it to be—or at any rate we did not think the duty devolved on us—to inquire what the service absolutely demanded in regard to the temporary clerks. Contenting ourselves to follow the provisions of the law and the service as indicated by the statutes, we turned over to the Committee on Finance the applications from the Treasury Department, from the War Department, &c., for the continuance of temporary clerks. Now, the Senator from Ohio, having examined that subject, comes here and moves for an appropriation of $150,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars I believe his proposition is.

Mr. SHERMAN. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is the amount.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In lieu of $210,000 appropriated last year, telling you that a certain portion of this temporary force is still necessary. The Committee on Appropriations had the same information and examined it to some extent. I will state a single case. Take the case of the Second Comptroller, whose duties are not less than they were during the war, but are greater.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Have we not given him an additional number of clerks at this session of Congress?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; we have not. I will state exactly how that is, and I will take that case to illustrate the whole service and the action of the committee in regard to it. Here is the Second Comptroller, whose duties are greater than they were during any part of the war, who is himself a laborious and very meritorious officer, as everybody knows who knows anything about his office. The committee on the part of the House cut him down to the condition of that office before the war. That was absolutely without justification, of course. The committee on the part of the Senate have increased that force, giving to him the additional clerks which were authorized by what I have denominated the statutes increasing the war clerical force. But he had forty-three clerks in his bureau whom he had been employing, and who were not provided for either by the permanent acts anterior to the war or by the statutes denominated war statutes; and having given him that, as by reference to page 18 of the bill it will be seen the committee on the part of the Senate did, there were still forty-three clerks in his bureau whom he had employed last year, and whom we became perfectly satisfied were necessary to the execution of the work in his bureau; and yet there was no law which justified the Committee on Appropriations in providing for those forty-three clerks. That is precisely what I understand the Senator from Ohio, as chairman of the Committee on Finance, whose business it is to speak for that Department, to be attempting to provide for by this amendment; and to that extent, of course, he has the approval, so far as I understand, of the Committee on Appropriations.

I have no means of knowing, beyond the facts I have stated, to what extent the temporary force of the several Departments in the employment of clerks ought to go. But to the extent of the forty-three clerks in the Second Comptroller's office, I am thoroughly satisfied, from examination into the affairs of that bureau and the force they have already there, and the force that is required now to keep up that bureau, that that provision for forty-three temporary clerks ought to be made.

While I am up, I wish to make one remark in regard to the proviso in this amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I see it is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to classify the clerks. If that relates to the temporary clerks contemplated to be employed by this appropriation, I do not see the necessity of it. If it contemplates a classification of the entire force of the Department, then I should be strenuously opposed to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suppose it does not; but if it relates to the temporary clerks I do not see why it should be necessary to classify them. Of course, whenever they are employed, they will be put to discharge the duties for which they are capable and will be paid the compensation attached to that grade. Unless it is with a view of fixing the salaries, I hardly see why it can be necessary.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, these matters involving the employment of clerks in the Treasury Department and expenditures there seem to be mysterious at least. The more we hear them discussed the less we know about them. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not appear to give us much information. The most material sources of expenditure there he tells us he knows nothing about; and it is but a guess of money to fit an anticipated service, or state of service at best. Outside of and over the door of that great granite building the word "mystery" should be written. There is no exact information touching the performances there, nor do the facts appear to be ascertainable. I had expected great things from the senior Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] who once presided there, and during whose presidency, so to speak, of that institution, I supposed all was right, and undoubtedly it was. But at the beginning of this session, I think, he introduced a bill here for the reorganization of the Treasury Department. It was either at the beginning of this or the last session, I forget now which, it is so long ago.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This session.

Mr. CONNESS. And he promised, and the press promised upon the presentation of that bill, that what was unascertainable heretofore would, in the future, be ascertainable; what was impossible to be known would be made possible; and that the service would be so organized that great public benefit would grow from the reformation, and a great decrease in public expenditure be the result. I have waited patiently, and if it were not presuming I should have from time to time called to ascertain where that bill had gone, what had become of it—the bill to reorganize the Treasury Department, introduced by the honorable Senator from Maine. I do not know where it is now. I do not know that we shall ever hear of it again; but we do hear of these $150,000 appropriations to meet additional clerical service, demands for twenty, thirty, forty, and fifty clerks here, and as many there, and hundreds of thousands of dollars for contingent funds.

My friend, the honorable Senator from Illinois, with all the perspicacity known to be possessed by him, from time to time endeavors to reflect light upon this mysterious question; but I do not know that he has made any progress. I have heard him until, I will not say I have tired, because I always listen to him with pleasure, but as soon as he comes up on this subject, he develops other Senators who fly to the defense, and session after session of Congress passes, and we have the same order of things, the same matters under, as he has stated, a little different name, are reintroduced here.

I think, if I am not mistaken, that the bill to reorganize the Treasury Department went to the Committee on Finance. Perhaps the chairman of that committee can tell us something about it; why it has not been reported here; why we have not to-day the advantage of all the experience of the Senator from Maine upon this subject; and why it has not taken the form of law. I hope that we shall hear from that bill and know something about it; so that the generous chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who comes forward here and adds to the appropriation for the Treasury Department, I have no doubt, as he is informed in a reasonable way, but makes them plethoric, full, big, and fair in proportions, shall have work remitted to him in future, and be able to rise and tell us with some exactness how many clerks there are in this bill, what their grades and classes, what their exact compensation; so that we may vote sums of money demanded by the public service upon ascertained data. I think we had better have a general inquiry as to what has become of the reform bill. I wonder, indeed, that the honorable Senator who gave it his labor and produced it has not looked after it and piloted it through the mazes of senatorial action. These are inquiries that I should like to have answered. Then our friend from Illinois might be spared the labor that he gives to this subject of finance from time to time, and I do not know that it would not lead generally to better humor all over, as well as better government. I should really like, in earnest, to know what has become of the great reform bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should really like to know how to reply to the Senator from California; but I believe I will not enter into any extended discussion of this subject. He asks what has become of a bill referred to the Committee on Finance. I have stated that that bill—a very excellent bill—is before the Committee on Finance, and has been carefully considered by that committee; but it proposes to increase the compensation of nearly all the employés of the Treasury Department, in order to make it more efficient, and the Committee on Finance were not disposed to do that at the present session of Congress. They did not wish to increase the expenditures of the Treasury or of any other Department. They thought it was better to postpone the reorganization of this Department until the clerical force could be reduced. That is a sufficient answer to that. In fact, I believe the Senator from Maine is satisfied with our course; or if not satisfied, at least he did not express his dissatisfaction.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from California no doubt would desire to cast some reproach on the Secretary of the Treasury in finding fault on this subject. I do not think that is right. Whether we like the Secretary of the Treasury or not, he has to administer a great Department of the Government, and I believe he administers it honestly, as he conceives. He has no more force now than has been employed for years. In order to satisfy the Senator that we have pretty full information on the subject, I ask the Senator now to listen while a letter is read from the Secretary of the Treasury on this very point; but I doubt very much whether he will listen to it. I ask that the communication which I send to the desk be read, and then I will add some further statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The communication will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 31, 1868.

SIR: Respectfully referring to my letter of the 23th ultimo, I have the honor to submit herewith the result of the reexamination of the estimates for the support of the Treasury Department during the ensuing fiscal year, which are now under consideration by the Senate Committee on Appropriations in connection with the pending legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and also by the Finance Committee.

The Department is ignorant of the basis from which the calculations of the bill as it now stands, were made. Our estimates were carefully prepared, and while I have caused them to be reduced somewhat in amount, still a sense of duty in the discharge of the vast and important trusts devolved by law upon this Department restrains me from advising such reductions as are comprised in the present bill. No one appreciates more sensibly than the Secretary the necessity for economy in the public expenditures, passing as all do in review before him; no one will endeavor more earnestly to promote this end; but to accomplish it he should be provided with proper means.

There are several considerations which should not be lost sight of in examining the expenditures of the Treasury Department, and especially in attempting to reduce them, now that the rebellion has ceased, to the amount of the expenditures prior to its commencement in 1861.

Reduction upon such a scale is hopeless for many years to come, until we can dispense with the internal revenue system, not in existence before the war, the annual collections of which in a single year exceeded three hundred and ten million dollars, and must hereafter continue to be large; until our receipts from customs are reduced to $64,000,000 collected under specific rates of duty as in 1860, instead of $170,000,000 at ad valorem rates as at present; until our public debt of $2,500,000,000, including our currency circulation, is paid off, the accounts of expenditures which gave rise to it adjusted, and the current business growing out of it terminated. So long must the expenses of this Department in nearly every branch of its operations remain at about their present standard, reduced, of course, from time to time as accumulated business is by degrees disposed of. The fact is that the accumulations of the war are not yet cleared away notwithstanding our best efforts to this end. In several of the accounting offices especially, the time of a great number of clerks has been diverted from this accumulated business to the settlement of bounty claims which pressed upon the Department under the acts passed since the war, but to carry which into effect no additional force was provided until within a few weeks.

It should be remembered, as stated in my former letter, that all public accounts are settled by law at the Treasury Department and every dollar of public receipts or expenditures thus passes through it, involving every branch of the Government. Hence the business is increased or diminished by changes in the business of every other executive branch, but not in the same ratio. Local activity in either the State, War, Navy, Post Office, or Interior Departments may not perhaps extend to any other of those Departments; it does extend, however, to the Treasury, and a slight general activity in all these other Departments produces a comparatively surprising activity at the Treasury Department, where all centre for supplies and to which all account. It will therefore be understood that the activity of every branch of the Government during the rebellion, especially the unparalleled activity of the War and Navy Departments, increased enormously the business of this Department, and while it may be possible to bring back at present some of the other Departments to a comparative peace footing, yet permanent results remain with us, in paying their debts, and settling their bills, which many years will hardly alter.

It seems almost impracticable to determine now what should be the exact permanent force of the Department.

The most correct conclusion arrived at is embodied in the bill now before Congress for the reorganization of the Treasury to which I refer respectfully to refer. In the meantime for the numbers of officers, clerks, &c., and their salaries, I have been unable to reduce to any very considerable degree our regular estimates. My own idea is that we had better employ to-day the largest force that can be of advantage on the back work of the war, because the longer its completion is put off the more unproductive will be its results and the weaker the accountability of public debtors. Hence I cannot recommend so unwise an economy in my judgment, as a decrease in the accounting force of the Department, or, in fact, of any branch of it at present, for all are intimately connected. The persons employed are usefully and, in my judgment, necessarily employed. A reduction of their number does not lessen the expenses of the Department in the end; it simply spreads them out over a longer period, and the result will inevitably be that the delay will finally cost more than the apparent, but fictitious momentary saving.

To these general remarks I desire to add that I consider it of vital importance to the successful working of our independent Treasury system that the salaries of the officers intrusted with large amounts of public money, exposed in cities—where all are located—to peculiar temptation, should not be diminished.

If called upon to point out the most serious evil at present threatening this system, I should be obliged to answer "the meager compensation of competent and responsible officers." It is the old story. Private enterprise offers superior compensation, and we lose many of our best men because we cannot pay them adequately. We have now a case of defalcation in the courts which probably would not have occurred had an adequate salary have been paid by the United States. If the appropriation for additional compensation under the sub-Treasury system is limited to its present reduced amount by the bill now before you, the important office of the United States Assistant Treasurer at New York city will be so crippled thereby that we shall be unable to continue its business safely or properly.

I inclose an additional section to the bill continuing for three years the temporary positions created for the period during the rebellion and for one year thereafter. Besides these, which were established by specific provisions of law, there are employés paid from appropriations which have for the last few years been made in gross amounts for additional clerk hire throughout the entire Department.

The force paid from these appropriations is used to strengthen any particular branch of the business where additional assistance is required, and of necessity varies from time to time. In my judgment, it cannot yet be dispensed with.

The estimate for the contingent expenses of the Department shows an apparent increase over last year; there is, however, an actual decrease, from the fact that no appropriations are asked for the respective bureaus as heretofore, but the Department itself will take charge of these expenditures, thereby reducing the aggregate expenses, as has been the case in the expenditures for stationery since they were merged under one head.

The items in regard to fuel, labor, lights, and miscellaneous items for the Treasury buildings are necessarily increased on account of the early completion, furnishing, fitting up, and care of the north wing of the Treasury building, and five rented buildings for the use of the Department. For the details in regard to the bureaus, I respectfully refer to the reports from the heads of those bureaus, herewith transmitted, and should the committee desire any further detailed explanation the Department will promptly respond.

I beg to call particular attention to the items for administering the internal revenue laws.

I transmit herewith a communication under date of the 28th instant from the Director of the Mint objecting to the proviso contained on page 41 of the bill, lines one thousand and two to one thousand and five inclusive, to which your attention is respectfully called. As the deductions of profits referred to in this proviso are now paid into the Treasury and appropriated for the incidental expenses of the Mint or branch mint, and are subsequently drawn out on the usual requisitions, and the accounts rendered are subject to the supervision of the accounting officers of the Treasury, I am of the opinion that the legislation proposed in the provision referred to is unnecessary, and will be embarrassing to the operations of the Mint. I also transmit a copy of a letter of the Director of the Mint, inclosing a communication from the superintendent of the branch mint in San Francisco, together with a statement exhibiting the amount of wastage upon gold and silver deposits, and the receipts and expenditures of the branch mint from its first organization until the present time.

The estimates for the branch mint at San Francisco and for the assay office in New York are not greater at the present time than for previous years, and I see no good reason for reducing the annual appropriations as proposed in the House bill, and I therefore respectfully recommend, in order that the operations of these institutions for the current year may not be embarrassed, that the usual appropriation be allowed.

I have been thus earnest in stating the case, because if the bill passes in its present condition I am convinced that the Treasury Department cannot perform the duties devolved upon it by law during the coming year.

With the hope that the views herein expressed and the requests herewith submitted will meet with the approbation of the committee, I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

HUGH McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate will see from that letter that this matter has been pretty thoroughly inquired into; and I will state to him in addition to that, that we have corresponded with every head of bureau in the Treasury Department who are, not like the Secretary of the Treasury, political opponents of ours, but nearly all of them political friends, and therefore, according to the logic of my friend from California, he would believe them much more readily. The voluminous communications of the First Comptroller, the Second Comptroller, the Commissioner of Customs, the six Auditors, and the Register of the Treasury, are now upon the table covering every point. In every case where we could find the slightest reason for a reduction of their estimates, we have reduced them; and if the Senator will look at the bill, he will see that in some cases we have reduced the amounts. In regard to this very item, $210,000 were appropriated last year, of which $60,000 were for the purpose of increasing temporarily the pay of certain employés. That was adopted after a long debate. The Committee on Finance concluded to drop that and only appropriate $150,000 necessary to pay for temporary clerks only; and in regard to that item the Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter dated June 8, says:

"If these items are omitted, we shall be obliged to discharge one hundred and fifty clerks on or about the 1st day of July, to the serious injury of the public service."

Senators may ask where these one hundred and fifty clerks are employed. They are distributed, according to the exigencies of the service, among the various bureaus. Forty-two clerks, I believe, are assigned to the Second Auditor, and so they are sent from place to place through the different bureaus. They are probably now made specially necessary on account of the large amount of work to be done on military bounties. I have no doubt that after a while they may be dispensed with.

A word now in regard to the bill referred to by the Secretary of the Treasury. That increases largely the compensation of the officers of the Treasury Department. We did not think the present a wise time to commence the reorganization of this Department, and therefore we withheld the bill. If we had reported that bill it would have largely increased the pay to these same employes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It did not increase the aggregate. Did it not diminish the number?

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps not, for the officers named, but it would have increased the aggregate. At any rate, we thought the unquestionable effect would be to increase the expenses of the Treasury Department at present, and we did not feel disposed to report it. It raised the pay of all the employes, all the clerks, and all the officers of the Treasury Department, I think without exception.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, no; that is a great mistake.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is very common to say that a particular plan to reorganize a Department will decrease the aggregate expense while it is increasing the pay. That always involves an absurdity, because if the number of employes under the new organization is found not to be sufficient to do the work they always ask for an increase, and the result is an increased expenditure. That will be the case in regard to that bill. At any rate that bill is now pending before the Committee on Finance. We concluded not to act upon it at this session, simply because it does raise the pay of the employes. In lieu of that we have provided by another amendment for an increase of the pay of the Comptrollers and Auditors to a limited amount.

Mr. CONNESS. I was not aware that the measure introduced by the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] increased the compensation of all the officers in the Treasury. On the contrary, I understood that it was to be a great reform, that although it did put up a few salaries of men deserving increased compensation, it so organized the labor of the Department that the sum total would be less than is now paid, and would be brought to an ascertained amount. That is what I understood. However, the honorable Senator from Ohio has had it in his charge for a great many months and ought to know.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Ohio is entirely mistaken in saying that it increases the pay of all the employes. It increases the pay of comparatively a very small number of them.

Mr. CONNESS. That of course I leave to be adjusted between the author of the bill and the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I supposed that the passage of the bill would be a great public advantage. If it makes too great an advance in the salaries of the employes of the Treasury the Committee on Finance have the privilege of cutting those down and reporting the bill to us.

But, Mr. President, I rose more to say that the honorable Senator was not authorized by anything I had said to describe me as simply wishing to make an attack on the Secretary of the Treasury; and I take it he only did it to give himself an opportunity to spring to that official's defense. I certainly made no attack upon him. I did not name him. I said we were considering unascertained appropriations; that there was inexactness about them, and that was confessed; that I had just listened to a speech from the honorable Senator who has this bill in charge who said he could not state anything about it under certain heads. Now, sir, I do not think—and I wish to say that while I am up—that the Secretary of the Treasury is one of the worst of men—far from it. I do not think that he is the best fitted for that office in this country by far. But I never have assailed that officer to any extent; certainly never as much as I felt like doing, and felt that he deserved. I have been of the opinion that that practice here is not very well timed, and that it perhaps had better not be followed; that it produces no great public good. My own opinion is that those engaged in carrying on great Departments of the Government ought to have the confidence of the people; and when I have felt from time to time like criticising the head of the Treasury Department I have restrained myself by considerations of this character. But there was nothing said by me that should induce the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance to spring to the Secretary's defense. I think that had better be left to others to do.

I am not among those, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, who doubt the truth of statements made by political opponents. I believe there are as honorable and truthful men ranking among my opponents, politically, as there are on the side that I am on; but I have not a very high opinion of the kind of politics that I understand to be those of the Secretary of the Treasury. As I understand him, he took office and began as a Republican, and as I understand him now he is not a Democrat. If I were called upon to describe him I should describe him, and I think the country would agree with me, as a bad Republican merely, so bad that he has lost his standing with the party that gave him office, and yet holds on to the office.

Mr. HOWE. Uncurrent.

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, uncurrent; and yet he has held on to the office. It has been said of persons who get high offices particularly that few die and none resign. In my opinion that officer, when he was unable longer to cooperate as a member of the great Union party of the country, through whom he had acquired his high place, should have in honor laid down his office. There was only one consideration, perhaps, that could have induced him honorably to keep it, and that was a conviction that his keeping it was necessary to the safety and honor of the country. Nobody would agree with him if he were to give that reason; and that could not be the reason why he has held it. I have no opinion, in point of fact, of the politics of those gentlemen who have continued in office and at the head of Departments under this Administration who acquired their power by professing one class of opinions and then held it by continually violating those opinions.

So much for politics. The honorable Senator, if I have consumed time upon the subject, is responsible for it, for I did not talk of politics when up before. I simply desired to aid my friend from Illinois, who always has an eye to these matters, and who has given a good deal of labor to endeavoring to correct abuses in the Treasury Department. Guided by his experience and instructed by it, I certainly shall not intrude myself upon the Senate much, nor attempt to accomplish much public good; for all his efforts thus far, I think, have been vain, or nearly so. However, I hope he will not grow weary of well doing, but will keep on in the right way and direction.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind Senators that the question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am well aware of that. I do not rise to continue the debate, but simply to express my admiration of the manner in which the honorable Senator from California comes to the rescue of, or to back up, the Senator from Illinois. If he had not sat down with the statement that that was his object, nobody could misunderstand the course of his remarks so as to suppose that he could have had any desire or purpose to enlighten the Senate upon the subject-matter before it, for he has made no attempt at that.

The Senator, on rising to reply to some remarks that I had submitted to the Senate, had the grace to say that he had received no light at all from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. That, I have no doubt, is altogether my fault. I was in hopes that the honorable Senator himself would be luminous on this subject and would give the Senate some light. If the Senate really have received any light upon the question as to whether an increase of the clerical force of the several Departments is really necessary to the service of the country or not from the remarks of the honorable Senator I shall be very glad.

The Senator, in a sort of facetious way, undertakes to tell the Senate of the United States that the "generous" chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has lent himself to the purposes of the Treasury Department. He does not say that in words; but that is the substance of it; that out of good nature, out of an abundance of generosity, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is willing to lend himself to the purposes of the Secretary of the Treasury to deplete the Treasury of the United States; to take away its money; that I am willing to make this bill plethoric; that that has been the office and the function I have performed; that I come here with a bill which he would facetiously tell the Senate of the United States I wished to impose upon the country, to take money out of the Treasury; and my honorable friend, with an abundance of good nature, seems to enjoy exhibiting me to the country in that light. Sir, I do not know but that the Senate will get that impression. I do not know but that I have done something or said something which justifies the impression that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has really been disposed to make this bill plethoric, redundant, overflowing with money from the Treasury of the United States; and I do not know but that the Senate of the United States will believe that my associates upon the Committee on Appropriations have lent themselves to that purpose.

But I would say to the honorable Senator that all such allusions as that, whether in good nature or otherwise, are a gratuity which he ought not to feel that I can afford he should indulge in; and however he is entertained by it, it is a cheap kind of entertainment which I do not fancy. He may. When he knows more about the duties of the Committee on Appropriations he will have less to say about it; and when he understands more of its duties he will be in a better condition to enlighten the Senate upon the particular subject before the Senate on this proposition. I do not know a great deal about it, but I presume I know more about the clerks and the clerical force of the Treasury Department than the honorable Senator does, or will know on that subject, unless he addresses himself particularly to it. I do not say this, of course, out of any disrespect to him or to charge him with any want of general information; but I say it simply that having attended to my particular duty in fixing the appropriations for this branch of the service I am not to be told by that Senator, either in a general or special way, that I cannot enlighten him upon that subject, and that, therefore, I have no information on the subject myself!

Mr. President, I undertake to say that the Committee on Appropriations have made this appropriation bill as it came from the committee in conformity to the law; we have provided for the service demanded by the law; and when the Senator from California undertakes to criticise our report he had better examine and see where the short-coming is. If he says we are depleting the Treasury, let him look at the bill and see where we propose to draw a dollar out of the Treasury not authorized by the statutes of the United States. I undertake to say to that Senator and to the Senate that the bill as it came from the committee authorizes nothing for the Treasury Department or any other Department of the Government, except what is not only justified but demanded by the public service.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This amendment that we are discussing did not come from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; and I had tried to make a distinction between the labors of the Committee on Appropriations and the labors which we deemed belonged to the Committee on Finance; but I could not enlighten my honorable friend from California on that subject; and so I succeeded in getting the compliment of a willingness to deplete the Treasury, out of a generosity which in this respect the honorable Senator knows as well as anybody would not be public virtue by any means. Sir, is it an immaterial matter that a Senator of the United States, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, feels that it is an act of generosity that he may draw millions out of the Treasury; and does the Senator think he pays me a compliment when he says that of my generosity I make a bill plethoric of millions from the Treasury? I do not understand the compliment in that way. It is a left-handed compliment.

Now, sir, all I did say, and all I meant to say on that subject, was that the Committee on Appropriations made this appropriation bill in conformity to the statutes. We provided for the service according to the law, and where we found no law to authorize it we turned it over to the Committee on Finance, which is the organ of the Treasury Department, to provide for that temporary service which lies outside of the law; and that is what the chairman of that committee is attempting to do now. How far he ought to go I said I did not know, because it was not a subject which we had investigated; but I do know this—I suppose we all know who are tolerably well informed in regard to the public service—that outside of the clerks provided and specifically authorized by statutes we have been for several years authorizing, by appropriating a general sum—$300,000 in 1866, $210,000 last year—the employment of temporary clerks upon the idea that they might not be wanted more than a year. Last year, probably, it was hoped that $210,000 would employ all the temporary clerks necessary, and that this year we should not want any; but the Senator from Ohio, who has charge particularly of matters of finance, who is the organ of that Department, tells you that now they want a portion of the temporary force continued to the extent that will be allowed by an appropriation of $150,000. I wish to make the distinction that on this precise question I do not undertake to instruct the Senate; and if my honorable friend from California is not instructed on the subject I am not at fault about that. I did not undertake to instruct him, but I did undertake to tell him what we had done; and when he says to me and the Senate that I shed no light on this subject, if that is what he means, I take no offense.

I said when up before that I did know, in regard to the Second Comptroller's office, that there was a force now actually employed there to the extent of forty-three clerks, which we had not undertaken to provide for. Those clerks were paid last year out of what is called a lapsed fund, and it is exhausted, as I am told. Now, whether the Senate of the United States think that those forty-three clerks can be dispensed with from the Second Comptroller's office, is a question for them to judge. The Secretary of the Treasury says no. The chairman of the Committee on Finance, whose duty it is to know whether it is so or not, thinks you cannot afford it; the public service will suffer if it is done. I have no more right to express any other opinions than any other gentleman whose duty it is not to inquire into that subject.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, but for the fear that it would spoil a very excellent speech that we have heard from the honorable Senator from Maine, I should have corrected him some time ago by stating that he has totally misunderstood what I intended to say; and certainly I must think that he did not listen with care to what I did say. I understood him to confess that in regard to these temporary clerks he knew nothing and could state nothing; and that I think was about how I put it. But the honorable Senator holds me responsible for representing to the Senate and the country that he is an extravagant organ of the Committee on Appropriations. Now, sir, I do not believe that. I did not say that. I could not have said it.

As to my knowledge of this subject I do not profess a great deal. What I knew on it I stated. If that was little, the honorable Senator might have been content to have let that pass without making it appear to be so infinitesimally small. But, sir, it is a good and a happy conclusion that I have arrived at, that with the honorable chairman at the head of that committee, in all that relates to his legitimate duties always well informed, there is not so much necessity for myself and others being particularly and exactly informed; but the honorable Senator should have had no blame for restating here what he said himself, that of certain matters comprehended by this bill and the pending amendment he did not know anything, or did not know much. That was what I understood from him.

I desired also to do what I have done, call attention to the attempt to reform this whole service with a view of having it kept in mind and brought up at an early day; and with what I said I am entirely content.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will state in a word what this amendment is, as I have called for the yeas and nays upon it.

It is a proposition to appropriate $150,000 to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, in employing what are called temporary clerks, which he is to classify in his discretion, and that means, I suppose, that he is to pay them according to different classes, as he shall judge they deserve. A similar appropriation, under a different name, has been made for several years. I think, from what I have been informed to-day, the appropriation was $210,000 last year; and before that it was some three hundred thousand dollars, which was distributed by the Secretary of the Treasury among the clerks of the Department, in part by increasing their salaries and giving to such as he thought proper an increased compensation. We once had here a report from the officers of the Department as to how it was distributed. Now, I think it is about time that we stopped appropriating money at the rate of $150,000 at a time, to be placed in the hands of any officer of this Government, to be used in his discretion in this way.

I know but little about the clerks in these Departments, but little of the necessity for the number that are employed; but it has come to my knowledge within a few days, in a single instance, that a clerk has applied to me, stating that the work in the particular branch of the Department where he was engaged was falling off, and he was very much afraid that he would be discharged because there was no work to do, and he wanted me to interfere in his behalf if I could, to try and have him put somewhere where he would be retained. I know very little about these clerks; it is very seldom that I make any recommendations in any of the Departments. I presume that the case I have just mentioned is not a single one, but that there are many other like cases. Indeed, I have heard it said to-day privately—

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire, I should like to ask a question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I want to ask the gentleman if this $150,000 will be sufficient? I ask the question for this reason: the Committee on Retrenchment had occasion to call upon the Register of the Treasury to know how many additional appointments had been made in his Department since he entered upon its duties; and we found that there had been thirteen gentlemen and one hundred and seventeen ladies, their pay involving an expenditure of $9,100 per month, which would be $109,200 per year under that gentleman alone, simply in the Register's office. I wish to suggest to the Senator that if the other bureaus have increased in the same proportion, this appropriation ought to be a million instead of $150,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to ask a question now of the Senator from New Hampshire; and that is whether there was any authority of law already existing for the appointment of those additional number of more than one hundred ladies and thirteen gentlemen in that office.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I would prefer to refer that question to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary does not have jurisdiction of the Treasury Department by any means. He has been very unsuccessful, as the Senator from California has said, in trying to check any of these abuses, if there are abuses.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I should say that I understand that the gentleman himself who holds the office is illegally in his place.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was about to state that I had heard it said privately on the floor of the Senate since this debate commenced that the head of one of the bureaus or divisions in the Treasury Department had stated not very long ago that he had more clerks than he knew what to do with.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. He probably said that to some one who applied for a place.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know whether anybody applied to get a new clerk. I have not been in the habit of applying for new clerks. I think it not unlikely that if Senators would speak out there would be evidence that that is the condition of things in some of the divisions or bureaus of the Treasury Department. I happen to know of one case of the clerk who came to me, who was apprehensive because the business had fallen off that he would lose his place. I do not propose to take up time in regard to this matter. I wish to record my vote against appropriations of this kind.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think this question is a very simple one. I wish the Senate to understand it, and then of course they will do as they please about it.

For several years during the war, by acts of Congress, we went on increasing the force in the Treasury Department. In addition to that for some years past we have been in the habit, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, of giving a certain amount to be used for the employment of temporary clerks. It began under Mr. Chase, and has been continued since. The matter has been discussed here, I think, every year, and every year the necessity of the thing has been made apparent.

There are at this moment in the Treasury Department—not all here, but some at the sub-Treasurer's office in New York, and some, I suppose, in other offices where they are actually needed—one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty temporary clerks, most of whom are absolutely essential to the transaction of the business of the Department. If you refuse to appropriate this $150,000 of course the employment of those clerks must stop; a very considerable number of whom the various Assistant Treasurers at New York have severally said are absolutely essential to the conduct of business in that office must be dispensed with. So to a less extent in Philadelphia, and so in the Treasury Department proper here. You must either provide by law for the employment of these clerks, and thus make them legal, or you must appropriate money to allow them to be employed temporarily, and leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury to expend that money, or you must dismiss the clerks.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This appropriation does not contemplate paying clerks at New York or Philadelphia.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, it does.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It comes in under "incidental and contingent expenses of the Treasury Department."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; that is part of the Treasury Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There are other appropriations for them.

Mr. HOWE. They are appropriated for separately.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Many of them are, and many are not. They are scattered all over wherever clerks are needed for the business of the Treasury Department, as I understand. Is not that so?

Mr. SHERMAN. This appropriation is for additional clerical force in the Treasury Department, but I suppose they might be assigned to duty elsewhere.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know that additional force was called for in the sub-Treasurer's office in New York, and the persons employed were paid out of this fund at one time. Whether it is so now or not I do not know, but I presume it to be so. At any rate, here we have it; they are employed, and they are, as the Secretary of the Treasury says, necessarily employed. There is no law authorizing their employment permanently. Then what will you do? You must either dismiss them altogether or make an appropriation to pay them. The Senate can decide whether it will take the responsibility of saying that these one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty clerks shall be dismissed. If the Senate refuse to make the appropriation, of course they will take the responsibility of whether the business of the Department is done or not. So far as I am concerned, I do not care a sixpence how the Senate decide it. I have always voted for the appropriation because I knew its necessity.

A word now in reference to a bill which has been alluded to that I brought in and had referred to the Committee on Finance. It was a bill reorganizing the Treasury Department. It makes the aggregate amount of salaries paid somewhat more than they are now, but $200,000 less than they are now with the twenty per cent. added, which we gave last year, and which we are called upon to give again. Undoubtedly the salaries ought to be raised, or we ought to give some percentage to a considerable portion of the clerks. That bill gets rid of this twenty per cent. business by reorganizing the Department, raising a portion of the salaries, and transferring men from one class into another. I know as well as I know anything that a considerable portion of the men in that Department are paid much less than they ought to receive, while a very considerable proportion get all that they earn, and perhaps more too. I think, for instance, that the first and second class clerks who have families cannot support their families with what they get, but I think that young men, those who have no families, can get along very well with $1,200, and ought not to have any more. But whether any distinction can be made or not it is for Congress to decide. I stated at the time I offered that bill that I thought some of the salaries provided for in it were too high. I did not draft the bill. It was drafted at the Treasury Department. I looked it over and I approved its general scope, and I stated when I had it referred to the Committee on Finance that I considered some of the salaries too high, but that could be corrected. The general idea of the bill is a good one.

Now, sir, with reference to the fact stated by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, it is undoubtedly true that in the Register's office there has been a very large recent increase of force. What is the reason of it? The reason is that there is a very large arrear of business, business which must be disposed of. The office is getting behindhand on the coupons and other things that come in there. That office has now more work to do than it has people to do it with, but it cannot provide room for those needed in order to do it. It is not a mere appointment of people without wanting them; they are needed. They will not be needed for a long period of time. Probably a year or less than a year will bring up this arrear of business, so that a large portion of them can be dispensed with, but at the present time they are absolutely needed on account of the condition of the work of that office.

of the Treasury to ask for a larger force than he needs and for the appropriation of more money than he can expend with advantage to the Government? Does he spend it on his own person? Can he withdraw it or use it for any other purpose than that for which it is appropriated? What does he want it for? Does he want to gain the reputation of being a very extravagant man in the administration of the Department? Granting that he is as faulty as the honorable Senator from Illinois thinks he is, what inducement in the world has he to employ more people there than he has work for I should like to know. Why does he want to swell the number of clerks in the Department? Why does he want money appropriated for the purpose of paying these extra clerks if he has not got business for them to do? He comes here and says, "I want so many clerks," and he tells you the reason why he wants them; and the Senator from Illinois, without knowing a thing of what is done there, says this is astonishing! I do not pretend to know much about it; but I know what was needed at one time when I was there, and I presume the same thing is needed now.

If we do not choose to put into the Secretary's hands $150,000 for temporary clerks, let the business stop, or else pass a law providing how many clerks shall be employed and make the necessary appropriation; but that has not been thought to be wise, because when you pass such a law they become permanent, and you have to pass another law to get rid of them, but when you simply provide from year to year temporarily for them the moment they are not needed their services can be dispensed with. That is the reason this appropriation has been made in this form from time to time.

The Senator asks, why put $150,000 in the Secretary's hands to increase the pay of clerks? If the Senator had troubled himself to know what he was talking about, he would know that the amendment did not do any such thing.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This provision is that he may classify them in his discretion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Classify them, but not pay them extra. Does not the Senator understand the difference between classifying and paying extra?

Mr. SHERMAN. The same provision has been in the law for eight years.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have made the provision for years in the same language, and last year there was in the appropriation a clause authorizing a part of the money to be used for increasing the compensation of clerks; but that is struck off this year, and $60,000 of the appropriation is struck off with it. I believe it would be wise to keep in that provision still; but the Committee on Finance think it best to leave it off, and of course I yield to their decision. Last year the appropriation was $210,000, and in that appropriation it was provided that the Secretary was to use the money for two purposes; in the first place, to employ extra clerks, and in the next place to raise the pay of certain clerks. This year an appropriation of $150,000 is proposed instead of $210,000, and the only way in which the money can be used is to hire extra clerks. It is also provided that the Secretary may classify them; that he may put one into the fourth class, another into the third, another into the second, and another into the first. That is very proper, for he wants different kinds of men for different work. He wants some men for some work that cannot be performed by men who would suffer themselves to be employed for $1,200. That is a matter of discretion with him. Will you leave no discretion with the Secretary of the Treasury?

The question is a very simple one, and it is for the Senate to decide. At this period of the session I suppose you must do either one of two things: either give this money or dismiss the men, and take the responsibility of having the business of the Department so far interrupted. If any Senator thinks it is best to have it interrupted, and that without this provision there are clerks enough, in the face of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in the face of the action of the Committee on Finance, who have examined it, he can do so. But I really do think, with all respect to the honorable Senator from Illinois, that when the Secretary of the Treasury tells you they are necessary, and when the Committee on Finance have examined the matter and tell you this provision is necessary, it is quite as good as the proof which the Senator adduces on his side, to wit, that somebody, a clerk, came to him and told him that in his particular place the business was falling off and he was afraid he would lose his office. There is one of his proofs against the Secretary of the Treasury and the Committee on Finance! Another is, that somebody around the Senate here says that in one of the bureaux, I do not know which, the business is not so great as it used to be. Is that enough to make out a case? I appeal to my honorable friend as a judge whether he will admit such sort of evidence as going to prove anything in any court except the Senate. I apprehend we may with safety do what is recommended by the Committee on Finance after they have examined the subject.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. It is half past four o'clock, and there is no probability of getting a vote to-night.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment. I wish to correct a statement of the Senator from Maine in regard to these clerks.

Mr. RAMSEY. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] seems to suppose that there is a necessity for clerks in Philadelphia and in New York, and he urges that as one of the reasons why this appropriation should pass. There are some things we can know without being in the Treasury Department, and if he had looked at this bill he would have found that it came from the House of Representatives with this clause:

For salaries of clerks, messengers, and watchmen in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at New York, $60,000.

There is a nice little sum, but that was not half enough, and in the Senate our Committee on Appropriations proposed to raise that $60,000 which was in the House bill to $126,000, more than double what the House proposed, for the benefit of the Assistant Treasurer's office in New York; and I believe the amount was still further increased on the suggestion of the Committee on Finance. Now $150,000 more is proposed to be added, and one of the reasons given is that more clerks may be wanted at New York.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to show the Senator that he does not understand it at all. My colleague explained it once to him, and told him that all the appropriations to which he now refers were made to meet the service provided for by law. The House of Representatives have gone back to the time before the war, and our committee have brought it up. This $150,000 is for extra clerks in those very offices, as well as in the Department here. What I stated is perfectly correct.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I supposed this increase was for clerks that were not provided for by law, but I was showing that the bill provided $126,000 for clerks at New York, something of a sum; and that this $150,000 might by possibility not be necessary there. As the House had started with $60,000, and the Senate had given $126,000, I supposed it was possible that would answer the purpose.

But the Senator from Maine says that as faulty as the Secretary of the Treasury may be supposed to be by the Senator from Illinois, what object has he in employing more clerks than are necessary? The Senator from Illinois had not said a word about the Secretary of the Treasury being faulty. I have no difference with the Secretary of the Treasury. It is the appropriation about which I am speaking. It is possible, Mr. President, that a Secretary of the Treasury, I do not say the Secretary of the Treasury, but it is possible that a Secretary of the Treasury may have favorites as well as other men. It is possible he may have human frailties as well as other men, and that there may be favorite persons around him that he would like to give employment to, and whose salaries he would like to increase.

But the Senator from Maine wants to know if the Senator from Illinois does not know the difference between classifying clerks and paying them extra. I supposed that by classifying these clerks he meant paying one $1,800 and another $1,200, and that is done under the name of classification. It is possible that a person less pure, having fewer human frailties than the present Secretary of the Treasury has, might go into that office and might desire that a favorite person should be so classified as to get $1,800, when another clerk just as good practically was so classified as to get only $1,200. I can conceive that that would be possible with other persons than the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senator from Illinois will now give way. He has made a sufficient explanation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I give way to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. RAMSEY. I renew my motion to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will allow us to finish this amendment. Let us take the vote, because I want to be absent to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will withdraw the motion if there is a possibility of a vote immediately; otherwise not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota withdraws his motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to submit a privileged motion. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at two o'clock to-morrow; Senators understand the reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can be entertained if there be no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CATTELL. I only want a single minute to say that, as a member of the Finance Committee, I felt it my duty personally to call at the Treasury Department in regard to this item now under consideration; that my information was obtained from Mr. Hartley, the Assistant Secretary, at a personal interview, and that he brought into my presence several of the heads of bureaus and divisions, and satisfied me conclusively that this sum was absolutely necessary to the working of the Treasury Department. Upon that information, thus obtained on my own personal application to the Department, I voted in the Finance Committee in favor of reporting this amendment, and I shall vote for it now.

Mr. CONKLING. I shall vote against this amendment, and I shall do it with full consciousness of the futility of doing so. The Treasury Department having made this requisition, I take it for granted, for the purpose of this remark, that it is to be answered by the Senate, and I rise for the purpose of saying that if it shall be adopted we shall have some cause of consolation, I think, in the fact it is not $210,000, and that it does not involve all the latitude of discretion which last year and the year before was committed to the Secretary of the Treasury.

And now I want to make one single remark, to which I ask the attention of Senators. Last year the language of the act, as it appears in the estimates, was:

"And provided further, That the Secretary may award such additional compensation to officers and clerks as in his judgment may be deemed just and may be required by the public service."

And opposite that is the item of $210,000. Now, what do Senators suppose was done with that $210,000? I am told by a member of the other House, who received his information from the Treasury Department itself in explanation of another thing, that about one hundred and ten or one hundred and twenty thousand dollars was devoted to the pay of temporary clerks, and that the rest of this money was distributed upon the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $1,000 or $1,500 being given in every instance to the head of a bureau, all of whom I am told received it except one, and these additions thus conferred by the favor of the Secretary ranged from one thousand to fifteen hundred dollars. In that way about sixty percent. of the money having been devoted to the employment of temporary clerks the financial officer of the Government managed to get rid of the residue. That residue, in charity to the Treasury, is not included in this amendment, and when it prevails we may console ourselves by remembering that here is a clear gain of sixty or seventy or eighty thousand dollars, looking to the past, whichever the precise amount may be. I shall vote against it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON. Before that motion is put, I wish the Senator from Minnesota to allow me to make a motion.

Mr. RAMSEY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CAMERON. Just a moment. I wish to move a reconsideration of the vote which adjourned the Senate until two o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the vote by which the Senate agreed to meet to-morrow at two o'clock be reconsidered.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope not.

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to say that I can see no good reason for adjourning until two o'clock to-morrow different from any other day. I am perfectly willing, if Senators think it wise, that we shall meet every evening at six o'clock and sit the whole night to do so. I think in warm weather it would be better; but I do not think we should adjourn till a late hour to-morrow for a special object, because some of us have been invited to a wedding; let me speak out plainly; I was trying to find some other word. It is hardly fair that the Senate of the United States, so near the termination of the session, should adjourn to go to a wedding like a parcel of young boys. We are old men, or ought to be. It was supposed when this body was provided for that it would contain aged, prudent, and wise men. I am very young myself; but there are many old men here, and I think all the old men at least would be better employed in attending to their duties here than in going to a wedding to-morrow.

Besides, there is no particular reason why this body should adjourn to go to the wedding of anybody, and, as is suggested to me by the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS,] it never has been done in the history of the Senate. I do not think there is any special reason why we should go to the wedding of the Senator who is to be married to-morrow. He is not the first man who was married, and I trust he is not the last who will be. Let us come here at our regular hour and perform our duties as we ought to do. If any of the Senators have a special desire to go to this wedding let them go, and those of us who remain here will attend to our duties as well as we can. I hope we shall reconsider the vote.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fowler, Hendricks, Howe, McCreery, Morgan, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Williams, and Yates—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Conness, Cragin Fre-linghuysen, Harlan, McDonald, Pomeroy, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Wade, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Drake, Edmunds, Ferry, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Nye, Rice, Saulsbury, Vickers, and Wiley—20.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate stands adjourned until to-morrow at two o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 24, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

IMPRISONMENT OF WARREN AND COSTELLO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, by unanimous consent, the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant, upon the subject of Messrs. Warren and Costello, who have been convicted and sentenced to penal imprisonment in Great Britain.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, June 23, 1868.

The message and accompanying report were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DIMINUTION OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the estimated diminution of the Army by various causes up to January 1, 1869, and to July 1 of the same year; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RECONSTRUCTION EXPENSES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Paymaster General, submitting estimates of the amount required for deficiencies in the appropriations for the execution of the reconstruction acts for the balance of the present fiscal year, with an estimate for the next fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ARKANSAS MEMBERS.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee of Elections. The committee have carefully examined the credentials—

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a question of order. On the 15th of this month the House adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That after the report of the tax bill by the Committee of Ways and Means in pursuance of the order just passed, no other business shall be in order but the consideration of the bill so reported by said committee, except reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills."

In giving construction to that order, the Speaker said:

"This resolution only excepts the reports of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. There are two cases beside, arising under the Constitution of the United States, which the House cannot exclude. One is the veto of the President of the United States."

"The other case is where a member claims the right to be sworn in from any State where there has been legislation."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will correct the gentleman right at this point. The reporter of the Globe did not hear correctly what the Speaker said. The Chair has here, in a corrected form, the correct statement of what he said, as follows:

"The other case is where a member claims the right to be sworn in from any State in regard to which there has been recent legislation."

Those are the words which the Speaker used, as the House will remember.

Mr. BROOKS. And the Speaker goes on to say:

"The question may be referred to a committee; it may be postponed, but it must come before the House."

The matter has been referred to the committee, and the House is functus officio on that subject for the present. The committee has the custody of the case of the so-called members from Arkansas; and under the resolution of the House it is not in order for the committee to report. Only the Committee on Enrolled Bills can report during the pendency of the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York upon the ground stated in the remarks which the gentleman has read from the Globe, and which were, at least, tacitly assented to by the House, and also, upon an additional ground, which the Chair will state. There are two classes of questions of privilege which cannot, in the opinion of the Chair, be set aside by any resolution of the House. The first are messages from the President of the United States returning bills with his objections to the House in which they originated. The Constitution requires that those objections shall be entered upon the Journal, and that the House shall proceed to the consideration of the same. That is the imperative requirement of the Constitution. The second class of questions of privilege are those relating to election cases; and the reason these are questions of the highest privilege except veto messages of the President is that the most imperative duty which can devolve upon a legislative body is to ascertain who are its members. All those who are really entitled to seats upon this floor as members have the right to vote upon every proposition coming before the House. It is upon this ground that all Presiding Officers, during the whole history of the Government, have recognized reports from the Committee of Elections as questions of the highest privilege, which can be presented at any time when there is no other business before the House. When such reports are presented they are subject to the control of the House, which can, of course, lay them upon the table, recommit them, or postpone them. But the right to present reports from the Committee of Elections upon the cases of persons claiming to be entitled to seats as members and to vote on all propositions is a right that no rule or resolution of this House can set aside.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not dispute the right of the Committee of Elections under ordinary circumstances to present, as a question of privilege, a report on an election case. But the point I make is that the House has, by unanimous consent, changed the order of business, and ordered that during the pendency of the tax bill no reports from committees shall be in order except reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills; and it is this point to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, for the reasons he has already stated, overrules the point of order. It is of course within the power of the House to lay upon the table, recommit, or postpone the report of the Committee of Elections; but if these gentlemen, whose cases the committee now report upon, are really entitled to seats on this floor, they have the right to vote to-day.

Mr. BROOKS. Would it be in order for me to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the cases of these so-called members from Arkansas were referred to the Committee of Elections?

The SPEAKER. It would not be, while the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] is on the floor.

Mr. BROOKS. Is not that a privileged motion which I have the right to make?

The SPEAKER. Not while the gentleman from Pennsylvania is on the floor, unless he yields for that purpose.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not yield.

The SPEAKER. Unless the motion to reconsider was laid on the table yesterday, the right to make the motion to reconsider will accrue whenever any gentleman can obtain the floor to make it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The Committee of Elections have carefully examined the credentials of Logan H. Roots, James Hinds, and Thomas Boles. They find the credentials in proper form and signed by the proper certifying officers, and have unanimously instructed me to report the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the oath of office be now administered by the Speaker to Hon. Logan H. Roots, Hon. James Hinds, and Hon. Thomas Boles, Representatives-elect of the State of Arkansas.

Mr. BROOKS. I now move to reconsider the vote by which these credentials were referred to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is not debatable while the call of the previous question is pending. The rule on page 163 of the Digest, which applies more particularly to bills, but covers this same point, will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"It is in order, even pending the demand of the previous question on the passage of a bill, to move a reconsideration of the order of engrossment. But of course, if moved at such a time, it is not debatable."

The SPEAKER. After the bill has been engrossed, when the question is on the passage, it is still in order, if the previous question is moved on the passage, to move to reconsider the engrossment, which is to be taken before its passage, and as the Digest says, it is not debatable.

Mr. BROOKS. I bow to the decision of the Speaker. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, what I wish is this: in behalf of forty-five Democratic members of this House, I wish to say we have prepared a protest against the admission of the Arkansas members, a respectful protest, and we throw ourselves upon the courtesy of the House and ask that it may be received and spread upon the Journal.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The gentleman can submit it whenever he has an opportunity under the rules, but I will yield nothing at this time. I move to lay the gentleman's motion on the table, and demand the previous question.

Mr. BROOKS. Let me suggest that when forty odd members of the House have prepared a respectful protest and wish to present it, the gentleman avoided from his parliamentary experience, well knows it cannot be, in this way. It can be presented in a variety of ways, and it will go before the public and be read by the public. It cannot be suppressed.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Whenever it is in order for the gentleman to present his protest I have nothing to say.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw the motion.

The previous question was seconded on the resolution, and the main question ordered.

Mr. KERR, Mr. BROOKS, and Mr. WOODWARD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 27, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baldwin, Beatty, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Butler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Ela, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Griswold, Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Logan, Loughbridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Peters, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Pomeroy, Price, Robertson, Schenck, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—102.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Chanler, Getz, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Holman, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Johnson, Kerr, Knott, McCormick, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Robinson, Sitgreaves, Stone, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, Thomas Williams, and Woodward—27.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, James M. Ashley,

Axtell, Baker, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Bromwell, Burr, Cake, Cary, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Dawes, Delano, Dodge, Donnelly, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Halsey, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hunter, Jones, Kitchen, Laffin, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Marshall, McCullough, McKee, Moore, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Xunn, Perham, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Ross, Sawyer, Selye, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Aiken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—60.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the vote,

Mr. GETZ stated that his colleague, Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, was paired with Mr. CAKE.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The Arkansas members are now present, and I move that they be sworn in.

Mr. BROOKS. Before that is done I do not avail myself of the parliamentary opportunity to again offer the protest to their admission, because I believe it is the understanding on the other side of the House, after the members are sworn in, opportunity will be afforded to me to present it.

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I have no objection to the gentleman presenting his protest after we get through with this, that is if it is a respectful protest, as I presume it is.

Mr. LOGAN H. ROOTS, Mr. JAMES HINDS, and Mr. THOMAS BOLES then presented themselves, and were duly qualified.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor on the tax bill.

Mr. KERR. I wish to submit a resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am willing to yield for ten minutes while the House is filling up.

Mr. KERR. I wish to present a resolution which will give rise to no debate.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to say in regard to the protest that I have no objection to its being introduced if the gentleman presenting it will say that it is in no way disrespectful to the House or disparaging to its action.

Mr. BROOKS. The best authority I can give for that is the signature of forty members of the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman will understand me. I am unwilling to have the special order put out of the way for anything. Therefore I cannot yield for the gentleman to offer a protest if it requires a division of the House or will occasion debate. If it is a proper paper to be presented I have no objection to its being introduced, ordered to be printed, and brought up at any time hereafter as the will of the House may determine.

Mr. BROOKS. It would lead to no division because it is a mere protest, calling for no action on the part of the House. It is signed by every Democratic member, and I will add that it contains no personal allusion to any member, and so far as I am able to judge, it is not disrespectful to the majority of the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. Let it be entered on the Journal and printed.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read.

Mr. SCHENCK. Gentlemen around me desire to have it read.

Several members objected.

Mr. SCHENCK. Let it be printed in the Globe to-morrow, and we will then see what it is. I do not wish to stop the course of the regular order for the purpose of reading a long paper.

Mr. INGERSOLL. The gentleman says it will not require more than ten minutes to read it. I ask to have it read.

Several members objected.

Mr. KELSEY. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If the regular order is insisted upon the House will immediately resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the special order.

Mr. KELSEY. I withdraw the call to allow the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. KERR] to introduce a resolution.

Mr. HARDING. I renew the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the protest is received, and will be entered on the Journal and printed in the Globe;

ARKANSAS MEMBERS—PROTEST.

The recognized presence of three persons on the floor of this House from the State of Arkansas, sent here by military force acting under a brigadier general of the Army, but nevertheless claiming to be members of this Congress, and to share with us, the Representatives from free States, in the imposition of taxes and customs and other laws upon our people, makes it our imperative duty in this, the first case, to remonstrate most solemnly, and to protest as solemnly, against this perilous and destructive innovation upon the principles and practices of our hitherto constitutional self-government. The so-called reconstruction acts which created the military government in Arkansas and like governments in other southern States to share with us in the legislative power of the northern and western free people we have every reason to believe have been held to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, the public declaration of which fact was avoided only by the extraordinary and strange device of this Congress in snatching jurisdiction from the court in the McCord case when such a public decision was about to be made.

Of the three great branches of the Government it seems, then, that after the Executive vetoed these acts as unconstitutional, the judiciary adjudicated them to be so, while a Congress, the creation of but twenty-seven of the thirty-seventy States of the Union, overrides these equal and coordinate branches of that Government, first by voting down the vetoes, next by nullifying the judgments of the court! In an era of profound peace, when not an armed man rises against the Government from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, there, in ten States, our American historical way of creating the organic law has been utterly subverted by the bayonet. Ever since the Declaration of Independence, with scarcely an exception, and even amid the battles of the Revolution, conventions have been convoked through, and constitutions created by, the electors of the States, the only authorized depositories of the sovereign power of every State without exterior dictation or domination, as well under the old confederation as under the existing Federal Constitution. The hardest and harshest test-act required from 1766 to the peace of 1783 was an abjuration oath of allegiance to George III, while some of the now so-called bayonet-made constitutions from the South propose absurd and cruel tests, absurd as in Arkansas, where is interwoven in the organic law a mere party test between the Radical reconstructionists and the Democratic conservatives, such as would exclude from voting, if living there, the thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of Democrats in the free States, (art. 8, sec. 4,) or cruel, as in Alabama, where no white man can vote who will not forever forswear his own race and color, and perjure himself by swearing in defiance of the law of God that the negro is his equal and forever to be his equal at the ballot-box, in the jury-box, with the cartridge-box; in the school, in the college, in house and home, and by the fireside; in short, in every way, everywhere, (art. 7, sec. 4.)

Now in these and the other southern States in the midst of war President Lincoln, in his proclamation, December 8, 1863, offered amnesty and pardon to rebels then in arms, if they would lay down their arms and take an oath of fidelity, while now, not a Union man in Arkansas or Alabama can vote unless in the first place he swears allegiance to the majesty of this Congress, and in the next swears off his Americanism and Africanizes himself. Hitherto constitutions with us have been the outgrowth of popular life, springing from the exuberance of our enterprise and energy in the settlement of the forests or prairies of our country; but here, before us now, are nine constitutions, with one if not three more yet to come from Texas, which have all been imposed upon the people by five military satraps or pentarchs, in a manner never before known under our law, but borrowed at best from imperial Roman military colonization, or from the worst precedents of the French revolution. France is then recorded to have had five constitutions in three years, so frequently made and so frequently changed that they were ironically classed by the French people with the periodical literature of the day. Louisiana, a colony of that France, has had four constitutions in four years, and a constitution there has now become periodical literature, as in France, in the agonies and throes of the great revolution. Laws, mere statute laws, which can never be created by conventions, are appended, more or less, to all these constitutions, and bayonet created, one-branch governments, with no Executive, no senate, no house of representatives, no judiciary have ordained irreparable, irreversible laws in the very organism of the State, such as cannot be thus created by the Executive, the senate, and the house of representatives of legitimate governments when acting in union and all combined. All this has been done, without regard to preceding constitutions or precedents, or to the common law of the States or the law of nations.

The military, which, under legitimate institutions, can only be used in time of peace to conserve or preserve the State, have here been used to destroy States. The General of the Army, who represents the sword, and only the sword of the Republic, has been exalted by acts of Congress above the constitutional Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, in order to execute these military decrees, and as the surer way to root out every vestige left of constitutional law or liberty. The same General of the Army, in order to prolong or perpetuate his military domination North and West as well as South, has been selected in party convention at Chicago to head the electoral vote for the Presidency in ten of our States which are as much under his feet as Turkey is under the Sultan or Poland under the Czar of Russia. But, as if only to add insult to the injury of this military outrage upon popular government in these ten States, either by act of Congress or by these Congress-soldier-made State constitutions, at least two hundred and fifty thousand whites have been disfranchised, while seven hundred and fifty thousand negroes, inexperienced in all law making, and more ignorant than our children, have been enfranchised in their stead, and have thus been created absolute masters and sovereigns over the whole white population of the South.

Because of all this, and in opposition to all this, we, Representatives of the people from the free States, in behalf of our constituents and of thousands and tens of thousands of others who would be here represented if the popular power without could now constitutionally act here within, earnestly and solemnly protest against this violence upon our Constitution and upon our people, and do hereby counsel and advise all friends of popular government to submit to this force and fraud only until at the ballot-box, operating through the elections, this great wrong can be put right. There is no law in the land supreme over the constitutional law. There is no government but constitutional government; and hence all bayonet-made, all Congress-imposed constitutions are of no weight, authority, or sanction, save that enforced by arms, an element of power unknown to Americans in peace, and never recognized but as it acts in and under the supreme civil law, the Constitution, and the statutes enacted in pursuance thereof. We protest, then, in behalf of the free people of the North and the West, against the right of this military oligarchy established in Arkansas or elsewhere in the now reenslaved States of the South to impose upon us, through Congress, taxes or customs or other laws to maintain this oligarchy or its Freedmen's Bureau. We protest against going into the now proposed copartnership of military dictators and negroes in the administration of this Government. We demand, in the name of the fathers of the Constitution and for the sake of posterity, not its reconstruction, but the restoration of that sacred instrument which has been to us all a pillar of fire from 1787 on to its present overthrow; and in all solemnity, before God and man, under a full sense of the responsibility of all we utter, we do hereby affix our names to this protest against the admission of these three persons claiming to be members of Congress from Arkansas.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

The House, under the order heretofore made, resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. HARDING, to add, at the end of section ten, the following:

Provided, That this act shall not be deemed to prohibit the producing of alcohol in a distillery by primary continuous distillation.

Mr. GARFIELD. This proposition is an old acquaintance in this House. It was offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] at the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and was rejected. It was offered in the second session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and after full debate, the gentleman from Illinois speaking in its favor, it was rejected without a division. So that this is the third time that this proposition has been brought before the House, and I hope it will be rejected as before, without a division.

Mr. PAINE. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. Before the gentleman proceeds, I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] whether he will not be as well satisfied to offer that amendment at the end of section eleven, where it more properly belongs.

Mr. HARDING was understood to decline.

Mr. PAINE. It is not sufficient for me that the gentleman from Ohio should inform the House that to him this is an old acquaintance. It does not satisfy me to be told that under some former state of the law the Committee of Ways and Means, or even this whole House, rejected it. He must do more than that to convince me that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] ought to be rejected. He must give me some reason for rejecting the amendment. He has not done it, and I undertake to say that he cannot do it. It may be true that under the law as it formerly stood there was good reason for refusing to the distillers the right by continuous distillation in their own distilleries to bring up distilled spirits to the grade of alcohol. But under the provisions of this bill, under the law as it will stand if this bill passes, the gentleman can find no reason upon which to base his opposition to this amendment, and the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will not say to this House that there is in this bill any objection to this amendment, or anything in conflict with it. Nor can any member of the committee give to this House any reason, founded on facts of the case under this bill, why this amendment should not be adopted. Common sense requires that distillers should have the right, if they see fit and are able, to carry the spirits up to the grade of alcohol in one continuous process of distillation. They will pay all the tax in that case which they will be required to pay in any other case; and no one has so far given, I think no one can give, any good reason why distilled spirits should be necessarily and always withdrawn from the distillery and be rectified at some other place.

Now, sir, I have no especial interest in this matter; no constituent of mine has any to my knowledge; but I am not satisfied to be told that this amendment is an old acquaintance of the gentleman from Ohio. My recollection of the history of this matter is moreover very different from that of the gentleman from Ohio. My recollection is entirely in accordance with that of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARDING,] who moved this amendment, that this House inserted this provision in the bill, but I know not what became of it in the Senate. But if it is true, if it ever has been true, that in any state of the law, under any regulations that were in force for the collection of the tax, that this would have embarrassed that collection, there is, so far as I can see, no objection as the bill now stands, as the law will stand if this bill is passed; and I call upon the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to inform the House whether, in the law as it will stand when his bill is enacted, there is to be found any reason why this amendment should not be ingrafted upon it? I yield him the remainder of my time, to enable him to inform the House on this subject.

Mr. SCHENCK. In answer to that appeal I will state precisely what my understanding is. By the eleventh section of this bill it is provided, substantially as in the present law, that no other business than distilling shall be carried on within a distillery with the exception of the manufacture of saleratus and the grinding of grain into meal. I understand that it is claimed at the Department that to double over, to redistill by successive and continuous distillation, is really the carrying on of a second business in the distillery, and on that ground they have decided that it cannot be done. I do not myself, I confess, see any objection to this redistillation, provided nothing is produced but alcohol. But if there be in this process anything equivalent to the rectification of whisky, there will be an escape then from the special tax the rectifier has to pay. Our object is to get a special tax from the distiller on every barrel he produces of proof-whisky, and then from the rectifier a further special tax for rectification.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means—

Mr. SCHENCK. As this thing appears to me, it is only a process of continuous distillation, equivalent to redistillation, so as to prevent the production of alcohol in the ordinary distilleries of the country.

Mr. HARDING. I desire to ask the gentleman—

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not think there is any rectification in it.

Mr. HARDING. No rectification is contemplated. It is primary distillation and only a degree of spirits.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.]

Mr. HARDING. If the gentleman will yield to me a moment, I will say that although I made the motion it was withdrawn on the suggestion of the committee that they would insert the words "continuous distillation." Those words were inserted, and the bill went to the Senate. What was done there I do not know. But I have always understood that since that bill was passed in all the large distilleries of the West they have been running high wines up to the alcohol point.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not say nor think that the mere fact that this proposition had been twice rejected would be of itself sufficient to secure its rejection again, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] seemed to suppose. But I did think it ought to give this committee pause before they make a change of this sort. Before coming into this House this morning I read over very carefully the entire debate on this subject when it was formerly under consideration. That was in my mind, as I stated to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. SCHENCK,] for I recollected distinctly the debate in Committee of the Whole. It is recorded upon the page of the Globe before me that the amendment of Mr. Farquhar was rejected, and that was the end of it. The argument in that case is very well stated in the speech of Mr. CONKLING, a passage from which I will read:

"Now, sir, the proposition of the committee in this regard was, after a careful investigation by the subcommittee, in conjunction with the Government officers, that this process, called in parliamentary language 'continuous distillation'—called again in another phrase 'repeated doublings'—is a process which passes the comprehension of detectives, which eludes any mode of detection which we could apply, and enables those men not only to distill and redistill but to distill afresh, and make in place of one quantity of liquor repeated quantities, only one quantity being taxed. That was the proposition, and to meet it this provision was adopted."

Now, on that argument, still further enforced by other members, the amendment was rejected. Now, let me state in brief the objection to this amendment.

In the first place liquor is run through and converted into raw spirits, or high wines. Now, if they may take this liquor, after it has once gone through the process of distillation, which subjects it to the Government tax—if without paying the tax it may be put back and run through again, and then put back and run through again and again, and made into perfect alcohol, or something a little short of perfect alcohol—into how many kinds of liquor I do not know, into what other marketable commodities I cannot tell—it seems to me that we allow a process in every particular as dangerous as the process of rectification would be in the very still-house itself.

It is on that ground that the Committee of Ways and Means have for two years steadily resisted allowing this process, and now that committee very properly say that a rectifying establishment shall be at least six hundred feet away from the distillery, and yet it is proposed to put into this bill a proposition which allows just as dangerous a process as rectification to be performed in the very still-house itself. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. PAINE. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I renew the amendment. There is nothing in the least dangerous about this proposition. I wish to call the attention of the committee to some of the facts about the manufacture of high wines in the West. By this bill "proof-spirit" is required to be of the specific gravity of about nine tenths of that of pure water. A gallon of high wines, wine measure, of that specific gravity, is made the standard gallon for the purposes of taxation. For illustration, we will suppose that the specific gravity of alcohol is about eight tenths of that of water. The specific gravity of "proof-spirit" is about nine tenths of that of water. A distiller in Peoria, a thousand miles from New York, the great market, distills high wines with the purpose of sending it to that market. To reduce the cost of transportation is a very material question with him. Now, if he fills a barrel which holds forty gallons, wine measure, with "proof" whisky, he has but forty gallons. If he fills that barrel with whisky, which is of the specific gravity of alcohol, he has put about sixty "proof" gallons in the forty-gallon barrel, and he can thus save the transportation on a half barrel, or twenty gallons. But he has to pay the tax precisely as though there were only one and a half barrels of the "proof" gallon. There is no evasion of the payment of any tax, and it is impossible that there should be.

But the advantage to the western distiller is this: he can condense fifteen bushels of corn into one barrel instead of ten bushels. Fifteen bushels of grain will make sixty "proof" gallons; if he be allowed to distill by any process of distillation "continuous" or otherwise to the specific gravity of alcohol, he can thus put into one forty-gallon cask that which is equivalent to sixty "proof" gallons.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman does not take into consideration the loss by waste.

Mr. INGERSOLL. There is no loss by waste except the mere evaporation.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is the waste in doubling.

Mr. INGERSOLL. There is no more waste in "doubling" at that distillery than in removing it to the alcohol distillery and there redistilling it into alcohol. There must be a waste somewhere; and is it intended by this bill to make the manufacturer pay tax on that which is necessarily wasted in evaporation and necessary waste in the honest manufacture of alcohol? I hope not.

Now, sir, there is not a single distillery in the West that does not distill its wines as high above "proof" as it is possible; so that in a barrel holding forty gallons "wine measure" there can be shipped to New York what is equivalent to fifty-five or sixty gallons of "proof" whisky, and there is no more danger of fraud when the distiller is allowed to run the whisky as high above "proof" as possible than when he runs it exactly to the "proof" point. Let me read one section of the bill, and I shall be done:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That proof-spirit shall be held and taken to be that alcoholic liquor which contains one half its volume of alcohol of a specific gravity of seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-nine ten thousandths at sixty degrees Fahrenheit; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the prevention and detection of frauds by distillers of spirits, is hereby authorized to adopt, procure, and prescribe for use, at the expense of the United States, such hydrometers, saccharometers, weighing and gauging instruments, meters, or other means for ascertaining the quantity, gravity, and producing capacity of any mash, wort, or beer used or to be used in the production of distilled spirits, and the strength and quantity of spirits subject to tax, as he may deem necessary; and he may prescribe rules and regulations to secure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing, and gauging of spirits. And in all sales of spirits hereafter made, where not otherwise specially agreed, a gallon shall be taken to be a gallon of proof-spirit, according to the foregoing standard set forth and declared for the inspection and gauging of spirits throughout the United States.

Now, that is all there is about it; and there is no more chance of fraud in allowing them to "run up" their wines above "proof" than to compel them to ship one and a half barrels when they could ship over the railroad one barrel containing the same number of "proof" gallons at a saving of an immense amount to western manufacturers in the cost of transportation from Peoria to New York.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state one objection to this, and to say that the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in his premises. There is nothing in this bill to prevent a man having an alcohol column in his distillery provided he is bound by the rate of tax on spirits prior to its becoming alcohol, and the Government does not lose the decrease or its return. The Government loses this difference, and that is the disadvantage of this system. The tax being reduced to fifty cents on the proof-spirits, when you redistill that into alcohol you have to return less than when it was redistilled into alcohol. This bill provides that the Government shall receive the tax on the difference between the proof-spirits and after its redistillation into alcohol. By the adoption of this amendment the Government will lose the tax upon the difference in the redistillation into alcohol after its return.

Now, sir, so far as the distillation into alcohol is concerned at the distillery, there is no objection to that. Alcohol cannot be made in the common stills. The gentleman from Illinois knows that, for there are a great many distilleries in Peoria. He knows that alcohol cannot be made in common stills. There is no objection to it provided the Government is to obtain the tax upon the decrease in the quantity between the proof-spirit and after it has been redistilled into alcohol. I myself have no objection to the distillation of alcohol in a distillery provided the tax is paid to the Government on the spirit before it is redistilled into alcohol. I want the tax put upon the proof gallon of distilled spirits.

Mr. BROOMALL. That is what I am for.

Mr. LOGAN. That will not be the result by the adoption of this amendment. The Government will lose the tax upon the difference between the proof gallon and the alcohol.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question then recurred on Mr. HARDING's amendment, and it was rejected.

No further amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That no person shall use any still, boiler, or other vessel for the purpose of distilling in any dwelling-house, nor in any shed, yard, or inclosure connected with any dwelling-house, nor on board of any vessel or boat, nor in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors, vinegar or other are manufactured or produced, or where sugars or sirups are refined, or where liquors of any description are retailed, or where any other business is carried on; and every person who shall use any still, boiler, or other vessel for the purpose of distilling as aforesaid, in any building or other premises where the above specified articles are manufactured, produced, refined, or retailed, or other business is carried on, or on board of any vessel or boat, or in any dwelling-house, or other place as aforesaid, or shall aid or assist therein, or who shall cause or procure the same to be done, or shall, on conviction, be fined $1,000, and imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than two years, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That saleratus may be manufactured, or meal or flour ground from grain in any building or on any premises where spirits are distilled; but such meal or flour only to be used for distillation on the premises.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to strike out "meal or flour," and insert "grain of all kinds."

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen must send up their amendments in writing.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KOONTZ. I move the following amendments:

In line five, strike out the words "or on any premises."

In line nine, strike out the words "or where any other business is carried on;"

In lines eleven and twelve, strike out the words "or other premises;" and

In line thirteen, strike out the words "or other business is carried on."

Mr. Chairman, this section absolutely prohibits any person from carrying on any other business on the premises if he is engaged in distilling. The word "premises" is rather a comprehensive term, and may embrace a tract of land of two or three hundred acres, as well as a lot in a town or city; and if this section is enacted into law a person engaged in farming will be prohibited from carrying on a distillery. It often happens in the rural districts that a man may be engaged in carrying on a saw-mill or grist-mill or a store on the premises. Now, he must either dispense with this other business or be prohibited from carrying on the business of distillation. I think that would be unfair. I do not think we have a right to prohibit a person who by his industry and energy has built up several kinds of business from carrying them on.

Mr. SCHENCK. I may say of this amendment as my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] did of another this morning, and with more reason, that it is an old acquaintance. An attempt has been made uniformly whenever an internal tax bill has been up to amend it so as to allow the distiller to carry on any other business in and about his distillery; but it has been found absolutely essential for protection against frauds on the revenue that these men should be confined strictly to their business on the premises selected for that business. And such is the law now, even to the very use of the word that the gentleman particularly objected to. The present law is that no person shall use any still, boiler, or other vessel for the purpose of distilling in any building or on any premises where other operations are carried on. The exceptions have already been stated. The reason why this exception alone should be allowed, even if there be any reason for excluding everything else, must be obvious. Just as you multiply occupations and businesses in and about the distillery you offer an opportunity for fraud. As to the hardship on the farmer who at the same time owns a distillery, that exists only in fancy, I think; because he does not carry on his farming operations in the building or on the premises pertaining to the distillery building. He can have a fence around it, separate it from the rest of his farm, and he ought to do so. The premises of course will be construed in the law to mean just that portion of real estate which immediately appertains to or is connected with the building.

Mr. KOONTZ. After the explanation given by the chairman of the committee I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MULLINS. I move to amend by inserting in line nine, after the word "on," the following:

Except the making or repairing of such cooper's ware as may be necessary to the barreling of spirits or for mash or beer tubs, flake or cooling tubs: Provided, The same be done in a separate building.

I make this motion for this reason: there are a great many little distillers in my section who find it exceedingly inconvenient to import their barrels. They have in their manufacturing establishments cooper's ware, or it may be adjacent to the still-house. It is a great expense and inconvenience to be obliged to transport barrels. I offer this amendment, and would like to hear from the chairman of the committee on the subject.

Mr. SCHENCK. I understand the Department has never interfered with the repair or keeping in order of cooperage, as an incidental business. The reason why we make one exception in this section in regard to the grinding of grain to be used only for distillation on the premises, is that there have been some instances where the revenue officers have decided that that is a different business, while in other districts they have decided that it is incidental to the distillery, and not a separate business. We have put this exception in because there has been objection to carrying on the business of grinding. But I think no objection has ever been made to the repairing of barrels, which has been treated as a business incident to distillation.

Mr. MULLINS. After the explanation given by the chairman of the committee I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to make an inquiry. It is well known that the business of feeding hogs and cattle is sometimes carried on quite extensively on the same premises. Now, I want to know if that business is to be interfered with under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. Not at all. We even recognize it as a part of the distillery business, in another section.

Mr. INGERSOLL. All right.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That there shall be assessed and collected monthly, in the same manner as other taxes are assessed and collected, on every registered distillery having an aggregate capacity for mashing and fermenting one hundred bushels of grain or less in twenty-four hours, five dollars per day; and three dollars per day for every hundred bushels of such capacity in excess of one hundred bushels in twenty-four hours. But any distiller who shall stop work, as provided by this act, shall not be compelled to pay on any distillery more than two dollars per day during the time the work shall be so suspended in his distillery.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "five dollars" and "three dollars," where they occur in the sixth line, and insert "one dollar." It seems to me, sir, that all Federal legislation in relation to taxing whisky for several years past, whether designedly so or not, has been in the interest of those who are to command an extensive capital, and against the laboring masses of limited means. Previous to the enactment of our stringent and complicated excise laws upon this subject large numbers of our farmers who raised a surplus of grain for which they had no remunerative or convenient market manufactured it into whisky in small distilleries on their own premises. They were, as a general thing, honest working men, of moderate means, without either the skill, inducement, or inclination to concoct those villainous compounds which are now known as whisky, and the consequence was their production was a genuine, honest, pure, unadulterated liquor. Such I know were the men who gave to Kentucky whisky its world-wide reputation. But the imposition of the enormous taxes we have had for several years past, and a dread of the numberless pitfalls with which our excise laws abound, have driven all this class of whisky manufacturers out of the business, and the production of whisky has been for the most part handed over to immense moneyed monopolies in the large cities and towns, who, instead of old-fashioned, honest, country-made copper whisky, give us a nauseous steamed slop or a poisonous concoction of cocculus Indicus, strychnine, and dog-leg tobacco, compared with which, I had almost said, aqua fortis would be an innocent and wholesome beverage.

Now, sir, with the tax at fifty cents a gallon, and the distiller only required to pay it as he sells his whisky, we will have our old-fashioned country still-houses going again. They can compete, and compete successfully, with these plethoric moneyed monopolies of the cities, and we will hear no more of whisky frauds, of subterranean pipes, no more of hose extending from the still-house over the roofs of the intervening buildings to the rectifying shops. The people will get good whisky and the Government will get its revenue. But impose this tax of five dollars a day upon them, whether their distilleries are capable of running out a hundred bushels of mash or not, and you will keep them out the business as you have driven them out, and continue it in the hands of monopolists, for, sir, the farmer cannot pay this tax of $150 each month in addition to the other direct and indirect taxes imposed upon the production of whisky in this bill. Now, sir, take my word for it, the farmers all over the country who would like to make their surplus grain into whisky will want to know why this discrimination is made between them and all other manufacturers in the country. And they will especially want to know why it is that the small distiller is required to pay five dollars a day on every hundred bushels of mash he is capable of running out while his wealthier neighbor is only required to pay three dollars on each alternate hundred bushels. And, sir, they will demand an answer. If we are legislating for the interests of the wealthy capitalists this section is right, but if we have in view the interests of the laboring masses then we will adopt this amendment, or, what I would prefer, strike out the section altogether.

Mr. MYERS. I rise to oppose the amendment, and I do it chiefly because I desire to support the principle contained in the section as it is. I would have no objection to reduce the amount, but I am opposed to reducing it to one dollar. We received last year $13,500,000 from the whisky tax, when at the rate of two dollars a gallon we should have received at least $100,000,000. The causes which the public generally believed led to this were first the inefficient conduct or bad conduct of the officers appointed by the Administration, and secondly the high rate of the tax. I believe both of those causes tended to produce the result, and I voted with a majority of the committee to reduce the tax to fifty cents a gallon in order that we might test what effect a reduction would have. But one of the chief reasons why we do not raise the amount we should have done from the tax on whisky, as I take it, was the improper mode of collecting this tax. I believe if we were to assess and collect the tax according to the fermenting capacity of the distillery, that, as was said yesterday by my venerable colleague, [Mr. STEVENS,] we would be able to collect at least three fourths of the tax.

Mr. ALLISON. What does the gentleman mean by the fermenting capacity of the distillery?

Mr. MYERS. The capacity of the mash tubs in connection with the number of hours necessary for fermentation. If you would secure the proper collection of the tax, then test this new method first. I favor this section because it contains that principle to some extent. And I take it that if we take this step toward the principle of the fermenting capacity of the distillery we will receive a large amount of money from this tax. And if we find next year that the tax has not been fully and properly collected we can then adopt the entire principle of the fermenting capacity of the distillery and collect the tax in that way. That will simplify the law, obviate the expense of meters and stamps, and do away with a large majority of the officers employed under the present system.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] by striking out "one dollar," where it first occurs, and inserting "two dollars;" and also by striking out "one dollar" where it last occurs, and inserting "six dollars;" that is, in each case doubling the amount reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. I have very great reluctance to vote for any bill decreasing the tax upon whisky. Nothing but being assured by the Committee of Ways and Means that the present tax cannot be collected induced me to remain quiet while the tax of two dollars per gallon was reduced to fifty cents per gallon. And nothing but the promise of the Committee of Ways and Means that at least a considerable portion of that decrease should be made up by special taxes rendered the action of the Committee of the Whole at all palatable, at least to myself.

Now, when we come to these special taxes which are said to be intended to make up a very considerable part of this loss, we find that this five dollars per day, as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, amounts to but one cent and a quarter per gallon—a mere paltry increase, almost nothing at all. Now, the increase which I propose by my amendment will make up but a very small portion of the loss which we will sustain by the reduction of the tax from two dollars to fifty cents per gallon.

I am told that the present tax of two dollars per gallon cannot be collected. Why, then, should we not put a material part of the difference between two dollars per gallon and fifty cents per gallon in a shape in which it is said the tax can be collected? I am very loth to consent to the proposition that any tax which the great body of the community believe to be just and proper, as the great body of the community do believe with respect to the tax imposed by law as it now stands upon whisky; I am very loth to believe that this Government cannot collect all of that tax, every dollar of it. I believe that by the proper selection of the proper kind of officers the present tax upon whisky can be collected, and under an Executive who would look to the fitness of men, rather than to the use that could be made of them in politics, I believe the proper kind of officers would be appointed. If we cannot collect a tax justified by all the thinking men of the community, all who are not interested in producing whisky—if we cannot do that, then I should be compelled to believe our Government a failure.

Mr. BECK. I desire to oppose the amendment to the amendment, and for this reason: that it bears unequally upon the distillers of the country. For instance, very many of the small distillers of the country would be very injuriously affected by this amendment. There have been comparatively no frauds in the collection of the tax from the small distilleries; the frauds have been in connection with exportation, redistillation, &c. The tax has been collected from the makers of genuine whisky, and especially the small distilleries everywhere. One of these small distilleries will make perhaps a barrel a day; that is a fair average of the small distilleries throughout Kentucky, Tennessee, &c. They do not make whisky to be exported or rectified or redistilled, but for home consumption. One barrel per day on the average is as much as they can make. Their product is altogether different from the high wines or crude spirits made in large steam distilleries, which never improve by time, and which are only fit for use after rectification, redistillation, or other process.

A man who mashes one hundred bushels a day can make, say three hundred gallons, and distilleries run on the average eight months in the year. The man who makes a barrel a day will make about two hundred barrels in eight months. That will be eight thousand gallons, while the man who makes eight barrels a day from one hundred bushels of grain will make sixteen hundred barrels in eight months, or sixty-four thousand gallons. And under this per diem tax which you propose the man who runs one hundred bushels a day, making eight barrels, pays about a cent and a half a gallon in this way, while the man who makes one barrel per day pays over twelve cents a gallon. This is class legislation for the benefit of the large distilleries in which most of the frauds are committed. There is no justice in such legislation. Let each man pay in proportion to what he makes, and then they will all be on an equality. But the section, as it now stands, will ruin the only men who have paid the tax honestly, as the returns show. None of their whisky has gone into the market without the tax being paid.

I hope the amendment of my colleague will prevail, the object of which is to bring the tax down to that point where you will not crush out the smaller distillers. When the distillery mashes more than one hundred bushels per day the disproportion becomes still greater. But the truth is that while high wines are now sold all over the West for less than the tax, the distilleries, in my district at least, large and small, who have always paid the tax honestly, as the returns of the collector will show, are selling their product at fair remunerative prices. This per diem tax is oppressive on them all. The amendment of my colleague, [Mr. KNOTT,] fixing the tax at one dollar per hundred bushels, is as much as ought to be imposed in this form.

[Here the hammer fell.]

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

At this point the committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 1059) to relieve from disabilities certain persons in States lately in rebellion; when the Speaker signed the same.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union then resumed the consideration of the

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. KOONTZ. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I renew the amendment. If there is to be any change made in this taxation of the capacity, the capacity to be dependent on the quantity of grain mashed and fermented in the distillery, I would rather see it raised than lowered. It is a very small tax that is proposed, five dollars upon a hundred bushels of grain mashed and fermented, every bushel of grain producing throughout the United States an average of twelve quarts or three gallons, is but an addition of a cent and two thirds to the tax per gallon. I know that in Kentucky, and where they make the best whisky, the distillers produce only from eight to ten, perhaps about nine quarts to the bushel; but then some of the large distilleries of the West run up to sixteen and sixteen and a half; sometimes, it is said, they have gone even higher than that. Throughout the United States twelve quarts to the bushel is but a fair and rather a small average.

Now, a cent and two thirds added to the fifty cents by this tax upon capacity will certainly not burden the distiller very much, while it furnishes to the Government a tax easy of collection, a sure tax, and so far a sure increase of the revenue. So far as, in the confusion here, I was able to understand the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] who has just taken his seat, he complains that this tax operates as a discrimination in favor of the large establishments. Perhaps, to some small extent, it does. His remedy, if I understood him, would be to put the tax upon each bushel; but it must be readily seen that it would be a very unfortunate mode of taxation to impose the tax, bushel by bushel, and collect it without a general classification of the capacity of distilleries with reference to the quantity of bushels they use per day.

We have thought that five dollars a day upon every distillery mashing daily one hundred bushels of grain or less is by no means an onerous tax in any case; that even the smallest distiller, for the sake of running his establishment under the protection of law, honestly accounting for the tax on whatever he produces, might well afford to pay, in addition to other taxes now made so much lighter than they have been, five dollars a day. Where more than one hundred bushels of grain is mashed daily we propose to increase the per diem tax—not exactly in the same ratio, though, perhaps, the same ratio would be better—at the rate of five dollars per day for each additional one hundred bushels of grain; which, I think, ought to be amended so as to say “each additional one hundred bushels or fractional part of one hundred bushels.” This would obviate all dispute on that point.

I will not insist on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOMALL,] proposing to increase this tax to ten dollars, because this is a part of the system presented by the committee; but I repeat, that if there is to be any change, I hope this capacity tax will be increased rather than reduced.

Mr. MULLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to the operation of this proposition. In the district of country which I have the honor to represent the capacity of three fourths of the distilleries will not average, I think, over twenty gallons per day. According to the system of taxation proposed in this bill no distillery is to be permitted to run without paying five dollars per day direct tax to the Government. Now, on the small distilleries, whose production averages about twenty gallons per day this per diem tax would amount to about twenty-five cents per gallon; while as to establishments distilling daily one hundred bushels or three hundred gallons, this per diem tax will be but a trifle on each gallon. I trust that some arrangement will be devised to relieve these small distilleries; for they, in my section of the country, are the distilleries to which the Government must look for its revenue. In the district which I represent there is more distillation of spirits than in perhaps any other portion of the State of Tennessee. In my district is manufactured the liquor known as the “Lincoln liquor.” It is from Lincoln county. They have small and rather indifferent means of transportation for their grain to market. Therefore they are compelled to redistill their corn into spirits for transportation. If this tax of five dollars a day can be done away with on these small distilleries, then it will be a great convenience for them, and it will induce these small distilleries to keep up the manufacture and thus add revenue to the Government; otherwise it will drive them to the wall. The grain, too, will be lost to a great extent, and the Government will be deprived of the amount of revenue which otherwise it would receive. If these small distilleries can be relieved I shall be glad of it. I have stated what I have to bring to the mind of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to bear on this subject. I look to him as the leader on this bill, and I am bound to stand by him as far as consistency will allow me.

The question was taken on Mr. BROOMALL'S amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. KOONTZ. I move to strike out the words “or less.”

The CHAIRMAN. That it is not in order.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to move an amendment, and ask the chairman to observe the terms of the amendment pending. As the bill now reads it provides:

That there shall be assessed and collected monthly, in the same manner as other taxes are assessed and collected, on every registered distillery having an aggregate capacity for mashing and fermenting one hundred bushels of grain or less in twenty-four hours, five dollars per day.

The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out five dollars a day and to insert one dollar a day. I propose to amend his amendment by striking out “one hundred” and inserting “twenty,” so the effect will be to keep the tax as it now is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would hardly rule that to be in order to the pending amendment. The gentleman can indicate his amendment and move it hereafter.

Mr. MAYNARD. If this amendment is voted on, and the bill stands as it is, then we have one result. If it fails, then my amendment would have a different result. Both must stand together.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be a good argument for the committee. The Chair rules the amendment is not in order.

Mr. O'NEILL. For the purpose of saying a few words I move to strike out “five,” and insert "two;" so it will read "two dollars a day."

Mr. Chairman, I conceive the section as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means will meet this case very well; and I think, having reduced the tax to fifty cents, which I favored, and with this section proposing to levy it to some extent by capacity, we will at last get to the right principle of collecting it, and thereby secure such a revenue from whisky as we have never had under the operations of the present law.

I believe I understand the reasons which have operated with the committee in favor of this section. We have the statistics of the collection of the tax on whisky while it was at sixty cents per gallon. With the tax at fifty cents, and with its collection by capacity, I think we will receive about the same amount of money as we did two or three years ago when the tax was at sixty cents. I hope the amount may be greater in the aggregate than it has been in former years, and although favoring the low tax, yet I am not entirely persuaded of the results to be accomplished. We are making an experiment based upon the suggestions of officials and individuals all over the country, but at last its success depends upon the fidelity of the officer and the determination of the citizen engaged in making whisky to contribute his share of the taxation imposed only that the Government may be able to meet punctually all obligations to creditors.

I am of opinion that we could do away with much of the machinery even of this bill, and of much expense, by enlarging the principle of capacity, as suggested so often by my colleague from the third district, [Mr. MYERS,] and as now for the first time incorporated in a tax bill by a Committee of Ways and Means. My idea of levying a tax upon capacity differs in this respect from my colleague and the committee. I would, by a fair and just calculation of the number of gallons that could be made during a year, assess the full amount of the tax that should be paid, to be collected at convenient periods, so that the distiller should not be unnecessarily distressed in the payment of the tax, and then let him make or not make the number of gallons which, according to the capacity, his establishment could produce. Thus the Government would have a certain tax, and the distiller, in effect, would have what might be considered a license, the manufacturer of a large number of gallons having no advantage over his neighbor of more limited means. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky will not prevail, and the section will pass as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. I now withdraw my amendments.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I rise to oppose the amendment, and for the purpose of saying that if it shall not prevail I propose to offer an amendment making the minimum twenty bushels instead of one hundred, and charging two dollars a day for a distillery of the capacity of twenty bushels or less, and adding two dollars per day for every twenty bushels increase of capacity. That would enable the small distilleries to work on the same footing as the large ones, and would increase the revenue very materially over what it would be under the proposition submitted by the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I had written an amendment proposing three cents per bushel per day for every additional bushel.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That would make it too difficult to ascertain the exact number of bushels. You can reckon by twenty bushels easily enough. This tax is to be levied beforehand.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think a proposition like that of the gentleman from Massachusetts, might very properly be accepted.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw my amendment, and move as a substitute to strike out of the pending section the following:

Having an aggregate capacity for mashing and fermenting one hundred bushels of grain or less in twenty-four hours, five dollars per day; and three dollars per day for every hundred bushels of such capacity in excess of one hundred bushels in twenty-four hours.

And to insert instead the following:

One cent on the registered number of bushels which can be mashed and fermented therein in twenty-four hours, as shown by the registration required to be made by this act.

This will equalize it, because each man has to register the number of bushels.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I rise to oppose the amendment, and ask for a vote.

The amendment was disagreed to—ayes 31, noes 67.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I now move to amend the section by striking out "one hundred" wherever it occurs and inserting "twenty;" and by striking out "five" and "three" in line six, and inserting "two" in each instance; so that the section, as amended, will read as follows:

That there shall be assessed and collected monthly, in the same manner as other taxes are assessed and collected, on every registered distillery having an aggregate capacity for mashing any fermenting twenty bushels of grain or less in twenty-four hours, two dollars per day; and two dollars per day for every twenty bushels of such capacity in excess of twenty bushels in twenty-four hours.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the gentleman an amendment to the amendment; so that it will read: "one hundred bushels of grain or less, or sixty gallons of molasses or less."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I decline to accept the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. BOUTWELL was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to strike out in line ten the words "more than two dollars," and insert the words "any sum," so that it will read:

But any distiller who shall stop work, as provided by this act, shall not be compelled to pay on any distillery any sum per day during the time the work shall be so suspended in his distillery.

Under the provision of this bill a distiller is required to pay a special tax for one year. Now, suppose on the 1st of January the distiller makes his application for what we call a license, although gentlemen may take exception to the word and call it a special tax. He pays a license or special tax of say $1,000 for the privilege of running his distillery one year. He runs the distillery for three months, and finds that every gallon he has produced he has been compelled to sell at a loss of five or ten cents, and that he is losing from one to two hundred dollars a day. He wants to stop running his distillery, but you propose to collect from him for the remaining nine months two dollars a day. Now, is there any equity, is there any justice in this proposition? Is there any propriety in it? Do you not know that every day a large distillery stands idle it wastes rapidly, that it deteriorates in value at the rate of twenty, thirty, or fifty dollars a day, and that it is a dead expense on the owner's hands to keep it in reasonable repair when it is idle? Now, you propose that he shall pay a tax to the Government of two dollars a day for the privilege of allowing the distillery to remain idle. I say it is not fair, and that my amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope it will be voted down.

The question was taken on Mr. INGERSOLL's amendment; and there were—ayes 30, noes 52; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on a further count?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Not if the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will let us have a vote in the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, I cannot see the propriety of this tax.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on a further count unless gentlemen will let us have a vote in the House.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BROOMALL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise the committee that by the admission of the Arkansas members, a quorum has been raised to ninety-eight members.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MUNGEN. For the purpose of perfecting the bill, I move to strike out section twelve, if it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order until all amendments looking to the perfection of the section shall have been disposed of.

Mr. MUNGEN. Then I move to strike out the last line. I am opposed to the capacity measurement. In order to ascertain the capacity for production of a distillery the following are some of the points to be examined:

1. The size of the fermenting cisterns. It is well known in practical and scientific distillation that fermentation is more rapid in large cisterns than in small ones. Professor Ure, in his work on chemistry, page 588, says:

"Fermentation proceeds with more uniformity and success in the large tuns of the distiller than in the experimental apparatus of the chemist, because the heat generated in the former case maintains the action."

Therefore, in estimating the capacities of small and large distilleries this fact must be taken into consideration.

2. The situation of the fermenting tuns must also enter into the calculation. Fermenting cisterns situated in a room so constructed that the distiller can keep it at an even temperature the whole year, or nearly so, the fermentation will be uniform, and the product will not vary to any considerable extent. This is a very important feature in the construction of a distillery, and in a properly constructed distillery is looked after with great care.

3. The quantity of steam necessary to run the distillery, and whether or not the boilers are capable of supplying the required amount. This is a most difficult matter, as any mechanic will testify, and in fact can only be truthfully ascertained by actual experiment. If the distiller is to divide his time between mashing and distilling he loses half of his time; and any law making provision for this will leave a wide margin for fraud, as it must leave it to human agency to decide the fact, which means favoritism and corruption.

4. The still, its capacity, construction, proportions, and form, must be carefully considered, and the effect of any variation in proportions, construction, capacity, and form, be thoroughly understood, in order to arrive at a just estimate of the amount of the spirits it is capable of producing. The large number of different kinds of stills, and of the same kind of stills, with different attachments which tend to hasten or retard the process, must all be noted. Take, for instance, our form of still, the "American still," with three chambers, and we have for instance, one doubler, or two doublers, or one doubler and copper pans, (called the German attachment,) or two doublers and copper pans, or a doubler with a half worm in it, each variation changing, to a greater or less extent, the quantity capable of being produced.

5. The proportions of the still must also be carefully considered; and the following question asked of the estimator of capacities would probably give him a deal of trouble to answer, while it would be of the greatest importance to the distiller: What is the best proportions to be observed in the construction of a still, height of staves, diameter, and relative proportions of each chamber? This is a question every still-maker in the country would like to have answered, as no two agree. There are many stills of fifteen hundred cubic feet contents that will not produce more than half as much as one of only one thousand cubic feet. If the steam is the same in both, the difference must arise in the construction; and while the difference exists, still manufacturers are frequently unable to account for it.

6. Another objection and a very serious one is the length of time the distiller claims for fermentation. Before the tax it averaged four to five days, and there are many who allow their beer to ferment that length of time now, while others run seventy-two, fifty, forty-eight, and even twenty-four hour beer. How is this to be determined? On what basis are you to make your estimates? Whatever else about distillation can be regulated and controlled by legislation, this is one that cannot be fixed or any uniform rule established. Natural forces are at work which depend upon a thousand conditions not possible for man to control.

There are many other objections which I will not mention in detail, but all have their effect in regulating the capacity of a distillery.

1. A sufficient supply of water—a very serious difficulty at times.

2. The relative length of time required to perform similar acts in different distilleries of same capacity. For instance, one may be able to charge his still in ten minutes; another it would take forty-five minutes.

3. The mill capacity of the distiller must also be considered.

4. What provision will there be made for breakages, stoppages, &c. It matters not what it may be it opens the door for fraud and corruption.

Again, suppose a distillery has fermenting capacity of say one thousand bushels, which, of course, must be calculated on the three-day fermentation basis. He will, therefore, if working honestly, consume one thousand bushels of grain in three days and obtain a yield of over four thousand gallons. If, however, he uses the same capacity and mashes one thousand bushels each day and obtains three gallons per bushel (or even four gallons, as has been shown can be done by sulphurous acid) he would then be enabled to obtain from the same fermenting capacity three times more than the estimating inspector could fairly estimate the distillery at. If a limit as to time of fermentation was placed by law on distillers it would then require three times as many revenue officers as we now have under the complicated and impractical regulations of the revenue department.

Mr. SCHENCK. I agree with the argument of my colleague, but it relates to another matter, the capacity of stills. This relates to the capacity to ferment and must. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MUGEN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I offer the following verbal amendment to remove any ambiguity: In lines nine and ten, strike out the words "not be compelled to pay on any distillery more than," and insert in lieu thereof "pay only."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee that all debate be closed on this section.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to offer another amendment before that is done.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I will ask unanimous consent that all debate be stopped on the sections of the bill down to and including section forty three on page 52. That will leave the sections open for amendment. We never shall get through with the bill in this way. That will leave open all questions about export warehouses.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I move that the committee rise for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. POMEROY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall cease in one minute upon all the sections of the tax bill down to and including section forty-three. That will leave what relates to the export warehouses open for further consideration.

Mr. HARDING. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether that limitation will apply to the provision which I endeavored to have inserted in the bill. By reference to the law I find that I am sustained and the distinguished chairman of the committee is mistaken. I refer him to the law.

Mr. SCHENCK. The action which I propose will simply cut off debate; it will not prevent the offering of any amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. I submit that by the rules of the House we cannot close debate except upon the pending section of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. POMEROY.) The Chair holds that it is in order for the House to terminate debate upon one section or more, as it may choose.

The motion of Mr. SCHENCK was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resume the consideration of the internal tax bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the sections down to and including section forty-three will terminate in one minute.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend by striking out in the last sentence of section twelve the words "two dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one dollar;" so that the sentence will read:

But any distiller who shall stop work, as provided by this act, shall not be compelled to pay on any distillery more than one dollar per day during the time the work shall be so suspended in his distillery.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes 38, noes 66.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall manufacture any still, boiler, or other vessel to be used for the purpose of distilling, shall, before the same is removed from the place of manufacture, notify in writing the assessor of the district in which such still, boiler, or other vessel is to be used or set up, by whom it is to be used, its capacity, and the time when the same is to be removed from the place of manufacture; and no such still, boiler, or other vessel shall be set up without the permit in writing of the said assessor for that purpose; and any person who shall set up any such still, boiler, or other vessel, without first obtaining a permit from the said assessor of the district in which such still, boiler, or other vessel is intended to be used, or who shall fail to give such notice, shall pay in either case the sum of $500, and shall forfeit the distilling apparatus thus removed or set up in violation of law.

Mr. McCORMICK. I move to amend by striking out the section just read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read as follows:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That every distiller shall provide, at his own expense, a warehouse, to be situated on and to constitute a part of his distillery premises, to be used only for the storage of distilled spirits of his own manufacture, but no dwelling-house shall be used for such purpose, and no door, window, or other opening shall be made or permitted in the walls of such warehouse leading into the distillery or into any other room or building; and such warehouse, when approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on report of the collector, is hereby declared to be a bonded warehouse of the United States, to be known as a distillery warehouse, and shall be under the direction and control of the collector of the district, and in charge of an internal revenue storekeeper assigned thereto by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the tax on the spirits stored in such warehouse shall be paid before removal from such warehouse, unless removed in pursuance of law.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to amend by striking out at the end of the section the word "law" and inserting the words "this act."

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope that amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery established as hereinbefore provided, shall erect, in a room or building to be provided and used for that purpose, and for no other, and to be constructed in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, two or more receiving cisterns, each to be at least of sufficient capacity to hold all the spirits distilled during the day of twenty-four hours, into which shall be conveyed all the spirits produced in said distillery; and each of such cisterns shall be so constructed as to leave an open space of at least three feet between the top thereof and the floor or roof above, and of not less than eighteen inches between the bottom thereof and the floor below, and shall be so situated that the officer can pass around the same, and shall be connected with the outlet of the worm or condenser by suitable pipes or other apparatus so constructed as always to be exposed to the view of the officer, and so connected and constructed as to prevent the abstraction of spirits while passing from the outlet of the worm or condenser to the receiving cisterns; such cisterns and the room in which they are contained shall be in charge of and under the lock and seal of the internal revenue gauger designated for that duty; and on the third day after the spirits are conveyed into such cisterns the same shall be drawn off into casks or other packages, under the supervision of such gauger in the presence of the storekeeper, and shall be immediately inspected, gauged, proved, and the casks or packages marked, as herein provided by law, and be removed directly to the distillery warehouse; and on special application to the assessor or assistant assessor by the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery, the spirits may be drawn off from the said cisterns under the supervision of the gauger at any time previous to the third day. All locks and seals required by law shall be provided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at the expense of the owner of the distillery or warehouse; and the keys shall be in charge of the collector or such gauger as he may designate.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the door of the furnace of every still or boiler used in any distillery shall be so constructed that it may be securely fastened and locked. The fermenting tubs shall be so placed as to be easily accessible to any revenue officer, and each tub shall have distinctly painted thereon in oil colors its cubic contents in gallons and the number of the tub. There shall be a clear space of not less than one foot around every wood-still, and not less than two feet around every doubler and worm-tank. The doubler, or doubler and worm-tanks, shall be elevated not less than one foot from the floor; and every fixed pipe to be used by the distiller, except for the conveyance of water, or of spent mash or beer only, shall be so fixed and placed as to be capable of being examined by the officer for the whole of its length or course, and shall be painted, and kept painted, as follows, that is to say: every pipe for the conveyance of mash or beer shall be painted of a red color; every pipe for the conveyance of low wines back into the still or doubler shall be painted blue; every pipe for the conveyance of spirits shall be painted black; and every pipe for the conveyance of water shall be painted white. If any fixed pipe shall be used by any distiller which shall not be painted or kept painted as herein directed, or which shall be painted otherwise than as herein directed, he shall forfeit the sum of $1,000. No assessor shall approve the bond of any distiller until all the requirements of the law and all regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in relation to distilleries, in pursuance thereof, shall have been complied with. Any assessor who shall violate the provisions of this section shall forfeit and pay $2,000, and shall be dismissed from office.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That every person engaged in distilling or rectifying spirits, and every wholesale liquor dealer and compounder of liquors, and every keeper of a warehouse for distilled spirits, shall place and keep conspicuously on the outside of his distillery, rectifying establishment, place of business, or warehouse, a sign, in plain and legible letters, not less than three inches in length, painted in oil colors or gilded, and of a proper and proportionate width, the name or firm of the distiller, rectifier, wholesale dealer, compounder, or warehouse keeper, with the words: "Registered distillery," "rectifier of spirits," "wholesale liquor dealer," "compounder of liquors," or "warehouse for distilled spirits," as the case may be; and no fence or wall of a height greater than five feet shall be erected or maintained around the premises of any distillery, nor shall the gate or door of such fence or wall be kept locked or otherwise fastened, so as to prevent easy and immediate access to said distillery; and every distiller shall furnish to the assessor of the district as many keys of the doors of the distillery as may be required by the assessor, from time to time, for any revenue officer or other person who may be authorized to make survey or inspections of the premises or of the contents thereof; and said distillery shall be kept always accessible to any officer or other person having any such key. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section by negligence or refusal, or otherwise, shall pay a penalty of $500. Any person not having paid the special tax, as required by law, who shall put up the sign required by this section, or any sign indicating that he may lawfully carry on the business of a distiller, rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, keeper of a warehouse for distilled spirits, or compounder of liquors, shall forfeit and pay $1,000, and, on conviction, shall be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months; and any person who shall work in any distillery, rectifying establishment, warehouse, wholesale liquor store, or in the store of any compounder of liquors, on which no sign shall be placed and kept as hereinbefore provided, and any person who shall knowingly carry or convey any distilled spirits to or from any such distillery, rectifying establishment, warehouse, or store, or who shall knowingly carry and deliver any grain, molasses, or other raw material to any distillery on which such sign shall not be placed and kept, shall forfeit all horses, carts, drays, wagons, or other vehicle or animal used in the carrying or conveying of such property as aforesaid, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend by striking out in the section just read the following:

And no fence or wall of a height greater than five feet shall be erected or maintained around the premises of any distillery, nor shall the gate or door of such fence or wall be kept locked or otherwise fastened, so as to prevent easy and immediate access to said distillery.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BARNES. I move to amend by striking out at the end of the pending section the following:

And any person who shall work in any distillery, rectifying establishment, warehouse, wholesale liquor store, or in the store of any compounder of liquors, on which no sign shall be placed and kept as hereinbefore provided, and any person who shall knowingly carry or convey any distilled spirits to or from any such distillery, rectifying establishment, warehouse, or store, or who shall knowingly carry and deliver any grain, molasses, or other raw material to any distillery on which such sign shall not be placed and kept, shall forfeit all horses, carts, drays, wagons, or other vehicle or animal used in the carrying or conveying of such property as aforesaid, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

The amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That every person making or distilling spirits, or owning any still, boiler, or other vessel used for the purpose of distilling spirits, or having such still, boiler, or other vessel so used under his superintendence, either as agent or owner, or using any such still, boiler, or other vessel, shall, from day to day, make or cause to be made, true and exact entry in a book or books, to be kept by him, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of the kind of materials, and the quantity in pounds, bushels, or gallons purchased by him for the production of spirits, from whom and when purchased, and by what conveyance delivered at said distillery, together with the amount paid therefor, the kind and quantity of fuel purchased for use in the distillery, and from whom purchased, the amount paid for ice or water for use in the distillery, the repairs placed on said distillery or distilling apparatus, the cost thereof, and by whom and when made; and in another book shall make like entry of the name and residence of each person employed in or about the distillery, and in what capacity employed, the quantity of grain or other material used for the production of spirits, the time of day when any yeast or other composition is put into any mash or beer for the purpose of exciting fermentation, the quantity of mash in each tub, designating the same by the number of the tub, the number of dry inches; that is to say, the number of inches between the top of each tub and the surface of the mash or beer therein at the time of yeasting, the gravity and temperature of the beer at the time of yeasting, and on every day thereafter its gravity and temperature at the hour of twelve meridian; also the time when any fermenting tub is emptied of ripe mash or beer, the number of gallons of spirits distilled, the number of gallons placed in warehouse, and the proof thereof, and the number of gallons sold or removed, with the proof thereof, and the name, place of business, and residence of the person to whom sold; and every fermenting tub shall be emptied at the end of the fermenting period, and shall remain empty for a period of twenty-four hours. On the 1st, 11th, and 21st days of each month, or within five days thereafter, respectively, every distiller shall render to the assistant assessor an account in duplicate, taken from his books, stating the quantity and kind of materials used for the production of spirits each day, and the number of wine gallons and of proof gallons of spirits produced and placed in warehouse. And the distiller or the principal manager of the distillery shall make and subscribe the following oath, to be attached to said return:

"I, ———, distiller, (or principal manager as the case may be,) of the distillery at ———, do solemnly swear that, since the date of the last return of the business of said distillery, dated ——— day of ——— to ——— day of ———, both inclusive, there was produced in said distillery, and withdrawn and placed in warehouse, the number of wine gallons and of proof gallons of spirits, and there were actually mashed and used in said distillery, and consumed in the distilling of spirits therein, the several quantities of grain, sugar, molasses, and other materials, respectively, hereinbefore specified, and no more."

The said books shall always be kept at the distillery, and be always open to the inspection of any revenue officer, and, when filled up, shall be preserved by the distiller for a period not less than two years thereafter, and whenever required shall be produced for the inspection of any revenue officer. If any false entry shall be made in either of said books, or any entry required to be made therein shall be omitted therefrom, for every such false entry made, or omission, the distiller shall forfeit and pay a penalty of $1,000. And if any such false entry shall be made, or any entry shall be omitted therefrom with intent to defraud or to conceal from the revenue officers any fact or particular required to be stated and entered in either of said books, or to mislead in reference thereto, or if any distiller or as aforesaid shall omit or refuse to provide either of said books, or shall cancel, obliterate, or destroy any part of either of such books, or any entry therein, with intent to defraud, or shall permit the same to be done, or such books, or either of them, be not produced when required by any revenue officer, the distillery, distilling apparatus, and the lot or tract of land on which it stands, and all personal property of every kind and description on said premises, or used in the business there carried on, shall be forfeited to the United States. And any person making such false entry or omitting to make any entry hereinbefore required to be made, with the intent aforesaid, or who shall cause or procure the same to be done, or who shall fraudulently cancel, obliterate, or destroy any part of said books, or any entry therein, or who shall willfully fail to produce such books or either of them, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That on the receipt of the distiller's first return in each month, the assessor shall proceed to inquire and determine whether said distiller has accounted in his returns for the preceding month for all the spirits produced by him; and to determine the quantity of spirits thus to be accounted for, the whole quantity of spirits produced from the materials used shall be ascertained: (and forty-five gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from grain shall represent not less than one bushel of grain, and seven gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from molasses shall represent not less than one gallon of molasses.) In case the return of the distiller shall have been less than the quantity thus ascertained the distiller shall be assessed for such deficiency at the rate of sixty cents for every proof gallon, and the collector shall proceed to collect the same as in cases of other assessments for deficiencies; but in no case shall the quantity of spirits returned by the distiller, together with the quantity so assessed, be for a less quantity of spirits than eighty per cent. of the producing capacity of the distillery.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend by striking out in the last sentence of the section just read the word "sixty" and inserting "fifty;" so as to read "at the rate of fifty cents for every proof gallon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend by striking out in line eight the words "forty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof "sixty;" so that the clause will read:

And sixty gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from grain shall represent not less than one bushel of grain.

The amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That the storekeeper assigned to any distillery warehouse shall also have charge of the distillery connected therewith; and, in addition to the duties required of him as a storekeeper in charge of a warehouse, shall keep in a book to be provided for that purpose, and in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a daily account of all the meal and vegetable productions or other substances brought into said distillery, or on said premises, to be used for the purpose of producing spirits, from whom purchased, and when delivered at said distillery, the kind and quantity of all fuel used, and from whom purchased, and of all repairs made on said distillery, and by whom and when made, the names and places of residence of all persons employed in or about the business of the distillery, of the materials put into the mash tub or otherwise used for the production of spirits, the time when any fermenting-tub is emptied of ripe mash or beer, recording the same by the number painted on said tub, and of all spirits drawn off from the receiving cistern, and the time when the same were drawn off. Any distiller or person employed in any distillery who shall use, cause, or permit to be used any material for the purpose of making mash, wort, or beer, or for the production of spirits, or shall remove any spirits in the absence of the storekeeper or person designated to act as said storekeeper, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of taxes on the spirits so produced, distilled, or removed, and, in addition thereto, be liable to a penalty of $1,000.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That every distiller, at the hour of twelve meridian, on the third day after that on which his bond shall have been approved by the assessor, shall be deemed to have commenced and thereafter to be continuously engaged in the production of distilled spirits in his distillery, except in the intervals when he shall have suspended work, as hereinafter authorized or provided. Any distiller desiring to suspend work in his distillery may give notice in writing to the assistant assessor of his division, stating when he will stop work; and on the day mentioned in said notice said assistant assessor shall, at the expense of the distiller, proceed to fasten securely the door of every furnace, of every still or boiler in said distillery, by locks and otherwise, and shall adopt such other means as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe to prevent the lighting of any fire in such furnace or under such stills or boilers. The locks and seals, and other materials required for such purpose, shall be furnished to the assessor of the district by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be duly accounted for by said assessor. Such notice by any distiller, and the action taken by the assistant assessor in pursuance thereof, shall be immediately reported to the assessor of the district, and by him transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No distiller, after having given such notice, shall, after the time stated therein, carry on the business of a distiller on said premises until he shall have given another notice in writing to said assessor, stating the time when he will resume work; and at the time so stated for resuming work the assistant assessor shall attend at the distillery to remove said locks and other fastenings; and thereupon, and not before, work may be resumed in said distillery, which fact shall be immediately reported to the assessor of the district, and by him transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Any distiller, after the time fixed in said notice declaring his intention to stop work, who shall carry on the business of a distiller on said premises, or shall have mash, wort, or beer in his distillery, or on any premises connected therewith, or who shall have in his possession or under his control any mash, wort, or beer, with intent to distill the same on said premises, shall incur the forfeitures, and be subject to the same punishment as provided for persons who carry on the business of a distiller without having paid the special tax.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits shall be drawn from the receiving cistern into casks or packages, each of not less capacity than twenty gallons, wine measure, and shall be immediately removed into the distillery warehouse, and shall thereupon be gauged and proved by said gauger, who shall mark, by cutting on the cask or package containing such spirits, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the quantity in wine gallons, and in proof gallons, of the contents of such cask or package, and shall, in presence of the storekeeper of the warehouse, place upon the head of the cask or package an engraved stamp, which shall be signed by the collector of the district and the storekeeper and gauger, and shall have written thereon the number of proof gallons contained therein, the name of the distiller, the date of the receipt in the warehouse, and the serial number of each cask or package, in progressive order, as the same shall be received from the distillery. Such serial number for every distillery shall begin with number one (No. 1) with the first cask or package deposited therein after this act takes effect, and no two or more casks or packages warehoused at the same distillery shall be marked with the same number. The said stamp shall be as follows:

[Distillery warehouse stamp, No. —.]
Issued by ———, collector, ——— district, State of ———.
Distillery warehouse of ———, 18—, Cask No. —, contents ——— gallons, proof-spirit.

United States Storekeeper.

Attest:

United States Gauger.

And the distiller or owner of all spirits so removed to the distillery warehouse shall enter the same for deposit in such warehouse, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent herewith, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe; and said entry shall be in triplicate and shall contain the name of the person making the entry, the designation of the warehouse in which the deposit is made, and the date thereof, and shall be in form as follows: [Entry for deposit in distillery warehouse.]

Entry of distilled spirits deposited by ———, in distillery warehouse ———, in the ——— district, State of ———, on the ——— day of ———, A. D. ———.

And the entry shall specify the kind of spirits, the whole number of casks or packages, the marks and serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on the spirits contained in them; all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the distiller or gauger of the same attached to the entry; and the said distiller or owner shall give his bond in duplicate, with one or more sureties satisfactory to the collector of the district, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will pay the tax on the spirits, as specified in the entry, or cause the same to be paid, before removal from said distillery warehouse, and within one year from the date of said bond, unless the same shall be removed by him from said warehouse according to law; and the penal sum of such bond shall not be less than double the amount of the tax on such distilled spirits. One of said entries shall be retained in the office of the collector of the district, one sent to the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse, to be retained and filed in the warehouse, and one sent with the duplicate of the bond to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be filed in his office.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by inserting in line thirty-four, after the word "shall," the words "on the 1st, 11th, and 21st days of each month, or within five days thereafter;" so as to make the paragraph read:

And the distiller or owner of all spirits so removed to the distillery warehouse shall, on the 1st, 11th, and 21st days of each month, or within five days thereafter, enter the same for deposit, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COVODE. I move to amend by striking out after the word "warehouse," in line fifty-six, the words "and within one year from the date of said bond."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend by striking out the word "law," in line fifty-eight, and inserting in lieu thereof "the provisions of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I offer the following amendment providing for the payment of the tax at the distillery without putting the liquor in the warehouse:

That all distilled spirits shall be drawn from the receiving cisterns into casks or packages, each of not less capacity than twenty gallons, wine measure, and unless the tax thereon be then and there paid and the casks stamped, shall be immediately removed into the distillery warehouse, &c.

The amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That whenever an order is received from the collector for the removal from any warehouse of any cask or package of distilled spirits, on which the tax has been paid, it shall be the duty of the gauger by whom the same is gauged and inspected, in presence of the storekeeper, before such cask or package has left the warehouse, to place upon the head thereof, in such manner as to cover no portion of any brand or mark prescribed by law already placed thereon, a stamp, on which shall be engraved the number of proof gallons contained in said cask or package, on which the tax has been paid, and which shall be signed by the collector of the district, storekeeper, and gauger, and which shall state the serial number of the cask or package, the name of the person by whom the tax was paid, and the person to whom and the place where it is to be delivered; which stamp shall be as follows:

[Tax-paid stamp, No. —.]
Received —, 18 —, from —, tax on — gallons proof-spirit, case No. —, warehouse at —, for delivery to — at —.

Attest: Collector — District, State of —.

United States Storekeeper.

United States Gauger.

Whenever any cask or package of rectified spirits shall be filled for shipment, sale, or delivery on the premises of any rectifier who shall have paid the special tax required by law, it shall be the duty of a United States gauger to gauge and inspect the same and place thereon an engraved stamp, which shall be signed by the collector of the district and the said gauger, and state the date when affixed, which stamp shall be as follows:

[Stamp for rectified spirits, No. —.]
Issued by —, collector — district, State of —, rectifier of spirits in the — district, State of —, 18 —.

United States Gauger.

Whenever any cask or package of distilled spirits shall be filled for shipment, sale, or delivery on the premises of any wholesale liquor dealer or compounder, it shall be the duty of the United States gauger to gauge and inspect the same, and place thereon an engraved stamp, signed by the collector of the district and the said gauger, stating the name of the compounder or dealer and the date when affixed, which stamp shall be as follows:

[Wholesale liquor-dealer's stamp, No. —.]
Issued by —, collector — district, State of —, wholesale liquor dealer, of —, — district, State of —, 18 —.

United States Gauger,
— District, State of —.

All blanks in any of the above forms shall be duly filled in accordance with the facts in each case. And the stamps above designated shall be affixed so as to fasten the same securely to the cask or package and duly canceled, and shall then be immediately covered with a coating of transparent varnish or other substance, so as to protect them from removal or damage by exposure; and such affixing, cancellation, and covering shall be done in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall by regulation prescribe; but such stamps shall in every case be affixed to a smooth surface of the cask or other package, which surface shall not have been previously painted or covered with any substance.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by inserting before the word "warehouse," in line three, the word "distillery."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MULLINS. I move to amend by striking out the word "law," in line nine, and inserting in lieu thereof "this act."

The amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That all stamps required for distilled spirits shall be engraved in their several kinds in book form, and shall be issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to any collector, upon his requisition, in such numbers as may be necessary in the several districts. Each stamp shall have an engraved stub attached thereto with a number thereon corresponding with an engraved number on the stamp, and the stub shall not be removed from the book. And there shall be entered on the corresponding stub such memoranda of the contents of every stamp as shall be necessary to preserve a perfect record of the use of such stamp when detached.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That every stamp for the payment of tax on distilled spirits shall have engraved thereon words and figures representing a decimal number of gallons, and a similar number of gallons shall be engraved on the stub corresponding to such stamp, and between the stamp and the stub and connecting them shall be engraved nine coupons, which, beginning next to the stamp, shall indicate in succession the several numbers of gallons between the number named in the stamp and the decimal number next above. And whenever any collector shall receive the tax on the distilled spirits contained in any cask or package, he shall detach from the book a stamp representing the denominate quantity nearest to the quantity of proof-spirits in such cask or package, as shown by the gauger's return, with such number of the coupons attached thereto as shall be necessary to make up the whole number of proof gallons in said cask or package, and any quantity in addition to the number of full gallons less than one gallon shall be regarded as a full gallon; and all unused coupons shall remain attached to the marginal stub; and no coupon shall have any value or significance whatever when detached from the stamp and stub. And the tax-paid stamps with the coupons may denote such number of gallons, not less than twenty, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may deem advisable.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That the books of tax-paid stamps issued to any collector shall be charged to his account at the full value of the tax on the number of gallons represented on the stamps contained in said books; and every collector shall make a monthly return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of all tax-paid stamps issued by him to be affixed to any cask or package containing distilled spirits, on which the tax has been paid, and account for the amount of the tax collected; and when the said collector shall return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue any book of marginal stubs, which it shall be his duty to do as soon as all the stamps contained in the book, when issued to him from the office of internal revenue, have been used, and shall have accounted for, the tax on the number of gallons represented on the stamps and coupons that were contained in said book, he shall be allowed a commission of half of one per cent. on the amount, in addition to any other commission by law allowed, on all money accounted for by him for tax collected on distilled spirits, which shall be equally divided between the collector receiving the tax and the collector of the district in which the distilled spirits were produced. All stamps relating to distilled spirits other than the tax-paid stamps shall be charged to collectors as representing the value of twenty-five cents for each stamp; and the books containing such stamps may be intrusted by any collector to the gauger of the district, who shall make a daily report to the assessor and collector of all such stamps used by him and for whom used, and from these reports the assessor of the district shall on his monthly list assess the person for whom they were used, and the collector shall thereupon collect the amount due for such stamps at the rate of twenty-five cents for each stamp issued during the month; and when all the stamps contained in any such book shall have been issued the gauger of the district shall return the book to the collector with all the marginal stubs therein.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by inserting after the word "stamps," in line four, the words "and coupons."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by striking out at the end of the first sentence the words "which shall be equally divided between the collector receiving the tax and the collector of the district in which the distilled spirits were produced."

The amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That any revenue officer who shall affix or cancel, or cause or permit to be affixed or canceled, any stamp relating to distilled spirits required or provided for in this act, in any other manner or in any other place, or who shall issue the same to any other person than as provided by law, or regulation made in pursuance thereof, or who shall knowingly affix or permit to be affixed any such stamp to any cask or package of spirits of which the whole or any part has been distilled, rectified, compounded, removed, or sold, in violation of law, or which has in any manner escaped payment of tax due thereon, shall, for every such offense, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $2,000, and be imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than three years.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That if any distiller shall desire to reduce the producing capacity of his distillery, he shall give notice of such intention in writing to said assessor, stating the quantity of spirits which he desires thereafter to manufacture or produce every twenty-four hours, and thereupon said assessor shall proceed, at the expense of the distiller, to reduce and limit the producing capacity of the distillery to the quantity stated in said notice, by placing upon a sufficient number of the fermenting-tubs close-fitting covers, which shall be securely fastened by nails, seals, and otherwise, and in such manner as to prevent the use of such tubs without removing said covers or breaking said seals, and shall adopt such other precautions as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to reduce the capacity of said distillery. And any person who shall break, injure, or in any manner tamper with any lock, seal, or other fastening applied to any furnace, still, or fermenting-tub, or other vessel, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, or who shall open or attempt to open any door, tub, or other vessel which shall have been locked or sealed, or otherwise closed or fastened as herein provided, or who shall use any furnace, still, or fermenting-tub, or other vessel which shall be locked, sealed, or fastened, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $1,000, nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than one year, nor more than three years.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That whenever any officer shall require that the water contained in any worm-tub in a distillery, at any time when the still shall not be at work, shall be drawn off, and the tub and worm cleaned, the water shall forthwith be drawn off and the tub and worm cleaned by the distiller or his workmen accordingly; and the water shall be kept and continued out of such worm-tub for the space of two hours, or until the officer has finished his examination thereof; and for any refusal or neglect to comply with the requisition of the officer in this behalf, or the provision in this clause contained, the distiller shall forfeit the sum of $1,000, and it shall be lawful for the officer to draw off such water, or any portion of it, and to keep the same drawn off for so long a time as he shall think necessary.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to strike out that section; and I desire to ask unanimous consent to say a word in explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Mr. INGERSOLL. Is it not in order to ask unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent cannot do away with the order of the House that debate shall terminate on these sections.

Mr. INGERSOLL. The committee, by unanimous consent, may do so in effect. I only ask to make a brief explanation.

Mr. MULLINS. I object.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I should like the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to give one good reason why this should be retained.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 76; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ALLISON and Mr. INGERSOLL were appointed.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will gentlemen allow me to have a vote in the House?

Mr. SCHENCK. I cannot agree to that.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 20, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

No further amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 30. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any revenue officer, at all times, as well by night as by day, to enter into any distillery, or building, or place, used for the business of distilling, or in connection therewith, for storage or other purposes, and to examine, gauge, measure, and take an account of every still or other vessel or utensil of any kind, and of all low wines, and of the quantity and gravity of all mash, wort, or beer, and of all yeast, or other compositions for exciting or producing fermentation in any mash or beer, and of all spirits and of all materials for making or distilling spirits, which shall be in any such distillery or premises, or in the possession of the distiller; and if any revenue officer, or any person called by him to his aid, shall be hindered, obstructed, or prevented, by any distiller or by any workman or other person acting for such distiller or in his employ, from entering into any such distillery, or building, or place, as aforesaid; or if any such officer shall be by the distiller, or his workman, or any person in his employ, prevented or hindered from, or opposed, or obstructed, or molested in the performance of his duty under this act, in any respect, the distiller shall forfeit the sum of $1,000. If any officer, having demanded admittance into a distillery or premises of a distiller, and having declared his name and office, shall not be admitted into such distillery or premises by the distiller or other person having charge of the same, it shall be lawful for such officer, at all times, as well by night as by day, to break open by force any of the doors or windows, or to break through any of the walls of such distillery or premises necessary to be broken open or through, to enable him to enter the said distillery or premises; and the distiller shall forfeit the sum of $1,000.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 31. And be it further enacted, That on the demand of any revenue officer, every distiller, rectifier, or compounder of spirits shall furnish strong, safe, and convenient ladders of sufficient length to enable the officer to examine and gauge any vessel or utensil in such distillery or premises; and shall, at all times when required, supply all assistance, lights, ladders, tools, staging, or other things necessary for inspecting the premises, stock, tools, and apparatus belonging to such person, and shall open all doors, and open for examination all boxes, packages, and all casks, barrels, and other vessels not under the control of a revenue officer in charge, under a penalty of $500 for every refusal or neglect so to do.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 32. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any revenue officer, and any person acting in his aid, to break up the ground on any part of the distillery or premises of a distiller, rectifier, or compounder of liquors, or any ground adjoining or near to such distillery or premises, or any wall or partition thereof, or belonging thereto, or other place, to search for any pipe, cock, private conveyance, or utensil; and upon finding any such pipe or conveyance leading therefrom or thereto, he may break up any ground, house, wall, or other place through or into which such pipe or other conveyance shall lead, and break or cut away such pipe or other conveyance, and turn any cock, or examine whether such pipe or other conveyance may convey or conceal any mash, wort, or beer, or other liquor which may be used for distillation of low wines or spirits from the sight or view of the officer, so as to prevent or hinder him from taking a true account thereof.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 33. And be it further enacted, That no malt, corn, grain, or other material shall be mashed, nor any wash, wort, or beer brewed or made, nor any still used by a distiller at any time between the hour of eleven in the afternoon of any Saturday and the hour of one in the forenoon of the next succeeding Monday; and any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be liable to a penalty of $1,000.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section thirty-three. This section requires that every distillery shall stop two days out of every seven. It is an absolute prohibition on the large distilleries. Not one can run under it. What is known as a two-thousand-bushel house will feed four thousand head of hogs and five hundred head of cattle. Can they afford to "fast" two sevenths of the time? An establishment of this kind cannot stop a single day without the loss of about one thousand dollars. This is the madness of legislation.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to add—

Provided, During the same period no mash shall be allowed to ferment.

[Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

No further amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 34. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits found elsewhere than in a distillery or distillery warehouse, not having been removed therefrom according to law, shall be forfeited to the United States. And in case of the seizure of any distilled spirits found elsewhere than in a distillery, distillery warehouse, or other warehouse for distilled spirits authorized by law, or in the store or place of business of a rectifier, or of a wholesale liquor dealer, or of a compounder of liquors, or in transit from any one of said places; and in case of the seizure of any distilled spirits found in any one of the places aforesaid, or in transit therefrom, which shall not have been received into or sent out therefrom in conformity to law, or in regard to which any of the entries required by law to be made in the books of the owner of such spirits or of the storekeeper, wholesale dealer, rectifier, or compounder, have not been made at the time or in the manner required, or in respect to which the owner or person having possession, control, or charge of said spirits shall have omitted to do any act required to be done, or shall have done or committed any act prohibited in regard to said spirits, the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant of said spirits to show that no fraud has been committed, and that all the requirements of the law in relation to the payment of the tax have been complied with. And every person who shall remove or shall aid or abet in the removal of any distilled spirits from a distillery to a place other than the distillery warehouse as provided by law, or who shall conceal or aid in the concealment of any spirits so removed, or who shall remove or shall aid or abet in the removal of any distilled spirits from any distillery warehouse, or other warehouse for distilled spirits authorized by law, in any manner other than as is provided by law, or who shall conceal, or aid in the concealment of any spirits so removed, shall be liable to a penalty of double the tax imposed on such distilled spirits so removed or concealed, and shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $200 nor more than $5,000 and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than three years.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to strike out the word "law" and insert "provisions of this act."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I hope that will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

No further amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 35. And be it further enacted, That no person shall remove any distilled spirits at any other time than after sun-rising and before sun-setting, in any cask or package containing more than ten gallons from any premises or building in which the same may have been distilled, redistilled, rectified, compounded, manufactured, or stored, and every person who shall violate this provision shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each cask, barrel, or package of spirits so removed; and said spirits, together with any vessel containing the same, and any horse, cart, boat, or other conveyance used in the removal thereof, shall be forfeited to the United States.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 36. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall add or cause to be added any ingredient or substance to any distilled spirits, before the tax imposed by law shall have been paid thereon, for the purpose of creating a fictitious proof, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 for each cask or package so adulterated, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than two years, and every such cask or package, with its contents, shall be forfeited to the United States.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 37. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall evade or attempt to evade the payment of the tax on any distilled spirits, in any manner whatever, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of the tax so evaded or attempted to be evaded; and any person who shall change or alter any stamp, mark, or brand on any cask or package containing distilled spirits, or who shall put into any cask or package spirits of greater strength than is indicated by the inspection mark thereon, or who shall fraudulently use any cask or package having any inspection mark or stamp thereon for the purpose of selling other spirits or spirits of quantity or quality different from the spirits previously inspected therein, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $200 for every cask or package on which the stamp or mark is so changed or altered, or which is so fraudulently used, and, on conviction, shall be fined for each such offense not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 38. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall knowingly use any false weights or measures in ascertaining, weighing, or measuring the quantities of grain, meal, or vegetable materials, molasses, beer, or other substances to be used for distillation, or who shall destroy, break, injure, or tamper with any lock or seal which may be placed on any cistern-room or building, by the duly authorized officers of the revenue, or shall open said lock or seal, or the door to such cistern-room or building, or shall in any manner gain access to the contents therein in the absence of the proper officer, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 and imprisoned not less than one year nor more than three years; and any person who shall use any molasses, beer, or other substance, whether fermented on the premises or elsewhere, for the purpose of producing spirits, before an account for the same shall have been registered in the proper record book provided for that purpose, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000 for each and every offense so committed.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 39. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any internal revenue officer to seize and detain any cask or package containing, or supposed to contain, distilled spirits, when such officer has reason to believe the tax imposed by law upon the same has not been paid, or that the same is being removed in violation of law; and every such cask or package may be held by such officer at a safe place until it shall be determined whether the property so seized is liable by law to be proceeded against for forfeiture; but such summary detention shall not continue in any case longer than forty-eight hours, without process of law or intervention of the officer to whom such seizure is to be reported.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 40. And be it further enacted, That no distillery seized for any violation of law shall be released to the claimant or any intervening party before judgment, except in case of a distillery for which the special tax has been paid, and which has a registered producing capacity of one hundred and fifty proof gallons or more per day, on showing by sufficient affidavits that there are hogs or other live stock, not less than fifty head in number, depending for their feed on the products of said distillery which would suffer injury if the business of such distillery is stopped; such distillery in that case may be released to the claimant, or any other intervening party, at the discretion of the court, on a bond to be given and approved in open court with two or more sureties for the full appraised value of all the property seized, which value shall be ascertained by three competent appraisers to be designated and appointed by the court. In case of the seizure of and judgment of forfeiture against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of distilled spirits having a registered producing capacity of less than one hundred and fifty gallons per day, or of any distillery for the non-payment of the special tax, the still, stills, doubler, worm, worm-tub, and all mash-tubs and fermenting tubs shall be so destroyed as to prevent the use of the same or any part thereof for the purpose of distilling; and the materials shall be sold as in case of other forfeited property.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 41. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every person who empties or draws off, or causes to be emptied or drawn off, any distilled spirits from a cask or package bearing any mark, brand, or stamp required by law, at the time of emptying such cask or package, to efface and obliterate said mark, stamp, or brand. Any such cask or package from which said mark, brand, and stamp, is not so effaced and obliterated, as herein required, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized by any officer of internal revenue wherever found. Any railroad company or other transportation company, or person, who shall receive or transport, or have in possession with intent to transport, or with intent to cause or procure to be transported, any such empty cask or package, or any part thereof, having thereon any brand, mark, or stamp, required by law to be placed on any cask or package containing distilled spirits, shall forfeit $300 for each such cask or package, or any part thereof, so received or transported, or had in possession with the intent aforesaid; and any boat, railroad car, cart, dray, wagon, or other vehicle, and all horses or other animals used in carrying or transporting the same, shall be forfeited to the United States. Any person who shall fail or neglect to efface and obliterate said mark, stamp, or brand, at the time of emptying such cask or package, or who shall receive any such cask or package, or any part thereof, with the intent aforesaid, or who shall transport the same, or knowingly aid or assist therein, or who shall remove any stamp provided by this act from any cask or package containing or which had contained distilled spirits, without defacing and destroying the same at the time of such removal, or who shall aid or assist therein, or who shall have in his possession any such stamp so removed, as aforesaid, or have in his possession any canceled stamp or any stamp which has been used, or which purports to have been used, upon any cask or package of distilled spirits, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, and imprisoned not less than one year nor more than five years.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 42. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall carry on the business of a distiller, rectifier, compounder of liquors, wholesale liquor dealer, retail liquor dealer or manufacturer of stills, without having paid the special tax, as required by law, or who shall carry on the business of a distiller or rectifier without having given bond as required by law, or who shall engage in or carry on the business of a distiller, with intent to defraud the United States of the tax on the spirits distilled by him, or any part thereof, shall, for every such offense, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years. And all distilled spirits or wines, and all stills or other apparatus fitted or intended to be used for the distillation or rectification of spirits, or for the compounding of liquors, owned by such person, wherever found, and all distilled spirits or wines and personal property found in the distillery or rectifying establishment or in the store or other place of business of the compounder, or in any building, room, yard, or inclosure connected therewith, and used with or constituting a part of the premises; and all the right, title, and interest of such person in the lot or tract of land on which such distillery is situated, and all right, title, and interest therein of every person who knowingly has suffered or permitted the business of a distiller to be there carried on, or has connived at the same; and all personal property owned by or in possession of any person who has permitted or suffered any building, yard, or inclosure, or any part thereof to be used for purposes of ingress or egress to or from such distillery, which shall be found in any such building, yard, or inclosure, and all the right, title, and interest of every person in any premises used for ingress or egress to or from such distillery, who has knowingly suffered or permitted such premises to be used for such ingress or egress, shall be forfeited to the United States.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 43. And be it further enacted, That every rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, and compounder of liquors, shall provide himself with a book, to be prepared and kept in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall, on the same day on which he receives any spirits, and before he shall draw off any part thereof, or add water or anything thereto, or in any respect alter the same, enter in such book, and in the proper columns respectively prepared for the purpose, the date when, the name of the person or firm from whom, and the place whence the spirits were received, when and by whom distilled, rectified or compounded, and where and by whom inspected, and, if in the original package, the serial number of each package, the number of wine gallons and proof gallons, the kind of spirit, and the number and kind of adhesive stamps thereon; and every such rectifier, compounder, and wholesale dealer, shall, at the time of sending out of his stock or possession any spirits, and before the same shall be removed from his premises, enter in like manner, in the said book, the day when, and the name and place of business of the person or firm to whom such spirits are to be sent, the quantity and the kind or quality of such spirits, and the strength thereof; and also the number of gallons and fractions of a gallon at proof; and, if in the original packages in which they were received, he shall enter the name of the distiller, and the serial number of the package. And every such book shall be at all times kept in some public or open place on the premises of such rectifier, wholesale dealer, or compounder of liquors, respectively, for inspection; and any revenue officer may make an examination of such book and take an abstract therefrom; and every such book, when it has been filled up as aforesaid, shall be preserved by such rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, or compounder of liquors, for a period not less than two years; and during such time it shall be produced by him to every revenue officer demanding the same; and if any rectifier, wholesale dealer, or compounder of liquors shall refuse or neglect to provide such book or to make entries therein as aforesaid, or shall cancel, alter, obliterate, or destroy any part of such book, or any entry therein, or make any false entry therein, or hinder or obstruct any revenue officer from examining such book or making any entry therein, or taking any abstract therefrom; or if such book shall not be preserved or not produced by any rectifier or wholesale dealer or compounder, as hereinbefore directed, he shall pay a penalty of $100, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than three years.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 44. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any rectifier of distilled spirits, compounder of liquors, liquor dealer, wholesale or retail liquor dealer, to purchase or receive any distilled spirits in quantities greater than twenty gallons from any person other than an authorized rectifier of distilled spirits, compounder of liquors, distiller, or wholesale liquor dealer. Any person violating this section shall forfeit and pay $1,000. Provided, That this shall not be held to apply to judicial sales, nor to sales at public auction made by an auctioneer who has paid a special tax as such.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 45. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits drawn from any cask or other package and placed in any other cask or package containing not less than ten gallons, and intended for sale, shall be again inspected and gauged, and the cask or package into which it is so transferred shall be marked or branded, and such marking or branding shall distinctly indicate the name of the gauger, the time and place of inspection, the proof of the spirits, the particular name of such spirits as known to the trade, together with the name and place of business of the dealer, rectifier, or compounder, as the case may be; and in all cases, except where such spirits have been rectified or compounded, the name also of the distiller, and the distillery where such spirits were produced, and the serial number of the original package; and the absence of such mark or brand shall be taken and held as sufficient cause and evidence for the forfeiture of such unmarked packages of spirits.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 46. And be it further enacted, That on all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, not made from grapes grown in the United States, but made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne, and on all liquors not made from grapes, currants, rhubarb, or berries grown in the United States, but produced by being rectified or mixed with distilled spirits or by the infusion of any matter in spirits, to be sold as wine or by any other name, there shall be levied and paid a tax of six dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing more than one pint and not more than one quart; or three dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing not more than one pint. And any person manufacturing, compounding, or putting up such wines, shall, without previous demand, make return, under oath or affirmation, to the assistant assessor, on the 1st and 15th days of each and every month, or within five days thereafter, of the entire amount of such wines manufactured or put up during the first fifteen days of the month, and the residue of the month, respectively; and the tax herein imposed shall be payable at the time such return is made. And in case such manufacturer shall neglect or refuse to make such return within the time specified, the assessor shall proceed to ascertain the amount of tax due as provided in other cases of a refusal or neglect to make returns, and shall assess the tax, and add a penalty of fifty per cent. to the amount; which said tax, and also said penalty shall be collected in the manner provided for the collection of tax on monthly and other lists. Any person who shall fraudulently evade or attempt to evade the payment of the tax herein imposed shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500, nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to amend in line twelve, after the word "pint," by inserting the words "and at the same rate in any quantity of such merchandise however the same may be put up, or whatever be the package."

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I offer as an amendment what I send to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall appoint one officer for each United States judicial district, to be called a supervisor of internal revenue on distilled spirits and tobacco, whose duty it shall be to reside in such district, and keep his office at some convenient place therein, to be designated by the Commissioner, and who shall receive in compensation for his services such salary as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may deem just and reasonable, not exceeding $2,500 per annum, and shall be paid his necessary traveling expenses when absent from his office on official business. It shall be the duty of every supervisor of internal revenue on distilled spirits and tobacco, under the direction of the Commissioner, to see that all laws and regulations relating to the collection of internal taxes upon distilled spirits and tobacco are faithfully executed and complied with; to aid in the prevention, detection, and punishment of any frauds in relation thereto, and to examine into the efficiency and conduct of all officers of internal revenue within his district; and for such purposes he shall have power to examine all persons, books, papers, accounts, and premises, and to administer oaths, and to summon any person to produce books and papers, or to appear and testify under oath before him, and to compel a compliance with such summons in the same manner as assessors do. It shall be the duty of every supervisor of internal revenue, as aforesaid, to report in writing to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue any neglect of duty, incompetency, delinquency, or malfeasance in office of any internal revenue officer within his district, of which he may obtain knowledge, with a statement of all the facts in each case, and any evidence sustaining the same; and he shall have power to transfer any inspector, gauger, or storekeeper from one distillery, or other place of duty, to another, or from one collection district to another within his district; and may, by notice in writing, suspend from duty any such inspector, gauger, or storekeeper, and in case of suspension shall immediately notify the collector of the proper district and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and within three days thereafter make report of his action, and his reasons therefor, in writing, to said Commissioner, who shall thereupon take such further action in the case as he may deem proper.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, no general or special agent, by whatever name or designation he may be known, of the Treasury Department in connection with the internal revenue, except as provided for in this act, shall be appointed, commissioned, employed, or continued in office, and that the term of office or employment of all such general or special agents now authorized as aforesaid under employment at the time of the passage of this act shall expire ten days after this act shall take effect.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act no assessor or collector shall be authorized to enter any other district than the one for which he has been appointed for the purpose of exercising any authority except as expressly provided for by this act.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman, if the House will give me their attention for a moment, I will explain the reasons for these sections as they have been understood by the committee. The first of these sections is taken from the bill as originally reported, but under their instructions the committee did not feel that they had authority to put it in this bill, as it includes this new officer. But these three sections are thought by the committee to be proper, and hence they agreed to report them as an amendment.

The first section provides for a superintendent or supervising agent, who is to take the place of all these roving officers that are holding commissions now and traveling all over the country. We thought it would be right and proper to put one such officer in each United States judicial district, and not allow him to have any power to seize property or anything of that kind, but simply a supervisory control, to examine books and papers and take evidence and report to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, so as to be an aid in the prevention of frauds, and in holding the local officers to their duty. That is the object of the first section.

We have provided for the abolition of inspectors. There are to be no inspectors under this law. We dispense with all the agents that are now appointed, sometimes called special agents, sometimes general agents, and sometimes inspectors. There are fifteen hundred of them now appointed at from four to six dollars a day, with their expenses. We wipe out all those officers, and say that after ten days from the time this bill takes effect they shall go out of commission and their places are to be supplied by this one man in each United States judicial district who shall have supervisory control.

That is the intention of the three sections, and nothing more. It is simply to do away with all these men who are traveling over the country and supply their places with one officer in each United States judicial district. The committee think this a proper amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MULLINS. I offer the following amendment, which meets the approval of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means:

In line nineteen, after the word "respectively," insert "except when the wine is manufactured and put up or used exclusively by the family of the person manufacturing the same."

Mr. SCHENCK. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 47. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury in any district such number of internal revenue storekeepers as may be necessary, the compensation of each of whom shall be five dollars per day, one or more of whom shall be assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to every bonded warehouse established by law; and no such storekeeper shall be engaged in any other business while in the service of the United States. Every storekeeper shall take an oath faithfully to perform the duties of his office, and shall give a bond, to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the faithful discharge of his duties, in such form and for such amount as the Commissioner may prescribe. Every storekeeper shall have charge of the warehouse to which he may be assigned, under the direction of the collector controlling the same, which warehouse shall be in the joint custody of such storekeeper and the proprietor thereof, and kept securely locked, and shall at no time be unlocked and opened, or remain open, unless in the presence of such storekeeper or other person who may be designated to act for him as hereinafter provided; and no articles shall be received in or delivered from such warehouse except on an order or permit addressed to the storekeeper and signed by the collector having control of the warehouse. Every storekeeper shall keep a warehouse book, which shall at all times be open to the examination of any revenue officer, in which he shall enter an account of all articles deposited in the warehouse to which he is assigned, indicating in each case the date of the deposit, by whom manufactured or produced, the number and description of the packages and contents, the quantities therein, the marks and serial numbers thereon, and by whom gauged, inspected, or weighed, and if distilled spirits, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons; and before delivering any article from the warehouse, he shall enter in said book the date of the permit or order of the collector for the delivery of such articles, the number and description of the packages, the marks and serial numbers thereon, the date of delivery, to whom delivered, and for what purpose, which purpose shall be specified in the permit or order for delivery, and in case of delivery of any distilled spirits the number of gauge or wine gallons, and of proof gallons shall also be stated; and such further particulars shall be entered in the warehouse books as may be prescribed or found necessary for the identification of the packages, to insure the correct delivery thereof and proper accountability therefor. A daily return shall be furnished by every storekeeper to the collector of the district of all articles received in and delivered from the warehouse during the day preceding that on which the return is made, a copy of which shall be mailed by him at the same time to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and each storekeeper shall, on the first Monday of every month, make a report in triplicate of the number of packages of all articles, with the several descriptions thereof respectively, as above provided, which remained in the warehouse at the date of his last report, and of all articles received therein and delivered therefrom during the preceding month, and of all articles remaining therein at the end of said month; one of which reports shall be by him delivered to the assessor of the district, to be recorded and filed in his office; one delivered to the collector having control of the warehouse, to be recorded and filed in his office; and one transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be recorded and filed in his office. Any internal revenue storekeeper may be transferred by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from one warehouse to another within the same district. In case of the absence of any internal revenue storekeeper by sickness or from any other cause, the collector having control of the warehouse may designate a person to have temporary charge of such warehouse, who shall, during such absence, perform the duties and receive the pay of the storekeeper for the time he may be so employed; and for any violation of the law he shall be subject to the same punishment as storekeepers. Any storekeeper or other person in the employment of the United States having charge of a bonded warehouse, who shall remove or allow to be removed any cask or other package therefrom without an order or permit of the collector, or which has not been marked or stamped in the manner required by law, or shall remove or allow to be removed any part of the contents of any cask or package deposited therein, shall be immediately dismissed from office or employment, and, on conviction, be fined not less than $500, nor more than $2,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than two years.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend this section by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That no distilled spirits shall be removed from the place of distillation until the tax provided for in this act shall have been paid, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the gentleman withdraw that amendment for a moment, until I have offered one which has been agreed upon by the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. PRICE. To accomplish the same purpose?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; to accomplish a different purpose, but it is to a preceding part of the section.

Mr. PRICE. Very well; I will withdraw the amendment for that purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to amend the first sentence of this section by inserting after the words "such number of internal revenue storekeepers as may be necessary," the words "who shall be bona fide residents of the districts in which they may be appointed." This provision relates to the storekeepers to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I now renew my amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a point of order. This section relates exclusively to and defines the duties of storekeepers. I think the amendment is not pertinent to this section, though there are many other portions of the bill to which it would be germane. I make the point of order that the proposed amendment is not germane to the section now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. KOONTZ. I move to amend this section by inserting after the words "the compensation of each of whom shall be five dollars per day," near the commencement of the section, the words "to be paid by the United States." I understood from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. SCHENCK] that the intention was to have these storekeepers paid by the United States. But it is not "so nominated in the bond," as I understand this section. I want to have this matter fixed, so that there may be no misunderstanding about it.

The amendment of Mr. KOONTZ was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to amend this section by striking out the following:

Any internal revenue storekeeper may be transferred by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from one warehouse to another within the same district.

Before making any observations on this amendment I wish to call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] which was adopted a few minutes since. If I understood it correctly, the supervisor provided for by that amendment was authorized to change and alter these storekeepers, and designate where they shall go. Is that so?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then I move to strike out the words I have indicated. If you are going to give the power to do any of these things, then let it be concentrated in one person. By the amendment which you have already adopted you propose to give the supervisor of the judicial district the power to transfer these storekeepers from one place to another at his option. Then by this section you give that same power to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And no storekeeper may be able to perform any duty, because he may be kept marching around by this divided allegiance. There is a confusion in the bill. It is not important to me, so far as I am concerned in perfecting this bill, whether the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the supervisor has this power. But I ask the Committee of Ways and Means to see that this divided duty does not lead to difficulties.

Mr. LOGAN. This is included in this bill, because, under the resolution of instructions to the committee no provision was made for it, and we had to provide for it somewhere in the bill. I would suggest to the gentleman to modify his amendment so as to insert before the words "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue," the words "the supervisor of the judicial district, or;" so that either may give the orders, the Commissioner, of course, being governed by the information he may receive from the supervisor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am willing to modify my amendment in that way. I merely wanted to submit the suggestion to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment, as modified.

Mr. ROBINSON. But, Mr. Chairman, that amendment would still leave it doubtful. We want something positive in these matters as to who shall have this power. I would still suggest that one or the other of these officers shall have the control of the matter.

Mr. LOGAN. The words I have suggested were in the original bill. The Commissioner can never exercise this power except on the recommendation of the supervisor. In fact he is to report all his acts to the Commissioner, to be supervised by him, as will be seen by reference to the amendment I offered.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the permission to each under the law is absolute; and any person appointed will deny the authority either of the Commissioner or of the other officer. I do not wish to continue this discussion. But I will say that unless this is amended in some way, you will have no peace and no harmony of action under this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. There is another reason for the modification I have suggested. The supervising agent may have more than one district within his jurisdiction; "a United States judicial circuit or district." This bill leaves it to the two in the same district; but where it is outside of the district the supervisor has the control of it. The changing in the same district will depend upon the recommendation of the supervisor. In fact, under this bill the Commissioner might revoke his action; that is probably the true construction of it; but it does not affect the harmony of the bill.

The amendment, as modified, was then agreed to.

Mr. BARNES. In this section is to be found the following provision:

In case of the absence of any internal revenue storekeeper by sickness or from any other cause, the collector having control of the warehouse may designate a person to have temporary charge of such warehouse, who shall, during such absence, perform the duties and receive the pay of the storekeeper for the time he may be so employed; and for any violation of the law he shall be subject to the same punishment as storekeepers.

I move to amend this clause by inserting after the words "may designate," the words, "with the consent and approval of the bondsmen of the absent storekeeper." By the section, as it now stands, the appointment of this temporary storekeeper is given to the collector of the district where the storehouse is situated. There is no storekeeper in the districts with which I am acquainted that cannot be made safe at less than $2,000 a year. The word "ring" has been frequently used in this debate. I would suggest that this section makes a ring in a very few hands—the collector, the assessor, and the storekeeper to be appointed by the collector of the district. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no! we object to that amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I oppose the amendment, and ask for a vote.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BARNES; and upon a division—ayes, twenty-two, noes not counted, it was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 48. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in every collection district where the same may be necessary, one or more internal revenue gaugers, who shall each take an oath faithfully to perform his duties, and shall give his bond, with one or more sureties, satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the faithful discharge of the duties assigned to him by law or regulations; and the penal sum of said bond shall not be less than $5,000, and said bond shall be renewed or strengthened as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require. The duties of every such gauger shall be performed under the supervision and direction of the collector of the district to which he may be assigned, or of the collector in charge of exports at any port of entry to which he may be assigned. Fees for gauging and inspecting shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be paid to the collector by the owner or producer of the articles to be gauged and inspected; and said collector shall retain all amounts so received as such fees until the last day of each month, when the aggregate amount of fees so paid that month shall, under regulation to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be paid to the gauger performing the duty; but in any city or part of a city within a district where there may be two or more gaugers on duty, the said fees shall be equally divided by the collector among them. In no case, however, shall the aggregate monthly fees of any gauger exceed at the rate of $3,000 per annum. All necessary labor and expenses attending the gauging of any article shall be furnished and borne by the owner or producer of such articles. Every gauger shall, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, make a daily return, in duplicate; one to be delivered to the assessor and the other to the collector of his district, giving a true account, in detail, of all articles gauged and proved or inspected by him, and for whom, and the number and kind of stamps used by him. Any gauger who shall make any false or fraudulent inspection, gauging, or proof shall pay a penalty of $1,000, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than three years.

Mr. KOONTZ. In the sentence prescribing who shall pay the fees for gauging and inspecting, I move to strike out the words "owner or producer of the articles to be gauged or inspected," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "United States." I think that the fees to be paid these various officers ought in all cases to be paid by the Government. I think it is contrary to sound policy that the officer should be any way responsible or under obligation to the distiller; for that reason I move this amendment. And I think it should be concurred in for the same reason that the storekeepers were provided to be paid by the Government of the United States. I now yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

Mr. ROBINSON. I trust this amendment will be adopted. I think that in all cases where a distiller or manufacturer or any person interested against the Government is allowed to pay the officer it is very bad policy. If we employ officers we should pay them a fair and reasonable remuneration for their services. In no case should any officer be paid by the person who is to pay the tax founded upon the return of that officer. Wherever that is allowed, whether intended or not, it is an invitation to fraud and will always result in fraud.

Mr. SCHENCK. As a general rule, all that can be considered as the compensation or salary of officers, I think myself should be paid by the Government. But this case is different. The fees here are in the nature of costs and expenses attending the preparation of the tax-paid property for the market. It is true we have provided that the law shall continue as it is now; that these fees shall be paid by the owner of the property. But we have provided that those fees shall go to the collector who, under his bond and obligation, takes care of them, and makes distribution of them at the close of each month.

Then there is a further provision that no gauger shall receive more than $3,000 a year. Gentlemen are aware that the law, as it now stands, is very loose upon this subject. While it permits the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to fix the fees for the gauging and inspection of whisky, oil, and other matters of that kind, the fees are so irregular at different places that we find it so happens that some gaugers are receiving at the rate of $56,000 a year. We have separated the offices. We have abolished the office of inspector and only retained the office of gauger. Yes, sir, the amount paid in fees for gauging oil was $63,000. I cannot answer as to whisky. I do not think the whisky inspectors receive in the same proportion. In some instances in Brooklyn and New York, where the business is very large, the allowances for inspection have been very large indeed. I have one recent case in my mind where the fees of one inspector amounted to $800, an inspector who employs two boys to assist him, and that is only one half of what the law allowed him; but they compromised and he took one half of what the law allowed him. The result is that favorite inspectors have all the business thrown into their hands. And we have a provision, also, correcting this. We provide that the mere fees shall go into the hands of the collector and shall be distributed equally. This prevents the filling of the pocket of one and starving another, if more than one is necessary. And by the limitation that they shall not receive more than $3,000 a year I think we provide against multiplying these appointments. We have prepared this with great care after having all the facts before us, and I hope it will be permitted to stand.

The question was taken on Mr. KOONTZ's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. MULLINS. I wish to move that there be inserted in this section a provision requiring all these officers to take the oath prescribed by the United States, I mean the iron-clad oath. My idea is that all these collectors, inspectors, and assessors should be compelled to take that oath. I do not want this business to go into the hands of men who have tried to break up this Government, and who have met us in dreadful battle. In one place in my county they have appointed a guerrilla.

A MEMBER. A gorilla? [Laughter.]

Mr. MULLINS. I will call him a gorilla if it will please the gentleman. [Renewed laughter.] I want these men all compelled to take the "iron-clad" oath. Perhaps a proviso can be added to this bill to answer my purpose.

Mr. SCHENCK. The general law now requires that all officers shall take that oath.

Mr. MULLINS. If that be so it affords me great relief. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. JUDD. We have now reached the point when the suspended amendments to the first section were to be acted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments are as follows: The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] moved the following:

Insert after the word "thereof," "before removal from the distillery warehouse, except as otherwise provided by this act;" so it will read:

That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits on which the tax prescribed by law has not been paid a tax of fifty cents on each and every proof gallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or any person having possession thereof, before removal from the distillery, warehouse, &c.

To that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUDD] moved the following amendment:

Strike out the words "except as otherwise provided by this act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not think the committee understood that amendment.

Mr. JUDD. Yes, we did.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order to the first section.

The Clerk read the next section in order, as follows:

SEC. 49. And be it further enacted, That the collector of internal revenue at any port of entry in the United States shall have charge of all matters relating to the exportation from said port of articles subject to tax under the laws to provide internal revenue, subject to such regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe; and at any port of entry where there is more than one collector of internal revenue, the said Commissioner shall designate one of said collectors to be collector in charge of exports, whose duty it shall be to have charge of all matters relating to exportations as aforesaid from such port of entry; and at such ports of entry, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may deem necessary, there shall be an officer appointed by him to superintend all matters of exportation and drawback, under the direction of the said collector, to be known as superintendent of exports, whose compensation therefor shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but shall not exceed in any case an annual rate of $2,000, excepting at New York, where the compensation shall not exceed an annual rate of $3,000. And any books, papers, and documents in the respective ports relating to the drawback of taxes paid under the internal revenue laws shall be delivered to said collector of internal revenue in charge of exports; and any collector of internal revenue, or superintendent of exports and drawbacks, shall have authority to administer such oaths and certify to such papers as may be necessary under any rules and regulations that may be prescribed under the authority herein conferred.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the foregoing section.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend the section by adding to it what I send to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall authorize such distillers as may apply to be so authorized, and as he may deem suitable, distillers of alcohol and spirituous liquors for export. Persons so authorized may distill alcohol and spirituous liquors for export and for the uses specified and authorized in sections fifty-six, fifty-seven, fifty-eight, and fifty-nine of this act, and for no other purpose; and distillers not so authorized shall not distill alcohol or spirituous liquors for export or for the purposes specified in said sections. All provisions of this act relating to the transportation of distilled spirits in bond shall be limited to spirits produced by persons designated as authorized by this section.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The effect of this amendment, with some slight alterations in the bill, will be to limit the manufacture of alcohol and spirituous liquors for exportation or use in the production of chemicals and medicines, and for the preservation of anatomical preparations, to a small number of distilleries to be designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No spirits except those produced by those persons specially designated can be transported in bond. The duties on all other spirits are to be paid at the distillery warehouse. The effect of this will be to enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to put this business of manufacturing for export into the hands of the most responsible persons in the business, in the best collection districts where the officers are faithful in the discharge of their duty. He will be able also to know exactly over what route this spirit is transported from the distilleries producing it to the bonded warehouses at the ports of entry from whence it is to be shipped to foreign countries. The whole of this business does not amount at present to more than four or five million gallons. Therefore the very amount of spirits sent forward by these people, taken in connection with the amount exported, will always be a check upon the business.

If this amendment is adopted I shall follow it up by a further proposition to amend the bill so that spirits manufactured and transported in bond for exportation and for these other purposes, shall not be withdrawn from the bonded warehouse upon the payment of the tax under any circumstances whatsoever. For it is within my experience in office that when authority was given to send forward in bond spirits for export, thousands and millions of gallons were sent off by distillers for the purpose of getting back the payment of the duties. This same provision I think is contained in the bill of the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. In the other bill, not in this.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are two ways in which business can be done, if it is to be done at all. One is to allow every distiller to send forward spirits in bond for export. Another to allow a limited number of distillers, not many, perhaps half a dozen, to do that business. Another is to allow a drawback, which is a system open to all sorts of fraud. Now, then, as between these three ways I think this which I offer is the best, inasmuch as it limits the business of sending in bond to a very small number of distillers to be selected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, instead of having every distiller in the country authorized to send forward in bond upon a statement made by him that he intends his spirits for exportation.

Mr. JUDD. It seems to me the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts has precisely as many virtues in it for the protection of the revenue as the sections we are contending against. The remarkable feature of the amendment is its generous confidence. Now, I am not prepared to delegate to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or any other public functionary, the dictation and declaration as to what amount, in what form, and in what manner we shall collect the taxes that belong to the Government. That is the result of this amendment. It places the power in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to name just as many distilleries for export as in his discretion he sees fit. Now, then, what is there to prevent his naming every distillery in the United States?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I propose that we put in the bill a provision that spirits sent forward in bond for export shall never be withdrawn from the bonded warehouse upon payment of the tax. They just put their spirits into a safe from which it cannot be withdrawn till it goes through the port of entry to a foreign country. They cannot get their spirits out, and no more persons will go into the business than the business can support.

Mr. JUDD. My friend has more confidence in bonds than I have, and in transportation bonds than I have; and toward the close of his first remarks he illustrated how easily, when you provide for transportation in bond for a particular purpose, the effect of the law might be evaded.

I repeat again that the provision, as I understand it, gives power to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to name every distillery in the United States as a distillery to manufacture alcohol for exportation. Now, then, if, as we believe, in this business of transportation and pretended exportation there is fraud that we are trying to guard against, I have not generous confidence enough to allow this power to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I am for determining for ourselves, by legislation, if we can, in what manner distilled spirits shall be handled, in what places and at what point the tax shall be collected. I may be entirely mistaken, but I think I see in this power proposed to be conferred on the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a power which if fraudulently exercised, if improvidently exercised, if unwisely exercised would get rid of the entire effect of the restriction incorporated in the first section of the bill, which requires the tax to be paid at the distillery. That has been determined upon, and I think I see in the practical operation of this amendment a return to the old system of setting this article in motion without having the tax paid.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word for the purpose of making some remarks in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Judd.] He seems to misunderstand my amendment, and if he will give me his attention I will try to explain it. In the first place, these distillers who are to be authorized to manufacture spirits for exportation are prohibited by the terms of this amendment from manufacturing spirituous liquor for general use. We classify the distillers into two classes. Those who manufacture for consumption in this country are obliged to pay at the distillery warehouse all the taxes levied, as provided in the first section of the bill. Those who manufacture for export are not to manufacture for any other purpose. Therefore the assessor and collector and every officer will know that the product of a distillery so designated is to go forward in bond for export. The product of a distillery not so designated cannot be removed from the distillery warehouse until the taxes are paid. We therefore classify and separate the businesses absolutely.

Now, as to its being a monopoly to be authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, it amounts to nothing in that respect. To be sure but a small number of persons can live by manufacturing spirits for export, but there will be a sufficient number to enable them to compete with each other and keep the price at a proper rate as compared with the price for home consumption, because these manufacturers come in competition with the producers of spirituous liquors in other countries; and inasmuch as a distillery established at Peoria, for example, to manufacture for export cannot, by any legal process, get the product of the distillery into the general trade of the country, they must sell it for export, and therefore they have to take the price which the market of the world enables them to get. Whenever spirituous liquors are put upon railroads and rivers for exportation there is danger that they may be diverted. But the smaller the number of persons engaged in the manufacture of these spirits who are authorized to transport in bond the less the danger that they will be taken off by the way, and frauds committed upon the Government. The question is whether you will have five or six men in this country authorized to export in bond, or whether you will have two or three hundred of them.

Mr. PRICE. If I understand the force of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Boutwell] it is simply to narrow down the danger, so to speak. His argument admits that it is not safe to allow distillers promiscuously to put their liquors upon the railroads and steamboats of the country in bond, and he proposes to correct the evil by limiting that privilege to a certain number of men to be named and specified by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Now, I do not believe there is any safety in allowing any man to ship a gallon of distilled spirits before the tax upon it has been paid. We have tried this thing for years; it has been guarded by all the ingenuity that could be brought to bear upon the question by those best calculated to advise wisely and well in regard to it; and we have failed signally in every case. The very moment the spirits have left the distillery and been put in transit we have been cheated out of the tax upon it; and I am afraid the men in that business now are of that class who will cheat us every opportunity that is offered. I do not believe there is any security to the Government in collecting this tax unless you compel it to be paid before the spirits leave the distillery. Let the tax be paid at the place where it is manufactured, and then, if it is exported, when it gets to the place of sale get the certificate of the party to whom it is consigned or sold, and when that certificate gets back to this country let the drawback be paid. If it takes three months, very well; if it takes three years, very well. It is a matter of no importance to me how long it takes. But I do not propose that they shall get the benefit of the drawback until it is established by a certificate that the liquor has gone to a foreign country, never to return. Thousands and thousands of barrels have been shipped for export which never was exported at all, and the tax upon it was never paid, and never will be.

This proposition is only tinkering with the matter without securing any degree of safety. If I ever get the opportunity I shall propose the same amendment that I tried to have considered a few minutes ago, providing that no liquor shall be removed from the place of distillation until the tax has been paid upon it; and when I offer that amendment I will give my reasons for it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PAINE. I renew it. I wish the committee to understand what is the extent of this foreign commerce in distilled spirits and alcohol, for the benefit of which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Boutwell] proposes to open wide the door to frauds upon the revenue by the establishment of this system of transportation in bond. I asked the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, here in his seat, on yesterday or the day before, what was the amount of this exportation of distilled spirits and alcohol. He informed me that the first cost of the manufacture of the alcohol and rum exported did not exceed $5,000,000. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Boutwell] tells us that the amount exported and used in manufacturing cosmetics, &c., does not, in the aggregate, exceed five million gallons. The gentleman remarks that he did not include cosmetics in this estimate; so that the exportation amounts to five million gallons.

Now, let us put this export trade at the highest figures, those of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. We will say that the cost of the manufacture of the distilled spirits and alcohol exported is $5,000,000; that it actually costs the parties who export it that amount. If that be so, then I take it it would be a very liberal allowance if we say of those engaged in this export trade that they make a net profit of twenty per cent. on this cost of $5,000,000; that would be a net profit of $1,000,000. Now, let us see what we lose in order to enable these exporters to realize $1,000,000 on this trade. In the first place the internal tax on spirits, the first cost of which is $5,000,000, will be not less than $7,500,000, for the tax per gallon under this bill is over fifty cents, while the cost is less than thirty-five cents.

In the first place this tax of $7,500,000 is not paid to the Government. The exporters take the commodity free of that tax. It will be safe to say, Mr. Chairman, that by adopting this system of transportation in bond we furnish opportunities for frauds upon the Treasury to an equal or greater amount. I therefore believe that besides remitting the $7,500,000 of taxes, we shall incur an actual loss of at least $7,500,000 through frauds on the Treasury, in transportation in bond through the United States for the pretended purpose of exportation. So that the Government will actually lose, I think, not less than $7,500,000 in order to enable the gentleman's friends to realize a profit of $1,000,000.

Now, if there can be no export trade in distilled spirits for the benefit of these exporters, without involving the United States Government in this serious loss, then I am opposed to the existence of any such export trade. I say frankly that I am willing to crush it—nay, it must be our duty to crush it—if it cannot be carried on except at such an immense expense to the people of the country. Unless some other plan can be devised, unless the system of drawbacks which has been proposed by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Logan,] or some other system, will obviate this great loss to the Government, I am in favor of abolishing altogether this export trade in distilled spirits. Sir, it is at best but mere bagatelle. It is utterly insignificant! It is not worth while for us to expend our efforts to preserve it if it involves an annual loss to the country of millions of dollars.

Now, sir, let the plan which has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois be fully explained, and if it proves to be one by which we can allow this export trade in distilled spirits to live without costing the Government of the United States $7,500,000 or $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 annually, then let it live; if not, let it disappear.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in relation to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Boutwell.] But before doing so, I wish to reply briefly to my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. Paine.] I cannot see how it is possible that the Government can lose anything by the exportation of any article.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the gentleman will yield one moment I desire to say that, at the suggestion of some gentlemen around me, I have modified my amendment so that there shall be no discretionary power vested in the Commissioner, but that whoever applies for authority to manufacture, especially for exportation, according to the provisions of the law, shall be authorized to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, the amount of distilled spirits in this country paying the tax must necessarily be measured by the consumption. Therefore, if we export five million gallons or ten million gallons it cannot affect the amount of money that goes into the Treasury, because whatever amount is necessary for consumption in this country will either pay the tax or evade it by some fraudulent means. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts who offered this amendment to a proposition which I think is absolutely conclusive upon this question. By the provisions which we have already inserted in this bill we are about to impose, indirectly, special taxes which will amount to about fourteen cents per gallon on all distilled spirits manufactured in this country, and this indirect taxation cannot be in any manner evaded even by those who desire to export distilled spirits.

Now, I submit to the gentleman, whether there will be any spirits exported when there is an indirect taxation of fourteen cents per gallon on spirits. I believe that by this indirect tax we shall actually cut off most of the exportation of distilled spirits. One of these methods of taxation was adopted to-day, on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Boutwell,] and I should have opposed it if I had fully understood the proposition. That amendment imposes a tax of two dollars for every twenty bushels of grain mashed, amounting to about three and one third cents per gallon—a much higher tax than was proposed by the committee. Then we propose to impose a tax of four dollars on each barrel, making ten cents more per gallon.

But there is another difficulty in the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The Supreme Court has decided that the Government cannot authorize any special persons or class of persons to carry on a business. The Court held if we adopt any principle here we must let every man who desires to manufacture spirits for exportation do so. If we license one man we must license every other man in the United States to manufacture spirits for exportation. We reasoned in a circle and fell back upon the proposition in the bill to allow the distillers to ship the goods in bond to the ports of entry for exportation. So I see no advantage in the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts over the proposition now contained in the printed bill before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, under the order of the House the committee will take a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At half past seven o'clock p. m. the Committee of the Whole was called to order by the chairman, Mr. POMEROY, and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The pending question was on Mr. BOUTWELL'S amendment to the forty-ninth section, which was read, as follows:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall authorize such distillers as may apply to be so authorized, and as he may deem suitable, distillers of alcohol and spirituous liquors for export. Persons so authorized may distill alcohol and spirituous liquors for export and for the uses specified and authorized in sections fifty-six, fifty-seven, fifty-eight, and fifty-nine of this act, and for no other purpose; and distillers not so authorized shall not distill alcohol or spirituous liquors for export or for the purposes specified in said sections. All provisions of this act relating to the transportation of distilled spirits in bond shall be limited to spirits produced by persons designated or authorized by this section.

Mr. LOGAN. I move the following amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the date at which this act shall take effect there shall be an allowance of drawback on all rum and alcohol on which any internal tax shall hereafter be paid, equal in amount to the tax so paid thereon and no more, when exported in good faith. The payment of said drawback to be made only when the evidence shall be furnished to the entire satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury by such person or persons who shall claim allowance of drawback that such tax has been paid, and the said rum or alcohol so exported—landed, and delivered to the consignee or consignees at the foreign port to which it was exported, to be proved by the sworn testimony of responsible persons where exported from and exported to—the same to be paid by the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Treasurer of the United States, out of any money arising from internal tax on distilled spirits not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That no claim for drawback shall be allowed on either of the said articles which shall have been exported as aforesaid prior to the time at which this act shall take effect.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall fraudulently claim or seek to obtain an allowance of drawback on any article or articles aforesaid on which no internal tax shall have been paid, or shall fraudulently claim any greater allowance or drawback than the tax actually paid thereon as aforesaid, such person or persons shall forfeit and pay to the Government of the United States triple the amount wrongfully or fraudulently sought to be obtained; and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period not less than one nor more than ten years.

Mr. SHANKS. There is no quorum present.

Mr. LOGAN. I prefer not to submit my remarks until the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is present.

Mr. JUDD. We amended the first section this morning, and if the amendment of my colleague be adopted it will lead to striking out five or six sections, and it is therefore desirable the chairman should be present.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the vote be taken on the amendment it will develop the absence of a quorum.

The committee divided on the amendment; and there were—ayes 13, noes 17; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, in obedience to the rules, ordered the roll to be called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boles, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Burr, Butler, Cake, Cary, Chanler, Churchill, Reader W. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stokes, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and finding itself without a quorum had directed the roll to be called and the names of the absentees to be reported to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to move, as proposed by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means last evening, that the list of absentees be published in two daily papers besides the Globe? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent; no quorum being present.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Is it in order for me to explain why the chairman of the committee is not present?

The SPEAKER. It would be by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I object.

Mr. GRISWOLD. He is within the building, but ill.

Mr. ALLISON. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was accordingly called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Boles, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Burr, Butler, Cake, Chanler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Delano, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferry, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hill, Hinds, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Jones, Kelley, Kitchen, Knott, Laffin, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, Marshall, McCarthy, McCullough, McKee, Mercer, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, Nicholson, Nunn, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Robinson, Root, Ross, Sawyer, Selye, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stokes, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Thomas Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward.

The SPEAKER. Only eighty members have answered to their names. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll of absentees for excuses.

The Clerk accordingly called the roll for excuses.

GEORGE M. ADAMS.

Mr. GROVER. Mr. ADAMS left the House to-day sick. He is not able to leave his lodgings to-night. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. ANDERSON. No excuse offered.

STEVENSON ARCHER.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ARCHER has leave of absence.

SAMUEL M. ARNELL.

Mr. MAYNARD. My colleague desires me to state that the state of his health is such as to render it utterly impossible for him to be out at night. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

DELOS R. ASHLEY. No excuse offered.

JAMES M. ASHLEY.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ASHLEY has leave of absence.

SAMUEL B. AXTELL. No excuse offered.

JOHN D. BALDWIN. No excuse offered.

DEMAS BARNES. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. BARNUM is sick, and has been so for some months. He has leave of absence.

FERNANDO C. BEAMAN.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Mr. BEAMAN was excused last night on account of sickness. He is still sick, and I move that he be excused. The motion was agreed to.

JOHN BEATTY. No excuse offered.

JOHN F. BENJAMIN. No excuse offered.

JACOB BENTON. No excuse offered.

JOHN A. BINGHAM. No excuse offered.

THOMAS BOLES. No excuse offered.

BENJAMIN BOYER. No excuse offered.

HENRY P. H. BROMWELL.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. BROMWELL has leave of absence.

JAMES BROOKS. No excuse offered.

HENRY L. CAKE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks Mr. CAKE has leave of absence.

JOHN C. CHURCHILL.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. CHURCHILL has leave of absence.

READER W. CLARKE.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CLARKE has leave of absence on account of general debility.

SIDNEY CLARKE. No excuse offered.

AMASA COBB. No excuse offered.

BURTON C. COOK.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. COOK has leave of absence.

THOMAS CORNELL. No excuse offered.

JOHN COVODE. No excuse offered.

SHELBY M. CULLOM. No excuse offered.

HENRY L. DAWES.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. DAWES has leave of absence.

GRENVILLE M. DODGE.

The SPEAKER. Mr. DODGE has leave of absence.

IGNATIUS DONNELLY. No excuse offered.

JOHN F. DRIGGS. No excuse offered.

EPHRAIM R. ECKLEY. No excuse offered.

BENJAMIN EGLESTON. No excuse offered.

CHARLES A. ELDRIDGE. No excuse offered.

THOMAS W. FERRY. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM C. FIELDS.

Mr. KELSEY. My colleague, Mr. FIELDS, has leave of absence.

DARWIN A. FINNEY.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. FINNEY has been absent a long time on account of illness. I move that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. He has been absent during the entire session on account of sickness. He will be regarded as excused.

ADAM J. GLOSSBRENNER.

Mr. GETZ. Mr. GLOSSBRENNER is absent by the leave of the House.

JOSEPH J. GRAVELY. No excuse offered.

CHARLES HAIGHT. No excuse offered.

GEORGE A. HALSEY. No excuse offered.

ABNER C. HARDING. No excuse offered.

JOHN HILL. No excuse offered.

JAMES HINDS. No excuse offered.

BENJAMIN F. HOPKINS.

Mr. PAINE. I believe Mr. HOPKINS has leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember.

Mr. PAINE. I do not remember, but I have a very strong impression that he has.

The SPEAKER. He is certainly not within a thousand miles of the city. The Chair thinks he has leave of absence, and he will be regarded as excused.

ASAHIEL W. HUBBARD.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My colleague, Mr. HUBBARD, is unwell, and has leave of absence.

RICHARD D. HUBBARD.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. My colleague, Mr. HUBBARD, has leave of absence.

CALVIN T. HULBURD. No excuse offered.

JAMES M. HUMPHREY. No excuse offered.

MORTON C. HUNTER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. My colleague, Mr. HUNTER, has leave of absence.

THOMAS L. JONES. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM D. KELLEY.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move that Mr. KELLEY be excused. On account of the condition of his health he is not fit to be here.

The motion was agreed to.

BETHUEL M. KITCHEN.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. Mr. KITCHEN is absent by leave of the House.

J. PROCTER KNOTT. No excuse offered.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is it not in order to move that all gentlemen have leave of absence for to-night?

The SPEAKER. Each case must be treated individually, unless the call shall be dispensed with.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I doubt if there will be a quorum here to-night.

ADDISON H. LAFLIN.

Mr. FERRISS. Mr. LAFLIN is absent by leave of the House.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE.

Mr. WELKER. My colleague, Mr. LAWRENCE, is absent on leave.

WILLIAM S. LINCOLN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, Mr. LINCOLN, stated to the Chair this afternoon that he was called home on important business. The Speaker intended to ask leave of absence for him, but he was not in the chair this afternoon at any time when he could do so.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN F. LOAN. No excuse offered.

JOHN LYNCH.

Mr. PETERS. My colleague, Mr. LYNCH, was called to New York on very important business. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

RUFUS MALLORY. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL S. MARSHALL. No excuse offered.

DENNIS MCCARTHY.

Mr. STEWART. My colleague, Mr. MCCARTHY, was called away this afternoon. He intended to ask leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had his name on his list, and intended to ask leave of absence for him. He will be excused if there is no objection.

No objection was made.

HIRAM McCULLOUGH.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland, Mr. McCULLOUGH, has leave of absence.

SAMUEL McKEE.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. McKEE, is sick and unable to be here. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

ULYSSES MERCUR. No excuse offered.

DANIEL J. MORRELL. No excuse offered.

JOHN MORRISSEY. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM MÜNGEN. No excuse offered.

LEONARD MYERS.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague, Mr. MYERS, is temporarily indisposed. [Laughter.] He expects to be here during the evening. I ask that he be excused.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I object.

Mr. O'NEILL. He is now outside the Hall, waiting to come in.

The question was taken on the motion to excuse Mr. MYERS; and it was not agreed to.

CARMAN A. NEWCOMB. No excuse offered.

JOHN A. NICHOLSON. No excuse offered.

DAVID A. NUNN.

Mr. MULLINS. My colleague, Mr. NUNN, is absent by leave of the House.

SIDNEY PERHAM.

Mr. PETERS. My colleague, Mr. PERHAM, is absent by leave of the House.

CHARLES E. PHELPS. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM A. PILE. No excuse offered.

JOHN V. L. PRUYN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was requested by the gentleman from New York, Mr. PRUYN, to state that the condition of his health is such that it is almost impossible for him to be here at evening sessions. If there is no objection he will be excused.

No objection was made.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague, Mr. RANDALL, is absent for the same reason as last night, when he was excused. He is detained on important personal business, and I hope the House will excuse him.

No objection was made.

GREEN B. RAUM. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON.

Mr. STEWART. My colleague, Mr. ROBINSON, has been in bad health for some months past. He requested me this afternoon to ask that he be excused this evening, if he should not be here.

No objection was made.

LOGAN H. ROOTS. No excuse offered.

LEWIS W. ROSS. No excuse offered.

PHILETUS SAWYER. No excuse offered.

LEWIS SELYE.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My colleague, Mr. SELYE, has not been very well for some days past. I ask that he be excused.

No objection was made.

SAMUEL SHELLABARGER.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move that Mr. SHELLABARGER be excused on account of the condition of his health. He was here last night, but he is not fit to be here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SHELLABARGER, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. STEVENS, will be excused, if there is no objection.

No objection was made.

AARON F. STEVENS. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM B. STOKES. No excuse offered.

FREDERICK STONE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. STONE, is absent on leave.

CALEB N. TAYLOR. No excuse offered.

JOHN TRIMBLE.

Mr. MAYNARD. My colleague, Mr. TRIMBLE, is absent on leave.

LAWRENCE S. TRIMBLE. No excuse offered.

CHARLES UPSON. No excuse offered.

HENRY VAN AERNAM. No excuse offered.

DANIEL M. VAN AUKEN. No excuse offered.

BURT VAN HORN.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My colleague, Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, has leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. His name will be excluded from the warrant.

ROBERT T. VAN HORN.

Mr. MCCORMICK. My colleague, Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, is sick.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, will be excused. There was no objection.

PHILADELPH VAN TRUMP. No excuse offered.

HAMILTON WARD. No excuse offered.

ELIHU B. WASHBURN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I move that Mr. ELIHU B. WASHBURN be excused on account of the condition of his health.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, will be excused. There was no objection.

THOMAS WILLIAMS. No excuse offered.

JOHN T. WILSON. No excuse offered.

STEPHEN F. WILSON.

Mr. BROOMALL. It was stated last night that my colleague, Mr. WILSON, was absent on leave. I do not know whether such is the fact.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is the fact. The gentleman is certainly not in the city. His name will be omitted from the warrant.

FERNANDO WOOD.

Mr. STEWART. I believe my colleague, Mr. WOOD, has leave of absence. I know he was obliged to leave the city on account of sickness.

GEORGE W. WOODWARD.

Mr. GETZ. My colleague, Judge Wood-

WARD, is not at all well, and I hope he will be excused.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the name of Mr. WOODWARD will be omitted from the warrant.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BINGHAM, be excused. I came from his room a short time ago. He told me he was not well, and did not feel able to come up. He desired me to ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] will be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is it in order to move that those members who are reported absent, but who are now within the lobby, be admitted?

The SPEAKER. As the call is now operating, the House has ordered those gentlemen to be brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The Speaker has just signed the warrant, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is now about to execute the order of the House.

Mr. WELKER. I have just come from the room of my colleague, Mr. DELANO, who stated to me that he was not able to be here to-night. I move that he be excused.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I hope that no more excuses of this kind will be offered. They will give this capital a bad reputation for healthfulness throughout the country. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, Mr. DELANO will be excused.

There was no objection.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared and reported that, in accordance with the order of the House, he had arrested and brought to the bar of the House Mr. BENTON, Mr. CORNELL, Mr. CULLOM, Mr. ECKLEY, Mr. NEWCOMB, Mr. MYERS, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. STEVENS of New Hampshire, Mr. BEATTY, Mr. MERCUR, and Mr. HUMPHREY.

The SPEAKER. Mr. BENTON, you have been absent without the leave of the House; what excuse have you to render for your absence?

Mr. BENTON. I came as soon as I could. I arrived here at a few minutes to eight o'clock, and thought I was in time, but found the doors closed.

Several MEMBERS. The hour of meeting is half past seven.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move that the gentlemen who are now at the bar of the House under arrest be discharged on the payment of the usual fees.

Mr. ORTH. Five dollars each, and the usual fees.

Mr. BROOMALL. Oh, no!

The SPEAKER. The motion does not preclude any member in arrest from having a separate vote on his case.

Mr. SCHENCK. Is it not proper to exclude from the motion those who were reported to be so ill as to be unable to be present, and yet are here now?

The SPEAKER. Sometimes gentlemen who are ill and so reported by their colleagues do attend night sessions. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] was reported to be ill, and yet is now present in the Hall. [Laughter.]

Mr. TWICHELL. I move those who are still outside and cannot get in also be discharged.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done at present, and not until they are brought to the bar of the House.

Mr. BROOMALL's motion was agreed to, and the members named were accordingly discharged.

The Sergeant-at-Arms again appeared and reported that, in further obedience to the order of the House, he had arrested and brought to the bar of the House Mr. JONES, Mr. RAUM, Mr. UPSON, Mr. BARNES, and Mr. NICHOLSON.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move that they be discharged on the payment of the usual fees.

The SPEAKER. Either of the members at the bar has the right to ask for a separate vote on his case.

Mr. BROOMALL's motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is now present. Mr. ALLISON moved that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. McCORMICK. I move that my colleague [Mr. NEWCOMB] be excused from attendance upon the sittings of the House this evening. He is not well, and wishes to retire to his room.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HILL and Mr. FIELDS were granted indefinite leave of absence.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. LAFILIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That five thousand copies of the Army Register be printed for the use of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that that body had passed a bill (H. R. No. 365) constituting eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the regular order of business.

The House, under the order heretofore made, resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The CHAIRMAN stated the pending question was on Mr. LOGAN's amendment to the amendment of Mr. BOUTWELL to the forty-ninth section.

Mr. LOGAN. I modify my amendment so it will read as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the date at which this act shall take effect there shall be an allowance of drawback on all rum and alcohol on which internal taxes shall hereafter be paid, equal in amount to the taxes so paid thereon and no more, when exported in good faith. The payment of said drawback to be made only when the evidence shall be furnished to the entire satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury by such person or persons who shall claim allowance of drawback, that such tax has been paid, and the said rum or alcohol so exported—landed, and delivered to the consignee or consignees at the foreign port to which it was exported, to be proved by the sworn testimony of responsible persons where exported from and exported to—the same to be paid by the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Treasurer of the United States out of any money arising from internal tax on distilled spirits not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That no claim for drawback shall be allowed on either of the said articles which shall have been exported as aforesaid prior to the time at which this act shall take effect.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall fraudulently claim or seek to obtain an allowance of drawback on any article or articles aforesaid, on which no internal tax shall have been paid, or shall fraudulently claim any greater allowance or drawback than the tax actually paid thereon as aforesaid, such person or persons shall forfeit and pay to the Government of the United States triple the amount wrongfully or fraudulently sought to be obtained; and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period not less than one nor more than ten years.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will give me its attention while I explain my reasons for offering this amendment. Under the provisions of the bill, inasmuch as we have provided that the tax shall be paid at the distillery warehouse, that presupposes that we will provide some way for the exportation of such articles of distilled spirits as are exported. There being nothing of the character exported save rum and alcohol, I thought, rather than to allow the taking from bond for redistillation and exportation, in order to guard against many of the frauds that have been perpetrated by means of the provisions of the existing law, that the best mode we could adopt would be to provide for the payment of all taxes at the distillery warehouse when the spirits should leave it for any purpose whatever, and then provide a drawback for the amount of taxes that may be paid upon all exported distilled spirits, which would be all the alcohol and rum that is exported from this country.

I think the exportation of rum and alcohol is well guarded. This amendment provides that when either of the articles is exported from this country to a foreign port, before the drawback shall be allowed or paid on the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury the evidence shall be furnished of the payment of the tax from responsible witnesses under oath residing at the place where the exportation takes place, and also at the place where the article lands after it is in the hands of the consignee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not he intends to include in the provision relating to drawbacks such alcohol as may be used in the manufacture of medicine and cosmetics which may be exported from the country.

Mr. LOGAN. The amendment includes all alcohol that is exported. That is my intention.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. After it has been used in the manufacture of medicine or cosmetics, is the provision broad enough to include that? I think it ought to.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir, it does not; but I would have no objection to any gentleman proposing such an amendment. The section I propose to amend has no reference whatever to anything of that kind. It is easy to provide for a drawback on cosmetics and articles of that kind. But I think it is necessary to establish the principle whether we will allow exportation in this way or under the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.] I desire for a moment to give my reasons for objecting to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts. He proposes to export these articles by giving to a few distillers an exclusive license for that express purpose. There are many objections to that, which I have not time now to allude to. But the greatest objection is this: that from all parts of the country it would allow the transportation in bond for the purpose of exportation; and, as we all know, we have been attempting here to provide against the frauds that have occurred under this transportation system. If we permit the transportation from West to East or from the East to the West in bond, without first having the taxes paid, we only provide for the starting of the alcohol or spirits; and after you have started it from the distillery warehouse, and it has proceeded a short distance locked up in a car, no one having any knowledge of what is in the car except the agent himself, it has only to be left at some way-station and started on some other route, taken from the car, stripped of the stamp, and put on the market. This has been done so often, and we have so much evidence of the fact, that I do think we will not be doing justice to the country unless we provide some protection against this manner of perpetrating frauds. It is the easiest and simplest thing in the world to perpetrate frauds, provided persons are desirous of doing so under the transportation laws. You may ship three hundred barrels of whisky to-day on one certificate; by having a triplicate and shipping on different railroads you return the one certificate. I speak of the old law, but it may be done under any law where there is collusion between the collector and the man who transports the goods. These frauds have been perpetrated to such an extent that I have become convinced that the only way in which we can prevent them is to allow drawbacks in this manner.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in rising is to call the attention of the House to the fact that we are at a turning point in this bill as it regards the system which is to be adopted in reference to distilled spirits either to be exported or under any circumstances removed from the distillery warehouse. My colleague upon the committee [Mr. LOGAN] proposes to abolish entirely the whole export system through a warehouse surrounded by proper guards in the law, and to allow no exportation except of distilled spirits which shall have first regularly paid the tax at the distillery, and then, so as not to break down the export business altogether, to introduce what we have been for a number of years trying to get rid of as itself an opening to great opportunities of fraud, a system of drawback, so that the tax paid may be returned to the exporter.

Now, sir, I desire to call the attention of the committee to this whole subject of the transportation of liquors in bond. The present law is exceedingly loose upon that subject. The present law authorizes, with few or no guards, very insufficient guards and regulations, liquors to be taken in bond without payment of tax from the distillery to what is called warehouse "B," and to be transported from warehouse to warehouse, from district to district, and from one extreme part of the United States to another, almost without limitation as to the number of transfers, thus opening the door to enormous frauds, which frauds have been in numberless instances shamefully committed, evading payment of the tax and injuring the revenue of the country.

So great the evil grew to be that the Committee of Ways and Means introduced into this House in January last, as one of the first expedients, while they should be engaged in revising the law, a stoppage, for the time being, of all removals of whisky, without the payment of tax, from bonded warehouses. That was passed almost unanimously through the House, and afterward passed the Senate, and is now upon the statute-book. But what did all that mean? Some construe it to have properly meant an intention to break up the whole bonded-warehouse system, as incapable of reform. Others, and I among them, understood it to be a temporary expedient by which this loose system could be broken up and entirely interrupted until some revision of the law should take place by which reform could be accomplished. Now, if the object be to utterly destroy everything like the removal of liquors in bond under any circumstances, the course is plain for this House, and some such provision as that proposed by my colleague on the committee ought to be adopted. If, on the other hand, it is not to be destroyed, but to be regulated, then I think we have accomplished it pretty effectually in the bill which is before the House.

Now, then, what is to be the result of all this? I claim that there is a general outcry against the whole bonded system, founded upon actual abuses which have been committed, which is running into the mistake of destruction instead of reform, and that it is a thing perfectly capable of revision and reform, restraint and regulation, under such circumstances as will make it an efficient help to the revenue of the country, and at the same time aid the general business of the country. If you do not permit, under any circumstances—and that seems to be your present conclusion—distilled spirits to be removed, say from the West to the East, without payment of the tax in advance, how will it operate? Here is a western man, a trader or distiller, a manufacturer, who has on hand $10,000 worth of whisky, say ten thousand barrels, or ten thousand gallons, to bring it within more probable limits. It cost him twenty cents to produce it, which is $2,000. He cannot put it upon the market without adding to the $2,000 in value $5,000 more of tax, rating the tax at fifty cents. I predict that under these circumstances the trade will be driven to the East, and it will not be a year before the western interest will be clamoring for some provision by which they shall not be called upon to advance twice and a half the value of their production in order to get it to market.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOGAN. I will withdraw my amendment to the amendment, in order to give some gentleman who desires to be heard an opportunity to renew it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I renew the amendment to the amendment, and yield my time to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. SCHENCK. My colleague upon the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts] gives me his time, which enables me to finish what I desired to say. I say that I have no doubt the effect of this proposition will be that the western trader or distiller, finding that he cannot afford the amount of capital that he can employ and handle and advance twice and a half the price of his product in order to get it to market, will be compelled to sell out at a disadvantage to some one who can afford to lay out so much money, to some one who is a capitalist and comes from the East to speculate in those spirits, and who will expect in return to drive him down to the lowest possible living price for the article which he produces. Thus the whole will operate to the benefit of the capitalist rather than to the man who produces the article. Such will be the effect of the proposition that eventually, and probably within twelve months from this time, if we pass a law under this impulse which now seems to prevail, to break up everything like transportation in bond, we will have the whole West clamoring for a renewal of the bonded system. The man who has to advance $5,000 in order to get $2,000 worth of his product to market must lay out of the interest of his money until he gets that to market, must be subjected to all the losses and incidental expenses, until finally, when he does succeed in making a disposition and sale of his property, these incidental expenses will pretty much eat up the original cost of the article, or at least that proportion of the amount for which it sold which was likely to be profit.

Now, meeting this question, and seeing the determination not to have any removal generally of spirits in bond without the prepayment of the tax, the committee have sought to provide at least a system by which the export trade of the country might be kept up by a good and complete machinery of bonded transportation, upon which subsequently might be ingrafted, if thought proper, by future legislation, some restoration of that which I think will be demanded particularly by the western part of the country. We have provided that at least distilled spirits may go forward from the distillery warehouse, under careful restrictions, where they are actually intended for exportation and are really exported. We have made an exception in favor of those manufactured compounds into the production of which spirits mainly enter, in order that we may save that much toward our foreign trade.

And here I will remark in passing that, among other houses, there is a single house in New York city which exports some four hundred and twenty thousand dollars' worth annually even of what may be considered the insignificant article of cosmetics, getting their distilled spirits in this country without the payment of a tax, because it goes abroad, being able to compete with the French and other manufacturers so as to push their goods out of the market. So in regard to the distillation of alcohol, the production of rum and all forms of distilled spirits in which that article goes abroad to any extent; we compete with all Europe in our redistilled spirits, in our alcohol used extensively in the arts, used for the production of that brandy by mixture which they send back to us and pay a high duty upon. We crowd out the alcohol of Europe; and that trade is continually increasing.

Now, I think my colleague on the committee [Mr. LOGAN] is mistaken. I know how strong his opposition is to anything like the transportation of spirits in bond. I think gentlemen are generally mistaken who suppose that the system of transportation provided for in this bill is the present system at all. It is surrounded by such guards, such restrictions in respect to removal from one place to another, a single removal, the route to be selected, the guards along the route, the bonds under which it is to be done, the forms to be observed, that it seems to me it is impossible by any human calculation or ingenuity to make such frauds possible as are now committed.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I desire to occupy the attention of the committee for a few moments; and I hope the chairman of the committee will not think that my opposition to this bonded system is actuated by anything except a desire to arrive at that which is right. But I wish to call the attention of the committee to one of the arguments presented by the chairman. If this bill is designed to provide for exportation only, very well. Then I ask the chairman to tell me why he uses all through the bill the words "distilled spirits?" "Distilled spirits" includes whisky; it includes crude spirits; it includes high wines and alcohol and rum. This bill, then, allows the transportation in bond of whisky, alcohol, high wines, crude spirits, and rum. Now, sir, I want the committee to understand that we do not export any of these articles, except alcohol and rum; and when you provide for transporting for export that which is never exported you hold out to the country an inducement that is a false inducement. I do not mean any intentionally false inducement. Gentlemen say "the provision can be easily changed." I understand that, and I propose to change it.

It is said that the West will be howling here next session for transportation in bond. You have already provided in this bill for the transportation in bond of any kind of distilled spirits for exportation. Then, again, spirits may be taken out of the warehouse for redistillation. Now, if this is not the old law over again, except that there are a few additional guards, I do not understand the matter.

Mr. SCHENCK. It only goes from the distillery.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that. You allow it to be taken out of the distillery warehouse for redistillation. There is one chance for fraud by stealing the whisky. Then you allow it to be returned. There is another chance for fraud on that trip. Then you allow the liquor to be transported to New York, Philadelphia, or Boston—for what? For exportation. There is another chance for fraud. Thus, by the provisions of this bill, you allow the liquor to go all over the country. Now, I propose to adopt what seems to me fair dealing with the country. I propose that we shall permit rum and alcohol to be exported, because these are all of this class of articles that ever are exported. If we intend to allow only the transportation in bond of that which is to be exported, and want to deal fairly with the country, let us say so in this bill. It is useless to tell the western people that they can transport in bond for exportation. They will understand perfectly well that they can export just as they have done heretofore; and so will everybody else. But how was it that your whisky got on the market when it was transported from Peoria, from Dubuque, from Chicago, and from everywhere else to New York. How was it? Why, some of it was transported perhaps for exportation, some for one thing and some for another; some perhaps to be used in the preparation of cosmetics. Yet that liquor got on the market, and the Government lost the tax, just as it will if you provide by this bill for transportation in bond. We have now in bond some twenty-five million gallons of whisky, the tax on which under the present law is $50,000,000. Under the reduction of tax proposed in this bill the tax would amount to $12,500,000.

Now, I propose that drawbacks shall be paid on that only which is exported and nothing else; and I say that if the Government were to pay $5,000,000 on this whisky, and then throw it into the canal down here or into the river, not a gallon being exported, the Government would make money by the operation. The Government has, during the last twelve months, lost over one hundred million dollars by transportation bonds and bonded warehouses. This is well known to gentlemen of the House. We ought to have realized the tax on at least one hundred million gallons, which would have been $200,000,000. How much have we realized? Fourteen million dollars. It is said that the two-dollar tax cannot be collected. But why has it not been collected? Because the whisky got on the market by virtue of fraudulent transportation bonds, by virtue of bonded warehouses, by virtue of transportation from one part of the country to another. If you want to reenact the same scenes and deprive the Government of $100,000,000—for out of this you will not get more than forty or fifty million dollars—if you want to deprive the Government of this revenue reenact the old bonded warehouse system, call it by what name you please, and you will have the same frauds you have had for the last eighteen months.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to oppose the amendment, and I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to a defect in his amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to state that I have two amendments, one I think at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa. I will read them, and will, if gentlemen desire, let them go with my substitute. Add to the first section of my amendment:

Provided, also, That a deduction of five per cent. shall be made from the amount of drawback herein allowed.

Then, again, insert before the word "provided" the following:

And in like manner a drawback shall be allowed upon all alcohol and rum used in the manufacture of medical preparations, compositions, perfumery, cosmetics, cordials, and liquors, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the gentleman modify the substitute as he suggests by those two amendments?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not. I merely wish to show the amendments of the substitute that have been suggested to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending proposition is the substitute moved by the gentleman from Illinois. Does the gentleman withdraw it?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not. I am willing to modify it so as to make it more effective if possible.

The CHAIRMAN. It cannot be modified unless it is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. I have a proposition, which I will hereafter move, providing this drawback shall not exceed fifty cents per gallon. He has the extraordinary proposition here that we shall refund upon any kind of exported spirits all the taxes paid thereon. I should like to see any man who can tell what the taxes are that under this amendment will be refunded.

Mr. Chairman, I believe we all agree upon the general proposition that some method should be ascertained whereby we can protect the interest of those who in good faith are the exporters of distilled spirits. But I wish to say to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] when he attacks the principles of this bill and proposes to substitute his drawback system in my judgment he opens the flood-gates of fraud. He seems to ignore in his entire argument that we have provided a stamp for distilled spirits by which it will be impossible to transport them unless they have paid the tax except on a designated line of transportation to a port of entry. Any detention or diversion from this line would at once render them liable to seizure for want of the tax-paid stamp; no one would buy them for consumption because they could not be put upon the market. My friend ought also to know, when he charges the committee with perpetrating a deception upon this House—

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I have not charged anything of the kind.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood him to say that the words "distilled spirits," used in this bill, are a deception. I know, and I presume most of the members of this House know, that alcohol is distilled spirits, and everything that contains the element of alcohol, when it comes from the processes of distillation known in the markets of the world. I say when we use the words "distilled spirits" we use the exact and proper words. I agree with my friend that we should adopt some means by which these frauds should be prevented. In my judgment his proposition is not the true method, and if we cannot transport distilled spirits from Chicago, Peoria, and Dubuque to New York without reopening the flood-gates of fraud, then every gallon should pay the tax at the distillery warehouse, without any exception or limitation whatever, and let our exportations of this article entirely cease. It is a small business compared with the interest at stake in this question of collecting the tax on distilled spirits.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield if you will make it short.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Do I understand by this bill that spirits may be transported in bond for any other purpose than exportation and use in the manufacture of medicine and other articles?

Mr. ALLISON. I know very well what my colleague proposes to follow with that question. There is no proposition here to allow transportation in bond except for exportation to foreign countries and for the manufacture of cosmetics, perfumery, cordials, &c., which shall afterward be exported, and when we come to that I shall move to strike it out. It opens the door for the perpetration of the worst species of fraud that can be perpetrated in this article of distilled spirits. I have been informed that one house in New York has exported six thousand barrels of brandy to the Mediterranean coast, which was little else than water, under the protection of the one hundred and sixty-eighth section of the present law, which is to some extent retracted in this bill. This brandy was almost valueless when it arrived at the foreign port, and doubtless represented six thousand barrels of distilled spirits put on the market in this country without the payment of any tax whatever.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment to the amendment. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to modify it before the vote is taken?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask my colleague to withdraw it and let me renew it.

Mr. LOGAN. I will modify it, at the suggestion of several gentlemen, by inserting after the word "thereon" the words "not exceeding fifty cents per gallon on each gallon of proof-spirits," and by striking out the words "and no more;" so that it will read as follows:

That from and after the date at which this act shall take effect there shall be an allowance of drawback on all rum and alcohol, on which any internal taxes shall hereafter be paid, equal in amount to the tax so paid thereon, not exceeding fifty cents per gallon on each gallon of proof-spirits, when exported in good faith.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is it in order to move an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The question being taken on the amendment, as modified, there were—ayes 48, noes 45; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. LOGAN and ALLISON.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 46.

So the amendment of Mr. LOGAN was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BOUTWELL as amended.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to insert at the end of the first section the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the whole amount of drawback allowed shall not exceed the entire amount of tax collected.

I am afraid the drawback will exceed the entire tax.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope it will not be adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am opposed to the principle embodied in the pending proposition; but if we must pass it I desire this amendment to be added to the section:

And provided further, That there shall be allowed and paid to the exporter, in addition to the drawback, interest on the amount of the drawback at the rate of six per cent. per annum for the time the tax shall be held by the Government.

If the proposition of my colleague [Mr. LOGAN] is to prevail I hope this amendment will become a part of the section for the benefit of this interest. From the legislation that we have had here to-day it would seem to me to be the intention to break down the manufacture of distilled spirits in this country altogether, including the exportation of alcohol to foreign countries, and to transfer the production of distilled spirits to Canada, allowing Canadian smugglers to supply this country with that article. Under the thirty-third section of this bill, which was not stricken out on my motion to-day, as it ought to have been, I maintain that no house that distills five hundred bushels of grain a day can continue to do business. The thirty-third section provides that the distillery shall remain idle two days out of the seven.

Mr. SCHENCK. Oh, no.

Mr. INGERSOLL. It provides that the distillery shall go out of blast at eleven o'clock on Saturday forenoon.

Mr. PRICE. Oh, no; on Saturday night.

Mr. SCHENCK. One hour before midnight.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Let me see; I have the section here. The gentleman is right; it is not quite so bad as I thought it was. It says at eleven o'clock in the afternoon. That is rather a queer way to state it. However, it requires the distillery to cease operations for one whole day, from Saturday till Monday. Now, a distillery that is distilling fifteen hundred or two thousand bushels a day will feed four or five thousand hogs and five hundred head of cattle, and it is not expected to go out of blast from November until the following May. You require that the cattle and hogs shall "fast" one day out of seven. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I cannot be interrupted.

Mr. PRICE. I would like to know if the hogs could not eat something else that day? [Laughter.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, I suppose they could if they could get it. It is not, however, worth while to waste words on a question so trifling. You have retained that provision, and now you propose to kill the export trade altogether. You put on a heavy special tax, and all sorts of taxes, as though the United States was the only country that produces alcohol on the face of the whole earth, whereas we have to compete with English, and more especially with German manufacturers. During the war we actually imported alcohol for home use from Germany, and we shall do it again if this bill shall ever become a law. If you intend that the distillers in this country shall export alcohol, where are they going to find a market? Not in England, not in France, not in Germany; for under the burdens and impositions of this bill those countries, notwithstanding the high price of raw materials, can make alcohol much cheaper than we can. Germany can, and probably will, furnish us all our alcohol if you pass these provisions into the law.

You are destroying an interest which might be rendered profitable to the people of this country and put millions of dollars into your Treasury.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if we did not get one dollar of tax out of the exportation of alcohol it would be well to encourage it. When we cannot export our corn or grain with profit on account of its distance from the sea-board and its great cost of transportation, you can distill it into alcohol; and a package which would only carry four bushels of grain in bulk will carry to market, put into alcohol, what would be equivalent to twenty bushels of grain. Then it goes into the markets of the world in foreign countries and pays our debts, and pays for goods which we wish in exchange for it. But by this bill you put such expensive restrictions and burdens upon the export trade that you cannot export one single gallon out of the country under this law at a profit to the exporter or manufacturer.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I wish I felt able this evening to talk more to my own satisfaction in regard to this matter. I shall oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] because it relates to an extension of the drawback system, and I think the whole drawback system a mistake.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I said so, sir.

Mr. SCHENCK. I know you did. There is a question now distinctly made between the provisions of this bill and the amendment offered in several sections by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] and I confess, without any feeling about the matter at all, I prefer to stand by the bill. I believe it is a more complete, well-digested system, and will accomplish more good and give more safety than that which is proposed in lieu of it. I impeach no gentleman's purposes either upon one side or upon the other, but I say this, that in my opinion the outcry against a bonded system of any kind, against the removal of spirits at any time anywhere, has been carried so far, occasioned as it was by the enormous frauds committed, that gentlemen have run into an infatuation almost, as it appears to me, on this subject, and are not for reforming now, but for utterly destroying a system to which I think they will hereafter come back to a certain extent if they should now destroy it.

This drawback system is one that has been as open to frauds as any other. I believe the records and statistics of the custom-house, in regard to all instances where drawbacks have been allowed of taxes paid upon manufactures and goods, will show that they have contrived by false oaths and otherwise to draw back more taxes than have ever been paid on those goods. And it was rather a significant vote of the Committee of the Whole a few moments ago on the amendment to prevent paying out of the Treasury more money for drawback than these parties have paid into the Treasury for taxes. Now, this has been sought to be limited by keeping back five per cent. for the expenses incident to the system. That, however, has been abandoned entirely by the proposition made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Judd.]

Now, what is it that the bill proposes? So far as the removal from distillery warehouses without the prepayment of the tax is concerned we have given up the removal of liquors which are to be consumed or used in the United States. As I said before, I think it not impossible that at least the western interest will hereafter be found calling for the restoration of the bonded-warehouse system in some degree and in some respects, for reasons which I have assigned. But all that is given up by this bill. What is sought to be saved by the carefully prepared section in regard to removal at all? Why, that there may be removal for actual transportation, that there may be removal for redistillation, to go back again into the distillery warehouse, the redistillation to be in the district. This is so that alcohol may be sent abroad; and so in regard to other compounds, manufactures of the country, of which distilled spirits is the principal component part.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] complains that we use the term "distilled spirits" in the bill; and he wants to know why that term is used. Simply because this is an act in relation to "taxes on distilled spirits." I do not know that I can answer the gentleman in any other way than a Dutch friend of mine answered a like question. He said to a neighbor of his, "Mein herr, can you tell for what I calls my little poy Hans?" His neighbor replied, "Well, no; I really don't know." "Well, the reason I calls my little poy Hans is because his name is Hans." [Laughter.] We call this "distilled spirits" because it is distilled spirits; because that is the generic term which embraces all articles of the kind, including rum, alcohol, crude whisky, and everything of the kind. Now, it may be that, departing from the language used in all the rest of the bill, you might use the words "alcohol and rum." And if it is more pleasing to the gentleman to confine this transportation for exportation provided for in this section to the specific articles alcohol and rum I do not know that I would oppose it, although it would be a departure from the general generic term used throughout the bill. I know, as well as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] does, that crude whisky is rarely exported. It is only after it is redistilled and converted into alcohol that it is found profitable to export it. I know that so far as crude spirits are concerned they are not transported except in the shape of rum.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I renew it. The difficulty—and there is really not much difference between the views of the majority and the views of the minority of the Committee of Ways and Means upon this question—the difficulty is this: one party proposes that ardent spirits or distilled spirits, including everything else of the kind, shall be transported in bond throughout this country.

Mr. SCHENCK. Only for exportation; not throughout the country.

Mr. EGGLESTON. From the place where it is manufactured to some export warehouse; and that will take in the entire length and breadth of the country. Now, I am opposed to that for the reason that it cannot be done without frauds being committed. It is said that the people of the West will have a chance to send their goods to New York or Philadelphia or New Orleans for exportation; and that thus they will have an equal chance with dealers on the sea-board. But, Mr. Chairman, why should we want to export distilled spirits at all? I ask my good temperance brethren here, whether the object is to build up a foreign trade in this article? Are they willing to go on the stump and say that while this article has so bad an effect upon the people of this country they want to have it manufactured in large quantities to be sent abroad? I know that the object of spreading our trade over the world is to build up the interests of this country; but I throw out this hint for the benefit of those whom it may concern. If, however, you are to send distilled spirits abroad, I say let it go from the seaports, and let the duty be paid there, and let the drawback be paid there, if there is to be a drawback.

But, sir, I am opposed to drawbacks. I want this bill put in such a form that there shall be no transportation of this article in bond, and that there shall be no drawback when the article goes to a foreign country. Thus we shall have a home market for the article. I say to my brethren of the West that we can gain nothing by transporting this article in bond. Alcohol has never been shipped in any great quantities from the West to the East for exportation. I venture to say that in the district of the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means there is not one distiller who sends whisky to the sea-board for exportation. There are one or two establishments in Cincinnati that send whisky to the East for that purpose, but they do not export it. It is sold to New York speculators and jobbers, and they do the exporting. I know that there are parties in New York who, since this great cheating in whisky has been going on, have been buying illicitly-distilled whisky and getting the drawbacks upon it; and they have in this way been rolling up their wealth by millions. I could in this connection mention some names. The money has been made by, in the first place, stealing the whisky or buying it for a mere song, and, in the second place, getting the drawbacks upon it. As I have already remarked, I think we had better make a clean sweep in this matter. We want no bonded whisky. What we want is that every distiller, when he moves the whisky from the bonded warehouse in his vicinity, shall pay down the money. Let the tax be paid, and then let the party take the whisky where he pleases. But let us not reinaugurate this bonded-warehouse system.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EGGLESTON,] that such restrictions as he proposes to put upon this trade would kill it entirely. And how would we derive money from whisky if none were made in this country? I desire to make a further statement. In Chicago or Peoria an alcohol establishment will make one hundred barrels of alcohol in a day.

Mr. EGGLESTON. How much have they made?

Mr. INGERSOLL. They have made that quantity, and they can make a great deal more. An alcohol house which produces one hundred barrels a day will, at the end of three months, have produced nine thousand barrels, making, at the rate of sixty gallons to the barrel, five hundred and forty thousand gallons, upon which a tax of fifty cents a proof gallon would make about three hundred thousand dollars. The cost of production is $540,000 more, making a total of $840,000. Now, suppose that the manufacturer exports this alcohol. Six months will be required for the receipt of the evidence that the alcohol has reached the port to which it was shipped. The manufacturer makes his application for the drawback; and it is reasonable to suppose that he will not get it within less than from six to nine months from the time he commences the production of the alcohol. So that a capital of $840,000 will be required to produce nine thousand barrels of alcohol for the export trade; and the manufacturer must be deprived of the use of this amount of capital for from six to nine months. It is evident that under such conditions the business must be abandoned in this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, it is very desirable that this committee should take its reckoning and ascertain where they are, so that no side issue which does not really belong to the question shall be allowed to divert their attention from the real issue. Now, this committee in its morning session adopted an amendment to the first section of the bill declaring that distilled spirits should not be removed from the distillery warehouse until the tax was paid thereon, and there was hardly a vote against the proposition; at any rate there was no contest upon the question at that time. Whether this was occasioned by a belief that the subsequent sections of the bill would neutralize the amendment so adopted I do not know. My object, Mr. Chairman, has been to get a direct vote and settle the question whether we are again to establish for any purpose the business of the transportation of distilled spirits in bond. This proposition was declared to be in opposition to the business of exporting distilled spirits, and that by it a branch of trade would be destroyed. Although not believing in this proposition, I was willing to join in any proper legislation or any amendment that would obviate this supposed hardship.

The gentlemen who believe in protecting the exporting interest in this country, and think it would be destroyed by the regulation adopted, made very great complaint; and to remedy that complaint my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] offered an amendment that he thought would accomplish the object and at the same time afford protection against the frauds perpetrated in transportation. Following in the wake of this supposed necessity, and to obviate the objections urged by the gentlemen who were afraid of destroying the export trade, my colleague [Mr. LOGAN] introduced this drawback system, so that by removing this objection the principle might be maintained of collecting revenue at the place of manufacture, not because he believed there was not a possibility of perpetrating fraud under it; not because it was a perfect system, but because he desired to adhere to the principle that the Government could not get revenue without collecting the tax on distilled spirits at the distilleries. I say, then, that there is no issue as to the fraudulent nature of action under the drawback system but that does not reach the real issue presented here; the drawback is only incidental to the other question. I do not care whether there is a drawback law passed or not. My object is to collect the tax at the place where the article is manufactured.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is in the bill.

Mr. JUDD. In the original bill; so I understand. I do not desire that the gentleman should make any side issues with me. The question of alleged frauds in all drawback systems must not be allowed to keep from view the real question of where tax shall be collected; but in this bill there is permission under which all distilled spirits manufactured at all the distilleries in the United States, every gallon of it, can go to a port of entry without paying a dollar of tax; that is, if the parties comply with the provisions in this bill, claiming that it is for exportation. You get it there under the claim that it is for exportation, and leave it in the hands of such officers as have dealt in distilled spirits heretofore.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman permit me to say that he states what is not in the bill. The provision is that it shall only go to the warehouse when intended for exportation, and it prevents fraud in preventing it going out for any other purpose than exportation. It has to be exported within a given time or else it will be forfeited.

Mr. JUDD. I hope this does not come out of my time. I repeat my statement, the chairman's statement to the contrary notwithstanding, that every gallon of distilled spirits made in distillation in the country may, under these provisions of the bill, be transported from the warehouse at the distillery to any port of entry in the United States, thus subjecting it to the contingencies and frauds connected with inland transportation. It is these contingencies that I would guard against by collecting the tax before it starts.

Mr. SCHENCK. In bond.

Mr. JUDD. Why, the gentleman has in his committee-room counterfeit, forged, fictitious, false, and fraudulent bonds given under the old law to secure safe transportation and the revenue that are not worth the paper they are written upon. While your restrictions in this bill are stronger and additional security is given, the opportunity is left.

Mr. INGERSOLL rose.

Mr. JUDD. I cannot yield now. I cannot submit to further interruptions. I will repeat again that the distilled spirits manufactured in the West can be all moved to New York if the claim is set up that it is for exportation. The gentleman provides by his bill that it shall go abroad, but that will depend, first, upon whether it ever gets there; and second, upon what officers you have to execute the law. If they are anything like the officers we have had then it will not go abroad, if there is any profit in keeping it here.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on one feature of the amendment presented by the gentleman from Illinois. There are manifestly two evils to be avoided if possible in regulating the tax on distilled spirits. The Committee of Ways and Means desire to avoid if possible the evil of having whisky escape the tax fraudulently while in bond, and they have done away with, as I understand, the system of transporting in bond, except in two cases, one when it is entered in a bonded warehouse for exportation, and the other for redistillation or for manufacture into cosmetics, cordials, &c. I understand it is now the purpose of the committee to cut off the second of these, and thus allow transportation in bond for the purpose of exportation alone. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] proposes an amendment to avoid the danger of transporting in bond, and in his amendment he introduces a system which I regard as far more dangerous than the transportation in bond permitted in the bill. He proposes to apply to exported spirits the drawback system, which never before has been put into a whisky bill.

In order to illustrate the danger attending the drawback system, should it be applied to spirits, I will state a case recently brought to my attention. A ship bound for a foreign port was lying at the wharf not far from a bonded warehouse containing a large quantity of proof-spirits entered in bond for export. Barrels of spirits are taken out and rolled on the deck of the ship. It takes several days to load them. During the night they are dropped off on to a scow, run ashore to be sold as free whisky, and their places supplied by barrels of water. Now, if the drawback system were in operation these same barrels of spirits might be put back into the bonded warehouse, and the next day rolled out again and put on board ship. In that way the same spirits might be used half a dozen times in making up one cargo, and every time the Government would pay the money out of the Treasury as a drawback. Now, it is bad enough that the Government should be defrauded out of the tax itself, but it is far worse for us to pay the money out as a drawback when there never has been any tax paid, and especially to pay it over and over again. One danger is that by fraud we may fail to get money into the Treasury; the other is that we shall take money out of the Treasury to pay rascals for the frauds they commit. I prefer the least of necessary evils.

Mr. COVODE. I desire to state a fact to show how shipping in bond gives an opportunity to parties to perpetrate frauds on the Government. My attention was called to a case by a gentleman connected with the customs for many years, Mr. Guthrie, who investigated several cases where shipments were made. In one instance a shipment was made to Melbourne, Australia, of forty thousand gallons of whisky on which the parties had secured a drawback at New York. On sending over and examining it he found it was made up of fourteen per cent. of spirits, and the balance of what is called "truck." When it got to Australia they would not pay the duty on it. Now, we should adopt the policy which is best calculated to stop these frauds, whether by shipping in bond or under the drawback system.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment, and it is withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER. I renew the amendment. I want to say a few words here in order to be set right by somebody or to set somebody right, as the case may be. Now, I aver that there has not been anything like a drawback on distilled spirits as such for five years, and therefore all the stories about the immense sums the Government has been swindled out of by drawbacks on whisky are myths.

Mr. SCHENCK. There never has been any drawback on whisky.

Mr. BUTLER. Never has been any drawback at all; so says the gentleman from Ohio. I have, then, got some good by speaking, for I thereby find out, on running back through these tax bills, it turns out that there never was any drawback. So my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. COVODE] has been misled.

Mr. COVODE. I did not say drawback, but bond.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not said you did. But gentlemen here have said that millions upon millions are made out of drawbacks. Now, gentlemen, I am going to talk a few minutes, if you will keep quiet.

Now, I agree that the drawback system may have its disadvantages; because when you provide for such a system whisky that has not paid the tax may be exported and the drawback received, and you depend only upon the honesty of the consular or other officer abroad to establish what has been exported. Water may be exported, and when it gets abroad and the consular officers certifies that so many barrels of whisky have been received the water receives the drawback from the Government. There is, therefore, a great chance for fraud. It would be for the benefit of our rum distillers at the East to have the drawback system adopted, if it were honestly administered; and it would be quite as much for our benefit, provided it was dishonestly administered—yes, a little more; because we always do a thing, when we intend to do it, with a great deal of energy and success. Now, what I desire is simply to save the export trade in some form. When we come to the fifty-second section, and settle the question as to what shall be exported, I propose to ask the committee to adopt, instead of distilled spirits, alcohol and rum, so that nothing but alcohol and rum can be exported or transported in bond. Whenever any unpaid whisky is found on board the cars for transportation there will be no excuse that it is to be exported. This provision will diminish the chance of whisky being transported as alcohol. Now, rum is pretty much all made on the sea-board, because it is made from molasses, and is the distinctive name of the distillation of saccharine matter coming from the cane, and being made almost entirely on the sea-board there is but very little transportation during which it can be stolen in getting it on board ship; so that you will have another guarantee. And as almost the entire export trade is in alcohol and rum, I think all this difficulty may be relieved by the simple amendment of putting "alcohol and rum" instead of "distilled spirits," and we can meet exactly what my friend from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] desires—for his desire and mine is the same I am certain in this matter—and meet what the committee desire, and save as many chances of fraud as under any other provision.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think, following up the idea of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] that this will be better understood if gentlemen, instead of taking declarations broadly made of what the bill proposes to do and what it does do, will just look forward a few lines and see what is in the bill itself. Now, the forty-ninth section which we are now considering I think ought to be stricken out entirely, not because it is not needed, but because it is just a transfer from the general bill we have prepared, and is the same now in the law, and if we take it out of this bill it remains as a general section in the law unreppealed and unaffected by this legislation. But the next section, section fifty, is an answer to a great deal that has been said here. Let me read it, for it is short:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to establish and designate at any port of entry in the United States bonded warehouses for the storage of distilled spirits—

Well, suppose you make it "alcohol and rum"— in bond, intended for exportation. Suitable buildings shall be selected for such warehouses, which shall not be of less capacity than sufficient to store five thousand barrels of distilled spirits—

Or "alcohol and rum"— and shall have no opening into or connecting them with any other building, nor be within six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying establishment, and shall be known as export bonded warehouses, and used exclusively for the storage of distilled spirits in bond—

Now, see what comes next—what is said not to be in the bill—and no distilled spirits shall be withdrawn or removed from such warehouses except on an order or permit from the collector in charge of exports for immediate transfer to the vessel by which they are to be exported to a foreign country, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman would not let me interrupt him to set him right; however, I will yield to him.

Mr. JUDD. If the gentleman intends to apply his remark to me, and convey the impression that I stated that provision was not in the bill, he misunderstood me. I simply stated that from the place of manufacture, the distillery, every gallon could go to the export bonded warehouse.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is if the distiller is willing either to actually take it abroad or let it be forfeited. I do not suppose any fool is going to take his whisky and throw it away. Then gentlemen say that it can be all taken there and then smuggled out in some way. How? It is to be carried on board the vessel under regulations hereinafter provided. If gentlemen will go forward to sections fifty-one, fifty-two, and fifty-three, they will find what guards and restrictions are thrown around this matter, so that no human ingenuity, it would seem, would be sufficient to get this liquor away in any other manner. And when you come to add to that the stamp system, by which, if a barrel puts its nose outside the warehouse without having the cross and earmarks it is subject to be seized, you have additional guarantees you never had before. The truth is the difficulty heretofore has been, principally, the removal from bonded warehouses for purposes of rectification. This bill closes down upon all that. There is not a scintilla, not a particle of this bill, not a word in the bill which, in the slightest degree, authorizes the removal of a gallon of distilled spirits from a bonded warehouse for purposes of rectification. If a man wants to follow the business of rectifying he must buy the tax-paid whisky in the market.

Now, submitting the question whether we shall stand by the bill, subject to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] to remove an apparent difficulty or sweep it out of the way and go into a system of drawbacks hitherto untried in this country so far as whisky is concerned, but tried in regard to other matters so far as to find all manner of frauds in it, I am willing that the vote shall be taken. And as we have discussed this question fully, I propose to stop all debate on this whisky matter down to the special taxes provided for in section sixty-five.

Mr. O'NEILL. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him, for the purpose of information, how these sections of the bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means will affect the act of January, 1868, "to prevent frauds in the collection of the tax on distilled spirits?"

Mr. SCHENCK. By repealing it so far as it is inconsistent with the provisions of this bill should it become a law.

Mr. O'NEILL. That act was passed to prevent frauds. This section, I understand, sets forth the manner in which this withdrawal from export warehouses can be made.

Mr. SCHENCK. That act was passed to shut down on frauds which have been committed and which will continue to be committed if you continue the present system. "I now ask unanimous consent to close debate on this section and the succeeding sections down to section sixty-five.

Mr. BARNES. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move, then, that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. POMEROY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the special order. Pending that motion I move that when the consideration of this bill shall again be resumed in Committee of the Whole all debate shall terminate in ten minutes upon the pending section and all amendments thereto, and upon all the succeeding sections down to and including section sixty-four.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; I hope not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point of order is, that it is not competent, under the rules of the House, to direct that all debate shall terminate upon any section but the one now pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the proviso of the sixtieth rule which relates to that subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided further, That the House may, by a vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minutes debate has taken place upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or at their election upon the pending amendments only."

Mr. BLAINE. I ask that the Clerk also read Rule 104.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The House may at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and also for providing for the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—from the further consideration of any bill referred to it, after acting without debate on all amendments pending and that may be offered."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no doubt that it is in the power of the House to take action as indicated in Rule 104; but the Chair rules that where a bill is under consideration in the Committee of the Whole it must be read by sections, and that as each section is read it is competent for any member to move an amendment thereto, which may be discussed for five minutes in favor of the proposition and five minutes against it, when debate may be closed. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCHENCK. In view of that decision, which overrules the decision previously made to-day, I move that all debate upon the section under consideration, and the amendments thereto, cease in five minutes after the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARNES. Say twenty minutes. There has been no debate on this side of the House.

The motion of Mr. SCHENCK was agreed to; there being—ayes sixty-seven, noes not counted.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resume the consideration of the internal tax bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union,

(Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending section and the amendments thereto will terminate in five minutes.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this House by its action this afternoon has adequately provided for the remission of almost all duties upon distilled spirits; and now it is proposed to pay back upon the exportation of the article a specific sum of fifty cents per gallon. I am rather inclined to think that we had better allow the hoofs and horns to go with the hide, and abandon any effort to collect taxes from this article. In a section which was passed this afternoon, it is provided that in case of the disability of an inspector of a bonded warehouse, where lies the germ of the collection of the tax upon this article, the warehouse shall be placed within the control of the collector of the district. I undertake to say that any intelligent gentleman who has considered this matter is fully aware that this provision points directly to such a collusion within that district as will make it impossible to collect under this bill any larger percentage of tax than has been collected under the existing law. As to the percentage of tax that has been collected upon spirits within the last year we are without positive information. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his report, at the opening of this session, stated that there had been manufactured in the previous year between forty-two and forty-five million gallons of distilled spirits. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, in introducing this bill, informed the House that at seventy-five cents per gallon the Government would realize between sixty and seventy million dollars, which would indicate a production of about ninety million gallons. Which of these two high authorities is correct I am unable to say. There is a wide discrepancy between the two statements. But we do know that with the tax nominally at two dollars a gallon spirits has been selling on the average at about one dollar and forty cents per gallon, and that the Government has during the past year received less than $20,000,000 from this source, while it has paid over a hundred millions to the rascals who have been accessory to the evasions of the law. The provision in this bill to which I have referred furnishes the loophole through which the law will still be evaded.

Again, sir, the provision with reference to the bonds to be given by inspectors is such as to render it impossible to get an honest inspector of those distilleries. It is provided that the bondsmen shall be responsible for the acts of the second appointed agent. What responsible man in the United States is going to become a bondsman for John Doe, although the latter may be his own brother, if in case of sickness or disability Richard Roe may be appointed to the place, the bondsmen being made responsible for his actions? Such a provision necessarily puts the revenues under the control of irresponsible men. I undertake to say that, however the system may be braced up and guarded in other respects, the Government cannot, if this provision be retained, collect twenty-five per cent. of the taxes to which it is rightfully entitled. But I do undertake to say that when the Government binds itself to pay back a specific sum of fifty cents, and does not put against it the cost of collecting the sum of fifty cents, it is assuming the guardianship of the money of the people which it has no right to ask. The law, as it will appear, is an absurdity. It is defective. If we collect forty-nine cents and pay back fifty cents the Government will be the loser to that extent, and will be wronged in that proportion.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this section is exhausted.

The question was taken on Mr. INGERSOLL'S amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after the word "appropriated" the words "and no drawback shall be allowed when the amount allowed for drawback in any year has exceeded the amount of tax on distilled spirits received during that fiscal year;" so it will read:

The payment of said drawback to be made only when the evidence shall be furnished to the entire satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury by such person or persons who shall claim allowance of drawback that such tax has been paid, and the said rum or alcohol so exported, landed and delivered to the consignee or consignees at the foreign port to which it was exported, to be proved by the sworn testimony of responsible persons where exported from and exported to, the same to be paid by the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Treasurer of the United States out of any money arising from internal tax on distilled spirits not otherwise appropriated; and no drawback shall be allowed when the amount allowed for drawback in any year has exceeded the amount of tax on distilled spirits received during the fiscal year.

The amendment was rejected.

The committee then divided on Mr. LOGAN'S amendment; and there were—ayes 38, noes 52; no quorum voting.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not ask for a further count.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to strike out the forty-ninth section.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope that will be done. The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 50. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to establish and designate at any port of entry in the United States bonded warehouses for the storage of distilled spirits in bond, intended for exportation. Suitable buildings shall be selected for such warehouses, which shall not be of less capacity than sufficient to store five thousand barrels of distilled spirits, and shall have no opening into or connecting them with any other building, nor be within six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying establishment, and shall be known as export bonded warehouses, and used exclusively for the storage of distilled spirits in bond; and no distilled spirits shall be withdrawn or removed from such warehouses except on an order or permit from the collector in charge of exports for immediate transfer to the vessel by which they are to be exported to a foreign country, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. PRICE. I move to add the following:

Provided, That no distilled spirits shall be removed from the place of distillation until the taxes provided for in this act shall be paid, anything contained in any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Chairman, I have been endeavoring for the last three hours to get in that amendment. I was told it was unnecessary, because the fourteenth section provided for it. In reading that section I find it concludes in these words:

And the tax on the spirits stored in such warehouse shall be paid before removal from such warehouse, unless removed in pursuance of law.

My amendment provides it shall be paid before it leaves the warehouse, anything contained in this law or any other to the contrary notwithstanding. In other words, it is not to leave the distillery until it has paid the tax. That is the whole of it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. If the House intends to sustain the provision to export spirits and to manufacture spirits into uses for exportation this will not do, because those are the only exceptions in this bill. The general provision is already adopted in the very first section that the tax which is to be paid is to be paid at the distillery, and the tax must be paid on everything except that to be exported. But by an amendment of that sort the gentleman would remove all possibility of exporting alcohol or rum, or any other form of spirits, directly, without prepayment of tax at the distillery. We have already voted down that provision when accompanied with drawbacks. Now the gentleman proposes to revive it without even the drawback.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, that is my object, as I stated once before explicitly.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PRICE, there were—ayes 23, noes 45; no quorum voting.

Mr. PRICE. The committee will rise, I suppose, pretty soon. I look upon this as a vital proposition.

Mr. SCHENCK. There is no quorum present, and if the gentleman insists upon a division I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. PRICE. I insist upon it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXPENDITURES FOR 1866.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the standing order of the House of December 30, 1791, and the act of August 26, 1842, the amount of receipts and expenditures of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS IN NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from S. F. Tappan, relative to Indian affairs in New Mexico, the removal of the Navajoes, Apaches, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CHARLES C. M'CRARY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant General, relative to the claim of Charles C. McCrary; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

PAY OF ARKANSAS MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that he has informed the Sergeant-at-Arms that the pay of the members from Arkansas should commence from the date of their election, which was the 13th of March, which election has been held by the House to be legal, the Representatives being sworn in as having been chosen at that election. The delegates however desire the same rule applied to them as was applied to the members from Tennessee; they ask to be allowed pay for the whole Congress. If there is no objection, the subject will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

No objection being made the matter was so referred.

BITUMINOUS COAL.

Mr. MOORHEAD, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of owners of bituminous coal mines in the United States, against any reduction of the duty on coal; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

THE FISHERIES.

Mr. BUTLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 308) relative to the fisheries; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

And then, on motion of Mr. SCHENCK, (at ten o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. HOLMAN: The petition of Jacob Rief and 70 others, citizens of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, against an increase of the tax on cigars.

Also, the petition of C. H. W. Werneke and 21 others, citizens of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, against an increase of the tax on cigars.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of 158 workers in Fairmount Iron Works, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 50 workers in the iron and steel works of Morris, Wheeler & Co., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of Alfred Sherratt and 41 others, workingmen of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of 61 workers in the machine works of Thomas Wood, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 105 workers in chemicals in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 25 workers in Wetherill white lead works, West Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 74 workers in Flat Rock paper-mills, Manayunk, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 40 workingmen in Carr's steel frame manufactory in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will relieve their distress, secure a home market for the products of their industry, and aid them in their unequal contest with the underpaid labor of Europe.

Also, the petition of Thomas Shaw and 61 others, workers in iron and steel, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of John Robinson and 46 others, workers in the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods at Manayunk, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 51 operatives in paper-mills at Manayunk, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of E. H. Radcliffe and 41 others, workingmen in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petitions of 547 workers in manufactures of iron and steel in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such additional protective duties as will relieve their distress and aid them in their unequal contest with the underpaid labor of Europe.

By Mr. McCLURG: A memorial and claim of Captain G. W. Short.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of S. A. Clark and others, carpet-weavers of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of Annabell Evans, widow of Morris Evans, late an employé in the quartermaster's department, who, while acting as a mounted guard at Fairfax station, Virginia, was captured by the rebels, and died a prisoner at Andersonville, Georgia, of inhuman treatment.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 25, 1866.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from Samuel F. Tappan, one of the Indian peace commissioners, in relation to Indian affairs in the Territory of New Mexico, the removal of the Navajoes, Apaches, Utes, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. YATES presented the petition of Nancy A. Stocks for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a memorial of Lloyd Brooks, John F. Noble, and James V. Bumford, administrators of the estate of George C. Bumford, praying compensation for property lost in the fall of 1855 by reason of the war between the United States and the Indians in Walla Walla valley, Territory of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS presented additional papers in relation to the claim of Joseph Wilson, for compensation for horses and mules captured by the rebels in consequence, as is alleged, of the refusal of the pickets to allow him to pass within our lines on the outposts of Washington, in July, 1864; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. THAYER presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 433) for the relief of Palemon John, reported it without amendment.

He, also from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John O'Dwyer, late captain Veteran Reserve corps, praying to be allowed three months' pay proper, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 445) for the relief of Timothy Lyden, of Parkersburg, West Virginia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of E. Lockwood, agent for Charles Rosefield, praying that the claim of Charles Rosefield be referred to the Committee on Claims, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Jeremiah Getty, of Sears county, Minnesota, asking to be paid for certain property destroyed by United States troops in that State in the winter of 1864-65, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Benjamin W. Curtis, praying compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army; the petition of Mary Riggles praying compensation for pecuniary loss sustained by her in the death of her son, who was killed by the horses of a Government wagon on the 18th of January, 1863, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY. I am also instructed by the same committee to report back the petition of late officers in the volunteer service praying that all officers of volunteers below the rank of brigadier general who were in service on the 3d day of March, 1865, and who were honorably discharged after April 9, 1865, may be allowed the three months' pay proper. I desire to attract the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to this petition. It seems that it was referred to that committee and reported by them back to the Senate, and that committee was discharged from its consideration and it was sent to the Committee on Claims. Evidently it is not a subject proper for the consideration of the Committee on Claims. It proposes to incorporate a new principle into a general law. There is no special claim on the face of it; it is a question of principle whether the law should be amended in a certain particular so as to reach a class of officers everywhere, without specifying any one in particular. I therefore ask leave, being so instructed by the Committee on Claims, to report it back to the Senate, and move that it be referred again to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

WAGON-ROADS IN DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. FERRY. The Committee on Territories, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 650) to amend the act of 3d March, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, with a recommendation that it pass. I desire to place the bill on its passage now. I think it will create no discussion when I make a brief statement in regard to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is it?

Mr. FERRY. The same bill that was before us some time ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill just reported by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the unexpended balance of an appropriation made March 3, 1865, for the construction of certain wagon-roads in the Territory of Dakota, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, applied to the completion of the bridge over the Dakota river, on the line of the Government road leading from Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, to the mouth of the Cheyenne river, in Dakota Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better lie over. That bill has been passed once with an amendment.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will listen to me for one moment, I think he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. RAMSEY. The bill was passed, and sent to the House, and was then brought back here again on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FERRY. The bill was reported some time ago, and an amendment was made to it, on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, based upon a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, stating the expense of the projected bridge. Upon the bill going to the House it was ascertained that the Secretary of the Interior had made a mistake as to the bridge which was contemplated in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill lie over until to-morrow, and I will look into it, and then I shall have no objection to it, probably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, objection being made to its consideration.

LOSSES OF SUPPLIES.

Mr. THAYER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate what amount of Government supplies, in quantity and value, in the quartermaster and commissary departments, have been lost in transit by the sinking of, or by other injury to steamboats on the Missouri river, below Omaha, Nebraska, during the years 1866, 1867, and 1868.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 402) providing for the removal of certain causes from the State courts to the United States courts, and for other purposes—a bill of a good deal of consequence practically that I hope may be taken up and passed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the Judiciary have reported the bill with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and the substitute only will be read unless the reading of the original bill is called for by some Senator.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of the committee, which was to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That whenever any civil or criminal suit (whether commenced before or after the passage of this act) may be pending in any court of any State against any person, in which suit such person shall intend to make any defense based upon the authority of any law of the United States, or upon the authority of any department of the Government thereof, or upon the authority of any officer acting under any such law or department, or upon any right exercised under, or title held in behalf of the United States, such person may, at any time before the final trial in such suit, in person or by his attorney, file a petition in such suit, stating the fact of such intention to make defense as aforesaid, and the general tenor thereof, verified by affidavit, and praying for the removal of such suit for trial into the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such suit may be pending; and thereupon, upon the offering by or in behalf of such person of sufficient surety for his filing in such circuit court at its then existing term, or on the first day of its next term, copies of the process and pleadings in such suit, and also for his appearing in such court and entering special bail in such suit, if special bail was originally given therein, it shall be the duty of such State court to accept the surety and proceed no further with such suit, and the bail that shall have been originally taken shall be discharged. And such copies being filed, as aforesaid, in such circuit court, the suit shall proceed therein in all things as provided in and subject to all the provisions of section five of the act of Congress approved March 3, A. D. 1833, entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases." And if any such State court shall neglect or refuse to carry out the provisions of this act, every such suit may be removed to such circuit court by writ of certiorari issued out of such circuit court, in the manner provided by the third section of the act of Congress approved March 2, A. D. 1833, entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports."

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of said fifth section of said first-mentioned act, relating to appeals and writs of error from such State court, shall apply and extend to all cases tried in such State court in which a defense shall have been set up or relied upon based upon any of the matters mentioned in the preceding section of this act. And any suit described in the preceding section of this act, and in which final judgment shall be rendered in the circuit court of the United States, may be carried by writ of error to the Supreme Court without regard to the amount in controversy.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any officer under the United States shall be unlawfully impeded or hindered in the performance of his official duty, or shall be unlawfully assaulted or beaten, or shall have his property unlawfully taken, injured, or destroyed while engaged in the performance of his official duty, he shall be entitled to sue therefor in the circuit court of the United States in the district in which such cause of action shall have arisen, or in which the defendant in such action shall reside or may be found: Provided, That the damages claimed therefor in good faith shall be $500 or upward.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall willfully and unlawfully impede, hinder, assault, or beat any officer under the United States, or shall willfully and unlawfully injure or destroy the property of any such officer, every such person so offending shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and by imprisonment not exceeding five years; and if the death of any such officer shall happen from any such assault or battery the person guilty of such assault or battery shall be deemed and held guilty of murder, and shall, on conviction thereof, suffer death.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill and the amendment are important, and I move that the bill lie on the table for the present, so that members of the Senate may have an opportunity of making a careful examination of the amendment, and may know exactly what it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appeal to my friend from Kentucky not to make that motion. I will assure him that there is practically nothing new in this bill, which merely consolidates the prior acts, except this: that it enables the United States officers to remove internal revenue cases, and marshals to remove cases in which they are sued, in regard to which the present laws are defective. That practically covers all the change in the law that is really made, although on the face of it this bill applies to all officers of the United States, for the purpose of consolidating into one the statutes in relation to removals. With this explanation I hope my friend will permit the bill to be considered now.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the honorable Senator from Vermont to consent that the bill shall go over until to-morrow that we may have an opportunity of looking into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending motion is to lay the bill on the table, and it is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS. No; I do not move to lay it on the table; I simply move to postpone it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will withdraw that motion I will make a motion that perhaps the Senate will agree to, and that is to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being House bill No. 605.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to insert after line five hundred and fifty-seven the following clause:

For temporary clerks in the Treasury Department, $150,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to classify the clerks according to the character of their services.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that the Senate desire any further information; but I have taken pains to ascertain where these temporary clerks are assigned; and I have the written statement of the different officers among whose bureaus they are assigned that they are necessary to the public service. The general debate that occurred yesterday might, perhaps, mislead Senators, and cause them to suppose that these officers are not necessary. They are necessary. There are sixty-three of these temporary clerks in the Second Auditor's office. I presume they are all engaged on the bounty business. There are twenty-three employed in the Second Comptroller's office; four in the First Comptroller's office; fifteen in the Third Auditor's office; thirteen in the Fifth Auditor's office; twenty-five in the Sixth Auditor's office; five in the Solicitor's office; and forty-six in the Secretary's office. The total appropriation now provided for temporary clerks is $100,000 more than we have allowed. We have only allowed $150,000 instead of $250,000, the amount of the two items on the subject in the bill of last year. I am satisfied now, after examination, that to discharge any of these clerks at present would be a serious embarrassment to the public business. I do not wish to enlarge on this matter, because I feel not the slightest interest in it. If the Senate thinks the Treasury Department can get along without these officers they will vote down the amendment, but they will do it in the face of the statement of the heads of bureaus that they are necessary.

Mr. HOWE. I presume the Senate has no disposition to vote down any appropriation that is necessary to the conduct of that Department or in any other Department of the Government; but it has seemed to me very strange that we could not be made to understand more clearly than I have been able to understand how it is that this additional force is still necessary. Outside of the Second and Third Auditor's offices, I cannot conceive why there should be the slightest pretext for anything like a temporary force. I can understand that there may be accumulations of business in the Second and Third Auditor's offices growing out of the war, left over from the war, which it may be advisable to dispose of by the employment of temporary help, rather than by increasing the number of regular clerks; but it will be remembered that the business in those two bureaus must have reached its maximum several years ago; that is to say, the number of accounts and claims on file awaiting examination, I think, cannot be greater this year than it was two years ago or three years ago. The Senator from Ohio shakes his head. If he has any information to the contrary I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator that the information I get is that the great mass of the quartermasters' and paymasters' accounts and others growing out of the war have been settled in the first instance in the War Department in the offices of the Quartermaster General and Paymaster General, but they are still pending before the accounting officers of the Treasury. Scarcely any of the great accounts in that branch of the service have yet been settled. A large number of quartermasters' and paymasters' accounts are suspended; the items are being reexamined and ascertained.

Mr. HOWE. My statement is this—and I wish the Senator to speak to that—that the number of accounts and claims awaiting settlement in the Second and Third Auditor's offices must have been as great three years ago as it is to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state that last year the number of clerks provided for in the appropriation bill was larger than we provide for now. Even this temporary force is decreased to the extent of $60,000.

Mr. HOWE. I understand all that, but the regular force in the Second and Third Auditor's offices, I think the Senator must agree, is more than sufficient to attend to the current business, to dispose of the claims and accounts that arise from the annual transactions of the officers who account to those bureaus. I assume that it must be more than adequate for that purpose, because it was adjusted upon the necessities of the war season when we had an Army and a Navy upon a war footing. Then we attempted to fit up the force in these two bureaus to meet that exigency. That exigency has already passed, and yet the force of these two bureaus is undiminished. My understanding has been that although they have not cleared off these accumulations in their offices yet they are every month reducing them. But outside of those two bureaus I wish the Senator from Ohio, or any one else who understands the subject, would explain to us what extra occasion there is or can be in any other of these bureaus for help. There is the regular business. Whatever they have to do this year they must have to do next year, as it seems to me. There are no accumulations of business left over from the war. They are attending to the annual and regular transactions belonging to their respective bureaus. So it seems to me; and the help necessary to dispose of that business should be provided for by law; and it seems to me they should be regular clerks.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator allow me to read a letter from the Second Auditor on this subject?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. Sixty-two of these clerks are employed in the Second Auditor's office. The Senate will remember that last year we appropriated $210,000 for this item, and at this session we appropriated for forty more clerks, which made the aggregate there, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] has it, $256,000 appropriated for the present year, the year that is now running on. Now, here is what the Second Auditor says in regard to the business in his office; the great bulk of it is there:

SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 27, 1868.

To the Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 25th instant, calling my attention to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill making appropriations for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1869, and suggesting—

The Senate will see that we endeavored to reduce in all these bureaus—

"first, that if it be possible to make any reduction in the estimates of this bureau prepared last summer, such reduction be made; and secondly, that if, on the contrary, this office is not adequately provided for by said bill, and my increased appropriation is necessary beyond the estimates of last summer, that the items and the reasons for the same may be given," I have the honor to state:

First, That it is not possible to make any reduction of the estimates already presented consistently with the proper transaction of the business of the office.

Second, That on the contrary the office is not adequately provided for by the bill now before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, for the reason that the increase of the business of the office has been such as to necessitate an increase of force very considerably beyond that which was contemplated at the time the estimates were made. Already thirty-three clerks have been added to the number for which provision is made by law and for which the estimate was made. To accommodate this increased force several additional rooms in Winder's building and a separate house on Eighteenth street have been obtained and occupied, involving arrangements for the interior management of the office which have rendered a partial reorganization of the same indispensable to the prompt and successful conduct of business. An additional estimate is therefore appended embracing the force now actually employed, with fresh changes in the grades of the clerkships, as are necessary to equalize the salaries of the various heads of divisions.

Very respectfully,

E. B. FRENCH,

Auditor.

In conformity to this letter, and partly upon this letter, we proposed to legalize the appointment of forty clerks.

Mr. HOWE. In the pending bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. In an independent bill for this current year. Now we are appropriating for the next year, and we have taken off the appropriations for the current year $100,000 in the face of the statements made by these officers that the present force is not too great. If the Senate think that we should go further, and take away all these temporary clerks, they can do so.

Mr. HOWE. The Second Auditor in that communication, as I understand it, is explaining the necessity, not for an additional force, but for continuing the force allowed him already.

Mr. SHERMAN. We now reduce it.

Mr. HOWE. By this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; by this bill, and by this very amendment that is pending. Last year we appropriated on this letter for the current year ending the 1st of July next, $256,000—the precise amount can be given by my friend from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL]—first $210,000, and then afterward an appropriation for extra clerks.

Mr. HOWE. Appropriated it for help in that bureau?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; for this general item; and now the appropriations this year for the Second Auditor's office are less in this bill than they were last year.

Mr. HOWE. I understand the statement read here this morning to say that some sixty of these temporary clerks are employed in the bureau of the Second Auditor. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what the Official Register says about this. The Official Register does not say that a single temporary clerk is employed there. The last Official Register gives the force in the Second Auditor's office as I will give it to you now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know whether the temporary clerks are entered on the Register.

Mr. HOWE. It contains all the help there is employed in the Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think they are entered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think the Senator will find the temporary clerks there.

Mr. HOWE. You will find clerks put down both as "temporary" and as "additional." Quite a number are put down as "additional" in the Secretary's office, and clerks are put down as "temporary" in other bureaus. But the Official Register gives the force in the office of the Second Auditor like this: six fourth-class clerks, and you have six fourth-class clerks in the bill; fifty-five third-class clerks, and you have fifty-four third-class clerks in the bill; one hundred and nine second-class clerks, and you have one hundred and eight second-class clerks in the bill; two hundred and nine first-class clerks, and you have two hundred and twelve first-class clerks in the bill. That is the force in the Second Auditor's office, as stated in the Official Register. There are, in addition to that, messengers and laborers.

But I agree that there may be a propriety for extra help in two bureaus, the Second and Third Auditor's. I believe there are no temporary clerks stated to be employed in the Third Auditor's office in the Register.

Mr. SHERMAN. I read the official statement that I just received this morning, showing the number precisely in each of these offices. The Senator was not present, perhaps, but I read an official statement showing the number of clerks employed and paid out of this fund.

Mr. HOWE. I am calling the Senator's attention to the discrepancy between the official statement read this morning and the official statement contained in the Official Register.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the Blue Book?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know whether the Blue Book contains the temporary clerks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Blue Book never contains the temporary clerks. It only contains the four classes provided for by law.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator says that with the book in his hand, and he must be right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here it is; you can look at it.

Mr. HOWE. I am much obliged to the Senator for letting me look it up. I say there are none in the Second Auditor's office, and none in the Third Auditor's office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the Blue Book.

Mr. HOWE. You say there are none anywhere. I say there are none in the Blue Book in these offices. That is what I am insisting upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that is what I am insisting upon.

Mr. HOWE. But I understand the Senator from Vermont to insist that in the Blue Book there are none anywhere in the Treasury Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am only speaking of the point under consideration.

Mr. HOWE. Then we shall not have any dispute about that, for that is the point I make, and I make it against the statement of the Senator from Ohio, who gives us an official statement fresh from the Mint. I cannot reconcile the discrepancy. I do not know which is authentic, which is issued by "old Dr. Jacob Townsend," and which is not. [Laughter.] There are the two statements. I do not know that the fact recited here yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PATTERSON] tends to explain this discrepancy. Here you have a statement that sixty odd of these temporary clerks are employed in the Second Auditor's office, and there you have a statement that not one is employed in the Second Auditor's office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; not that statement.

Mr. HOWE. Well, sir, you have a statement of the force employed in the Second Auditor's office, and there are no temporary clerks mentioned there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if my friend will permit me, I suggest to him that the Blue Book is the register of the regular employés under the law of the Government. The statute gives the Secretary of the Treasury the authority, whenever the exigencies of the public service require it, to employ additional force. They do not appear in the Official Register as the regular employés of the Department at all. There is the difference.

Mr. HOWE. I understood you to say something like that some time ago, but when you passed the book over into my hands you withdrew that statement, and you rested your declaration upon the proposition that there was no such force in the Second or Third Auditor's office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was all that was required for that purpose.

Mr. HOWE. We had the same purpose under consideration then that we have now. I say there are both additional and temporary clerks enumerated therein that Blue Book that the Senator has in his hand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where else except in the Treasurer's office do you find any there?

Mr. HOWE. I did not know there were any in the Treasurer's office. There are in the Secretary's office, and there are in some other offices; I cannot now specify them. But I now call attention to the Register's office. In that book the force is stated at five fourth-class clerks, thirteen third-class clerks, nineteen second-class clerks, and five first-class clerks in the Register's office. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PATTERSON] produced another official statement last night to the effect, I think, that thirteen male clerks and over one hundred—I believe one hundred and seventeen—female clerks had been employed in the Register's office since October last. That was read here in the hearing of the chairman of the Committee on Finance. Nobody disputed it; so I did not. The only explanation I heard of it was that the Register had probably been dismissing a large number of clerks and employing them in their places.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator did not hear the explanation I made.

Mr. HOWE. No; I did not hear the explanation of the Senator, and I am very sorry that I did not. If it is capable of explanation I have no doubt the Senator explained it, or tried to do so. The explanation which I did hear, however, did not seem satisfactory to me, because that very statement contained the number of clerks who had been dismissed and who had died, and they were less than a dozen.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The explanation is simply this: there is a very large arrearage of business in the Register's office, particularly in relation to coupons. Those coupons all have to be examined and all have to be registered. There are some millions of them behindhand now. It is very important that they should be examined at the time the coupons are paid, that the work should be brought up, because, after two or three years mistakes in those matters cannot be corrected. Therefore it was thought advisable to employ an additional force, particularly of women, to do that work, in order to bring up the work that was so largely in arrear, and it is absolutely required by the public interests. With that view a large number of persons were employed. As soon as the work is brought up, of course the force will be reduced; but it is absolutely indispensable that that work should be brought up. I happened to meet the Register this morning and mentioned the subject to him. He told me that if there was any office-room where they could be accommodated, he deemed the work so very important (and I have no doubt he is correct about it) that he should like to employ one hundred more, in order to bring it up as soon as possible; that the public safety with regard to all those matters absolutely required that the work should be brought up as speedily as possible, so that they might examine the coupons day by day.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, that explanation is plausible, and may be absolutely correct. I would not question its correctness at all but for two considerations: first, I suppose it is known to the Senator that that business of counting the coupons and all kindred businesses are not provided for under this bill at all, but come out of the regular appropriation made annually for the expenses of the loan business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With reference to this, it came in incidentally on the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I gave the explanation afterward. They are not paid out of this $150,000.

Mr. HOWE. And secondly, that expense is not paid out of this appropriation of $150,000, not paid out of these appropriations for clerks in any of these bureaus. That is chargeable to the appropriation made for defraying the expenses of the loan branch; I forget what they call it, but probably that is it. That appropriation last year, I believe, was $2,000,000. I wish the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would correct me if I am wrong. The appropriation for defraying the expenses of the loan department was $2,000,000 last year.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Two million dollars.

Mr. HOWE. I think it was the same the year before. I never have understood that they had reported a surplus. I believe they pretend to have spent the whole appropriation right along, and they wanted the same appropriation this year, $2,000,000, but I think it is reduced in the bill to $1,500,000. About that business this ought to be remembered, that your printing was pretty much concluded; you had got out the maximum of your notes and your bonds, and you wanted some new bonds printed, and some new notes for the purpose of transfer and to replace loss and damage, but that printing could not amount to anything like the printing which we had to provide for during the war. The counting of your coupons could not have required any more help this year than the year before, and I do not understand how it is that this accumulation happens. Having $2,000,000, all they asked for the year before, and having spent it, and having only $2,000,000 the present year to spend, I do not see why the work for the year before must not necessarily have been done, and why the work of this year charged upon the appropriation of the current year, $2,000,000, should have been any more than the business of the year. So I think the Register is mistaken in supposing that this large increase of women was made necessary—a discovery detected for himself for the first time—to bring up the business that ought to have been done the year before, and that failed of being done the year before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend from Wisconsin permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to assure my friend from Wisconsin about this coupon business, that the investigations with which I have been charged into the state of certain affairs in the Treasury have enabled me to know that, as a matter of fact, for more than a year past, there have been more than four million coupons—I mean four million distinct pieces of paper—in arrears in the bureau of the Register's office that counts and arranges the coupons and compares them with the register of bonds in the books, to see that there are not duplicates, &c. Of course it must be obvious to my friend from Wisconsin, as to everybody else, that the proper administration of the business would require that they should be kept up by some proper means or other. I am not now speaking as to whether people have done their duty; but the business ought to be kept up. Mr. Moore, the gentleman in charge of that particular branch, has told me, in the course of my investigations, over and over again—and I have seen myself the great pile of coupons there—that he needed more force in order to get up and to have the coupons compared and labeled, and put into the proper book, so as to secure the Government for the purposes for which this counting is needed at all from the loss that might otherwise occur. That is the fact; and in some way we ought to provide that it shall be done.

Mr. HOWE. Agreed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now let us have the vote.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from Ohio wants the vote immediately now, but he cannot get it until I have returned my thanks to the Senator from Vermont for putting into this case one fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. The reason I called for the vote was that this discussion has nothing to do with the point.

Mr. HOWE. My friend shall have the vote in due time; but I am obliged to the Senator from Vermont for putting into the case a fact. It is this fact, that the business in the Register's office was in arrear; that there were four million pieces of paper uncounted. Mr. President, I am thrown back, then, on this conclusion: that if you want the business of that office done, you must get it done in some other way than by appropriating money for it, because you have appropriated the money for counting these pieces of paper every year; $2,000,000 the current year, $2,000,000 the year before, and all they ask the present year is $2,000,000; that, they say, is sufficient to do the work, and they have had it right along, and the work is not done. Now, you must do something else besides appropriating money; you cannot get it done in that way. So that this fact, important and solemn as it is, does not go to justify the making of these great appropriations for help, because it does seem to establish to my mind the conclusion that the work done is not at all proportioned to the money appropriated.

But, sir, I did not mean to ransack the whole Treasury Department when I got up. The main thing I wished to say when I took the floor was this: that by this time the head of the Treasury Department should be able to tell us how much help he wanted in each of these bureaus to perform the regular annual recurring business of the bureau, and that by this time he should be able to tell us in what bureaus there was an accumulation, an arrearage of business, and how much help he needed to close that out. Where those accumulations are I say give him all the help he may want to do the work; but I think I have evidence now that this extra help is employed not where those accumulations are, but where those accumulations are not. I want to see the necessities of each Department ascertained, measured by law, and provided for by law. I protest that it is wrong to put a large sum of money into the hands of any single individual to be appropriated and disposed of just as that individual chooses, even if the individual be the most honest man there is in the world. It is an irresponsible authority that you propose by this amendment to place once more in the hands of the Secretary to dispose of $150,000 just as he pleases. The pretext is that it is needed for help; but getting it into his hands, he may appropriate it for help honestly; but suppose he should not? If he be not an honest man, he has authority to put it all into the hands of one man or divide it among a dozen; he can pay $1,000 a year or $100 a year or $20,000 a year, as he pleases. That is what he can do, I think.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The law provides the salaries.

Mr. HOWE. The law does not provide for the appointment of any one of these men. This is so much, $150,000 in a gross sum, put into his hands to employ help, temporary clerks.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And the law provides what those clerks shall receive, according to their classification.

Mr. HOWE. The law provides that in each of these bureaus a certain number of clerks ranking as class four shall have $1,800 salary, and a certain number ranked as class three shall have $1,600; and when it has gone through with the four classes the law is silent and has said all it has got to say. If the Senator from Maine will examine the statute he will find that it does not meet his expectations at all. I think this money—this suggestion may be called a suspicion, but I think the Senate will confirm me in this much of suspicion—this $150,000 will be, a part of it, appropriated to increasing the compensation—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not at all; it cannot be.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator says it will not be done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was done in the last law, but cannot be now.

Mr. HOWE. I will take the Senator's guarantee on that point, but I had supposed it would be appropriated in that way, and I hope that he will not give any bonds or make any positive assurance that it shall not be. The Senator's opinion on that point does not change my judgment as to the necessity of regulating the disposition of these large sums of money wherever you put them into the hands of any man, be he honest or otherwise.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Cole, Corbett, Cragin, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Johnson, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sumner, Van Winkle, Vickers, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Chandler, Conkling, Connors, Drake, Ferry, Howe, McCreery, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Stewart, Tipton, and Trumbull—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Morton, Norton, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, and Willey—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 286) granting a pension to John Q. A. Keck, late a private in the third Missouri cavalry; and the bill (H. R. No. 347) to amend "An act to divide the State of Illinois into two judicial circuits," approved February 13, 1855.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 568) to provide for the erection of a building for a post office and the United States courts in the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 385) constituting eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workingmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

SOUTHERN STATES—VETO.

The message further announced that the President of the United States having returned with his objections the bill (H. R. No. 1058) to admit the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to representation in Congress, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the House had, in conformity with the Constitution, proceeded to reconsider the bill, and having passed the same by a two-thirds vote, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, transmitted it, with the President's objections, to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer the first of the series of amendments of the Committee on Finance, which the Secretary has in printed form.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before proceeding with the Senator's amendments, as the bill will manifestly take time, and the veto which has just come from the other House is in reference to a bill that it is very important should become a law at once if at all, as all the States embraced in that bill are being delayed, I move that the pending bill be laid aside informally, and that we take up the veto message and vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present bill will be laid aside informally if there be no objection. No objection being made, it is laid aside.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask to have the message read.

The message of the President was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In returning to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, a bill entitled "An act to admit the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, to representation in Congress," I do not deem it necessary to state at length the reasons which constrain me to withhold my approval. I will not, therefore, undertake, at this time, to reopen the discussion upon the grave constitutional questions involved in the act of March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto, in pursuance of which it is claimed, in the preamble to this bill, these States have framed and adopted constitutions of State government. Nor will I repeat the objections contained in my message of the 20th instant, returning without my signature the bill to admit to representation the State of Arkansas, and which are equally applicable to the pending measure.

Like the act recently passed in reference to Arkansas, this bill supersedes the plain and simple mode prescribed by the Constitution for the admission to seats in the respective Houses of Senators and Representatives from the several States. It assumes authority over six States of the Union which has never been delegated to Congress, or is even warranted by previous unconstitutional legislation upon the subject of restoration. It imposes conditions which are in derogation of the equal rights of the States, and is founded upon a theory which is subversive of the fundamental principles of the Government. In the case of Alabama it violates the plighted faith of Congress by forcing upon that State a constitution which was rejected by the people, according to the express terms of an act of Congress requiring that a majority of the registered electors should vote upon the question of its ratification.

For these objections, and many others that might be presented, I cannot approve this bill, and therefore return it for the action of Congress required in such cases by the Federal Constitution.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1868.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1058) to admit the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to representation in Congress, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I rise to say but a word on the veto message that has just been read. I am unwilling that the Senate shall take the vote on the bill to which it expresses the dissent of the President without declaring my hearty approval of it and my admiration of the wise, patriotic, and courageous statesman in this his last effort to stay the factious frenzy of Congress. With a calm but dauntless spirit he has kept his oath, to the best of his ability to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of his country; and his many messages to Congress remonstrating against its infraction are of unsurpassed ability. No American statesman has demonstrated a stronger, truer, or more steady devotion to his country, the great principles of the Constitution, and the Union of the States and the liberties of the people under it. No man possessed of so much patronage ever administered it with less of purpose for party or personal ends or more singly for the good of his country or passed freer from stain through all the temptations of power. His presidential career has been a continued struggle, calm and intrepid, to perform the duties of his great office amid unexampled difficulties, perils, and opposition; and not he, but others, are responsible for any failure.

His career, from the humblest origin through every gradation to the highest office, with much wise, able, and stern competition at every step, all of which he overcame, his great natural abilities, and a courage that never quailed in the presence of any trials or dangers, mark him strongly and distinctly as one of nature's great men. At the dawn of the rebellion he stood alone in the Senate the solitary representative of true allegiance to his country and her Constitution from the South, and the burning and tremendous denunciation of the inflamed mind and passion of eleven States burst upon him, but it moved him not. He was elected to the second office, and soon Providence and the Constitution devolved upon him the first. The party which elected him formed bold, unpatriotic and selfish schemes of ambition, and invited him to lead them. Still true to his country and her Constitution, the people and their liberties, he broke away from his party and the dazzling lure which they had held up to him, and has striven with steady, patriotic heroism to defeat their mad projects by opposing to them all the power with which he was invested. For this they turned upon him with a relentless fury that has no parallel. He has not been sustained by the country as he should have been. His official career will soon close, but impartial history will write his life and services to be the noblest of the day; and it will be among the grand annals of mankind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 35, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Connors, Corbett, Cragin, Drake, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Howard, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Johnson, McCreery, Patterson of Tennessee, and Vickers—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Norton, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, and Tipton—13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 35 and the nays are 8. Two thirds of the members present having voted in the affirmative, the bill is passed notwithstanding the objections of the President.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio to House bill No. 605 will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts authorizing the publication of the debates in Congress are hereby repealed from and after the 4th day of March next, and the joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and required to invite proposals for the publication of the actual proceedings and debates in Congress, upon a plan and specifications to be previously published by them, and shall also ascertain the cost of such publication by the Superintendent of Public Printing, and shall report as soon as practicable such proposals and estimate of cost, together with a bill to provide for the publication of the debates and proceedings of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ought to state to the Senate that this is in pursuance of an act passed March 2, 1867, which gives the two years' notice required by law to discontinue the arrangement relative to the publication of the Globe. After that notice was given it would seem to have become the duty of the Committee on Printing to make provision for the publication of the debates; and I have conferred with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on the subject. It is thought best to repeal all the laws relative to the publication, but we had not sufficient information to enable us to determine whether the work could be done cheaper or better by making a new arrangement with the Globe office, or by advertising for bids, or by printing the debates at the Public Printing Office. So the Committee on Finance concluded to report this section, which repeals all acts on the subject from and after the 4th of March next, and leaves to the Committee on Printing to report at the next session of Congress a plan for publishing the debates after that time, and we shall have the next session to consider and act on their plan.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest whether it is worth while to repeal these laws about the publication of the Globe until we have made some other arrangement absolutely for the publication of the debates.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is much better to do it. The present arrangement expires on the 4th of March, 1869, and it is important that the whole matter be swept away, so that the Committee on Printing shall have an open door to make the best arrangement they can.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no information on the subject.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is an amendment which I have not had an opportunity to read. It appears to consist of several sections changing entirely the mode of the publication of the proceedings of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. Only one section.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There are several sections printed here together, but perhaps the other sections are separate amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I propose to offer them separately.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it is not material whether the provision be in one section or in several sections. I saw that the amendment as printed had several sections in it, and I presumed they all related to this subject; but it seems that this matter is embraced in one section, by which the publication of the proceedings of Congress is to be changed from the mode that has been practiced for the last forty years.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. TRUMBULL. "Not necessarily changed!" The provision is "that all acts and parts of acts authorizing the publication of the debates in Congress are hereby repealed." I should think that would necessarily change it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is agreed, I believe, generally, and there is very little doubt, that the present rates are too high, that the present contract is unnecessarily burdensome to the public, and that we can make a better contract even with the publishers of the Globe. The Committee on Finance thought, therefore, we had better avail ourselves of the notice given last year, the law requiring it to be a two-years' notice to discontinue the present arrangement. Certainly we can make a better one, even with the publishers of the Globe; but I think, myself, from the examination I have given the subject, that the Globe had better be published at the Government Printing Office; but that is a matter on which I have not sufficient information to make any proposition now. By this amendment the whole matter is referred to the proper tribunal, the joint Committee on Printing, who will have the next session of Congress to perfect a plan.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was because I had not sufficient information, and I did not suppose the Senate had, that I was about to interpose an objection to the passage of such an important provision as this upon an appropriation bill. In the first place, it is very objectionable to introduce legislation on an appropriation bill, as we are often told by the Senator having charge of such bills. Here is a proposition introduced and sprung upon the Senate without any consideration or any opportunity to examine it, when a bill is under consideration which has passed one House and is here soon to be put upon its passage.

The Senator from Ohio tells us that he does not know that this amendment will work any change; he does not know whether the work can be done more cheaply at the Government Printing Office or not. Let me submit to him if it would not be advisable to make those inquiries and ascertain the facts before we repeal all the laws we have upon the subject. It seems to me it is starting out in the wrong way to begin by an absolute repeal of all existing laws for the publication of the debates of Congress, and that the better way would be to authorize the joint Committee on Printing to ascertain whether a more advantageous arrangement can be made for the publication of the debates, and not commence by repealing the laws and rely upon making some arrangement hereafter.

I am a little surprised that the Committee on Appropriations make no objection to general legislation upon this bill, because if this practice obtains I have in my charge, I think, as many as twenty bills that the Committee on the Judiciary have agreed to, and we should be very glad to have them passed, and I know of no place so good to put them in as this appropriation bill of my friend from Maine. They are all bills which ought to be passed, as the committee think. They have the sanction of the Committee on the Judiciary, and if the Senator from Maine consents to have this general legislation go on the bill we can make an omnibus bill that will do for all the legislation that all the committees have in charge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have just had one omnibus bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That was an omnibus bill, so called, but still the subjects of that bill had some analogy to each other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not much.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Illinois has a charming way of making appeals to the Senate, but it sometimes requires a little patience to listen to him. According to the general run of the logic of the Senate it would appear that the Committee on Finance are in some way or other taking a snap judgment against somebody, that we are doing something that is terribly wrong, that we are springing something on the Senate. The Senator did not know the facts, or he would not have made such a declaration. A law passed on the 2d of March, 1867, provides as follows:

"That the notice required by the fourth section of the act entitled 'An act to pay in part for publishing the debates in Congress, and for other purposes,' approved July 4, 1864, is hereby given that Congress will, in two years from the close of the present Congress, abrogate the provisions of the first and second sections of said act."

Here is the notice required by the law, which abrogates the main portions of the arrangement on the 4th day of March next. The result of this repeal or modification of the contract is that on the 4th of March next there will be no provision of law by which the Globe can be published, and yet in this bill there are appropriations for the publication of the Globe during the whole of the next fiscal year.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator refer me to the statute giving this notice?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is section eleven of the deficiency appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What is the act to which that refers?

Mr. SHERMAN. It refers to an act approved July 4, 1864. There is no contract between the publishers of the Globe and the United States; the whole arrangement is under provisions of law. Such was the condition of affairs. Here was an appropriation covering the whole of the next fiscal year. The result would be that if Congress should be convened at any time before the first Monday of December, 1869, there would be no provision for the publication of the Globe. Important elements of the contract with the Globe publishers would have been repealed, and yet, under this bill, appropriations would continue for the publication of the Globe.

Under these circumstances, after full consultation with the Committee on Printing and the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Finance undertook to provide for the publication of the debates of Congress. Instead of this being now sprung upon the Senate, it will be seen by looking at the printed amendment that the Committee on Finance reported it on the 2d of June and had it sent to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Finance reported it after careful consideration; it has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations; and now, carrying out this notice of nearly a month, I have offered the amendment. There is nothing very remarkable about it. This is the appropriate place for it. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that every particle of legislation in regard to the Congressional Globe is in an appropriation bill, except the single case of a law reported by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] which is referred to in the section giving the notice. The appropriations are in the appropriation bills, and all the laws and limitations upon the publication of the Globe are in the appropriation bills. This is the proper place for this provision. It comes up in the regular manner, and nobody is taken by surprise. It is not sprung upon anybody; it is done after full deliberation.

All agree that we can make a better bargain for the publication of the Globe, and we can correct some abuses that have grown out of its publication. We can decrease largely the expenditure of public money for the publication of the debates of Congress. The question was, whether we should make a new contract with the publishers of the Globe, or whether we should invite bids to carry on the work on the same plan heretofore adopted, or whether it should be done at the Government Printing Office. This was a matter which the Committee on Finance did not undertake to decide. They undertook, however, to report this section repealing all laws authorizing the publication of the Globe from and after the 4th of March next, and leaving the subject of the manner of publishing the debates after that time to be settled hereafter on the report of the proper joint committee of the two Houses. That is all there is in the amendment. If we had undertaken to decide, as my friend from Rhode Island wished us to do, that it was better to publish the debates at the Government Printing Office, that might have been a cause of complaint; the Senator from Illinois might have said "the Committee on Finance do not know anything about printing, and we ought to have some better authority in regard to the subject of printing." The result was that we did not undertake to decide that question, but we simply provide that the appropriations made in this bill shall not be paid under the existing contract with the publishers of the Globe after the 4th of March next, and that all laws providing for the publication of the debates in the Globe shall cease at that time, and that the Committee on Printing shall devise some better mode of publishing them. I am now prepared to say that many propositions will be submitted from men perfectly competent to do the same work at a largely reduced expenditure, and I have no doubt that the publishers of the Globe themselves will submit bids, when called for under the operation of this amendment, largely reducing the price they now receive; but the probability is, in my opinion, that the committee will find that we can do the whole work better at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is slightly mistaken as to the effect of the action of Congress a year ago, if it took place a year ago. I do not remember the precise date of the act to which he referred; but it was at the last Congress, I think.

Mr. SHERMAN. March 2, 1867.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator is mistaken

as to the effect of the action which took place at that time. The law under which the debates of Congress are published in the Globe required that two years' notice should be given before it should be abrogated, and all that Congress undertook to do in the appropriation act to which the Senator refers was to give that notice. It did not abrogate the contract with the Globe at all. We had an existing contract made under a law passed in 1864 which could not be abrogated except upon two years' notice, and the act of March 2, 1867, gave the notice by declaring—

"That the notice required by the fourth section of the act entitled 'An act to pay in part for publishing the debates in Congress, and for other purposes,' approved July 4, 1864, is hereby given that Congress will, in two years from the close of the present Congress, abrogate the provisions of the first and second sections of said act."

Now, two years from the close of the Thirty-Ninth Congress in 1867 would be the 2d of March, 1869. Congress gave notice that they would then abrogate the contract. Now, then, the question is, shall we proceed now to abrogate it? We could not abrogate it without giving this notice. The object of the notice was to place ourselves in such a position that if we thought proper we could make some other arrangement. All that we have done is to give this two years' notice; we have done nothing more; so that the publishers of the Globe should not be taken by surprise by our action. It seems to me if the Senator would strike out the first three lines of his proposed amendment, so as not to repeal these laws at this time, it will be in our power to repeal them if we desire to do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How would it read then?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It would read as follows:

That the joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and required to invite proposals for the publication of the actual proceedings and debates in Congress, upon a plan and specifications to be previously published by them, and shall also ascertain the cost of such publication by the Superintendent of Public Printing, and shall report as soon as practicable such proposals and estimate of cost, together with a bill to provide for the publication of the debates and proceedings of Congress.

If we did that it would be in accordance with our notice, but at this time to repeal absolutely these laws it seems to me is striking in the dark.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will see that this repeal does not take effect until after the 4th of March.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But it takes effect at that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, peremptorily.

Mr. TRUMBULL. You may not want to repeal them. That is the very thing I object to. You repeal them before you get your information. What possible objection can the Senator from Ohio have to leaving out the first three lines of his proposed amendment and directing this committee to make these inquiries? We have got to act upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have said to the Senator that we have already ascertained, and it is an undisputed fact, that the Government may in several ways do better than the present contract with the publishers of the Globe themselves. That is ascertained and agreed to. We debated the whole subject a year ago. Congress would have abrogated the arrangement then, on the day of the passage of this notice, but for the fact that two years' notice was required, and finally the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] came to the conclusion that we could not abrogate it until after giving the notice, and he drew the section, I believe, and it was finally passed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. According to the Senator's own amendment, other legislation will be necessary before we can provide for publishing the proceedings of Congress. That is one fact. When you adopt that other necessary legislation, why not then repeal existing laws? Why repeal existing laws now to take effect in futuro? We have got to legislate on the subject. The Senator from Ohio says he has the information already; but his amendment provides for obtaining that information, because the committee is required to ascertain the cost of this work. We are not prepared to decide to-day, the Senator from Ohio is not prepared to decide to-day, whether it will be best to have the proceedings of Congress published at the Government Printing Office or to let the work out by contract. He wants information on that subject, and has provided in this amendment for obtaining it. Now, the present mode of publishing the proceedings of Congress is in force, and is bound to be in force until March, 1869. Between this time and March, 1869, the Senator from Ohio contemplates arranging some other system for publishing these proceedings. Why do you want to repeal at this time the provision relative to the existing mode of publication? What object is there in it? It may turn out that the present mode of publication is the very best we can get. Will it not be time enough to decide that when we get these other proposals? I move to amend the amendment by striking out after the word "that," in the first line, these words:

All acts or parts of acts authorizing the publication of the debates of Congress are hereby repealed from and after the 4th day of March next and the.

So that the section will simply require the joint Committee on Printing to ascertain the facts and report them to Congress, and then when we receive their report we can adopt such system as is thought to be best.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I am glad that this amendment is brought forward. If we are to have a Government Printing Office at all it seems to me that we should there publish the debates and proceedings of Congress. Would it not be as proper and as profitable to do this part of the public printing in the Government Printing Office as any other part, such as the printing of bills and the ordinary printing that we must have done? If there is any propriety in keeping a Government Printing Office at all, there is a propriety in having this printing done at that office. If it is better to have the debates and the proceedings of Congress printed by contract, it would certainly be better for the same reason to abolish the Government Printing Office altogether.

Now, sir, if I understand our printing system, it is a very loose one and a very remarkable one. A large part of the printing consists of the debates and proceeding of Congress. That we have done by contract. Then we have bills, reports, and matters of that sort printed at the Government Printing Office. That is a second establishment. Then we have a large printing establishment in the Treasury Department, and a very expensive one. That is a third establishment. I am told that there is also a printing establishment in the Interior Department, and that the printing of the Interior Department is a separate business from any of the printing that I have mentioned. I do not know whether the printing of the War Department is performed in the Government Printing Office or not. Can the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations inform me?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is done at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MORTON. But the printing of the Interior Department is not, as I am informed; it is performed by an establishment in the Interior Department itself. Here are four distinct ways of having the public printing done. Now, Mr. President, if we have a public printing office at all, let us have all the public printing done there, and let that printing establishment be revised and reorganized so that the printing can be done cheaply and well. I believe that we can have all the Government printing done by contract, even at one third of the present cost. The system is loose. It is badly managed. We have three or four ways of printing where we should have but one. Let us do it all in the Government Printing Office; make it an establishment adequate for that purpose; see that it is well managed; or else let us dispense with that establishment and have it done by contract under such regulations that the money of the Government shall not be squandered. If my information is correct the whole thing could not be worse managed than it is now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer from the Committee on Finance the amendment that is printed as a third section. The second printed amendment has been superseded.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That section ten of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1867, shall not be so construed as to authorize the publication of any advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations by the newspapers in the District of Columbia, selected in accordance with the law, unless such advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations are delivered by the proper head of a Department to such newspaper for publication in accordance with law, and the rates of compensation for such printing shall not exceed the rates paid for similar printing under existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "unless," in the ninth line, the words "such publication is deemed necessary by the proper head of a Department, nor unless."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would not put that in. It is bad enough already.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain it presently. I desire, also, to add a clause at the end of the amendment which the Clerk can read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as it is proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That section ten of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1867, shall not be so construed as to authorize the publication of any advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations by the newspapers in the District of Columbia, selected in accordance with the law unless such publication is deemed necessary by the proper head of a Department, nor unless such advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations are delivered by the proper head of a Department to such newspaper for publication in accordance with law, and the rates of compensation for such printing shall not exceed the rates paid for similar printing under existing law. And no advertisement whatever in any newspaper published in the District of Columbia shall be paid for by any disbursing officer, and if paid shall not be allowed by any accounting officer unless published in pursuance of the several acts named in this section.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain the proposition in a few words. This bill contains several items making appropriations for advertising in newspapers. Under an act which was passed in 1866 provision was made for publishing in two newspapers in the District of Columbia all the Department advertisements. By a subsequent amendatory act in 1867 it was provided that all advertisements ordered by any head of a Department shall be published in those two newspapers. Two newspapers were selected in accordance with the law, the Daily Chronicle and the Evening Star, of this city. They claim the right to publish as Government advertisements all the advertisements published by the Government in any part of the United States. Thus, in the papers I have before me, there are advertisements of sod to be put on a fort in New Mexico; provisions to be supplied in Utah; post routes in Arizona; and a multitude of advertisements of that kind which certainly ought not to be published in Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are they now published here?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. These accounts have been presented to the First Comptroller for adjudication, and he has ruled against them, ruled them out, and said it could not have been the intention of Congress to provide for such a class of advertisements being published in the city of Washington.

Another clause of that second act provides for the publication of the laws. By general law the laws are published at a very low rate in two papers selected in each of the States; but by this law these two newspapers selected for the District of Columbia were authorized to publish the laws at not exceeding the rates paid by private individuals for advertisements. The result is, that in one case that was presented, one of the publishers of these city papers here charged the Government $1,500 for advertising postal routes in certain States, when the rate fixed by law as to other papers was $315. The Comptroller, when the case was brought before him, decided that it could not have been the intention of Congress to provide for the publication of all advertisements ordered by any head of a Department in Washington; nor could it have been the intention of Congress to provide for one rate of compensation for the publication in the States and for a rate several times as large in this city. These accounts are now suspended, and it will be necessary for Congress to pass on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does this correct that practice?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. The amendment has been carefully prepared with that view. It leaves these two papers to publish the advertisements, and requires the Departments to give them all the advertisements that are published at not higher than the rates now provided for by law; but it provides that no advertisements shall be published by them unless they are furnished to them by the proper head of Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Do I understand the Senator from Ohio to say it requires the head of a Department to give them all the advertisements?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; it does not require the head of a Department to give them any advertisements. It does not authorize them to publish any, unless furnished by the head of a Department, and it prohibits the Government advertisements in any other papers in this District except the two designated by law. I do not know whether I have made myself understood; but that is the object of the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. Right at this point, if the Senator will permit me before he takes his seat, I wish to suggest to him that the proposed amendment to the amendment goes further than that. It confers the discretion upon the heads of the proper Departments to withhold what advertisements they please. What is to hinder them from withholding all advertisements under that discretion, so construing it? That it would be an illegitimate construction I have no doubt; but with political feeling such as exists, what is to hinder them from exercising that discretion in a most damaging manner to a paper that they do not like?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from California will see that we have provided that the two papers which have been selected shall publish all the advertisements that are authorized to be published here.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand that.

Mr. SHERMAN. And then we leave to the heads of the Departments to say what advertisements shall be published. Somebody must decide that question. For instance, not to enlarge on this matter, I can read several advertisements that I have here which every man—

Mr. CONNESS. I understand that. I do not wish to charge the Treasury with the publication of unnecessary advertisements; but why not provide, in proper language, that that class of publications shall not be made, without leaving the discretion in the heads of the Departments to withhold what advertisements they may think fit.

Mr. SHERMAN. Who is to decide what are necessary to be published?

Mr. CONNESS. Let it be decided by the language of the law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest that I do not think it is a matter of discretion now. By law certain transactions are required to be advertised absolutely, beyond the discretion of anybody. For instance, proposals for stationery and for supplies of all kinds in the Departments are required to be advertised. That is not a matter of discretion; but the question is, how advertised? In what papers? By the act referred to in this amendment they are required to be advertised in two particular papers; so that I submit to the Senator from California there is no margin of discretion whatever, so far as that goes. The law requires certain advertisements to be made. Then it directs that they shall be published in these papers absolutely. Now, the Senator from Ohio says that in addition to those advertisements these papers have a practice of advertising for proposals which are not authorized by law to be made in these papers, but which are not forbidden, and which are advertised in different parts of the country; and in addition to that, they are in the habit of advertising proposals which are not submitted to them at all by the heads of Departments. That is what I understand him to say; and this amendment is to correct that abuse. If I am right in supposing that it is not a matter of discretion with the heads of Departments whether they will publish what is required to be published in these two papers, then it is clear that this proposition would not give these heads of Departments the discretion which the Senator from California supposes.

Mr. CONNESS. I think the incorporation of the words proposed by the Senator from Ohio as an amendment to the amendment will give that discretion; but I have already said that I did not think it could be legitimately so construed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the difficulty in this case appears to have arisen out of the act of March 2, 1867. Prior to that, in the act referred to in that act, the only advertisements that were permitted to be published in the city of Washington were those that by pre-existing laws were required to be published in this city. The act of 1866 declared:

"That all advertising, notices, and proposals for contracts for the Post Office Department, and all advertising, notices, and proposals for contracts for all the Executive Departments of the Government, required by law to be published in the city of Washington, shall hereafter be advertised by publication in the two daily newspapers in the city of Washington having the largest circulation, and in no others."

You will see that by the act of 1866 the Washington papers were only authorized to publish those notices that the law relating to that class of notices required to be published here. What those were I do not know; but we can obviously enough see that there are certain notices that ought to be published here and a great many others that ought not which would be perfectly useless here. Then when we come to the act of 1867, referring to this act of 1866 that I have read, the phraseology was changed, which led to this abuse, and was adopted in this form, the tenth section of the act of March 2, 1867, referred to in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio:

"That all advertisements, notices, and proposals for contracts for all the Executive Departments of the Government, and the laws passed by Congress and executive proclamations and treaties, shall hereafter be advertised by publication in the two daily papers published in the District of Columbia now selected under the act of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department," &c.

Thus it will be seen that the abuse we are speaking of grew up under the act of 1867, which seemed to declare on the face of it, referring to the two papers indicated by the act of 1866 as having the largest circulation, that there should be published therein every advertisement, every law, every publication, taking the terms of it, so that these papers claimed that if, as is said by the Senator from Ohio, there is an advertisement for beef to supply the Army down in Arizona, they had the right to take it and publish it, when every body knows there is no beef fit to eat to be had in Washington, and no use of advertising for it here.

The difficulty, if there is any, about this amendment which is to correct this abuse, is that it is not stringent enough. It ought to be so confined as only to cover the class of cases that is referred to by the Senator from California and enacted in the act of 1866; that is to say, that class of cases where the existing law requires a publication positively in this city, and that in all others they shall not publish. I do not think the amendment goes quite far enough. There ought to be added to it a provision something like this: to insert after the word "proclamations," in the eighth line of the amendment, "and being required by law to be published in the District of Columbia," and then you will restore it to where it stood under the act of 1866, to which the Senator from California has alluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to carry out the purpose. All we desired was to give to the newspapers selected by the Clerk of the House and by the law the publication of whatever has to be published in this District; but not to authorize or require by law the publication in this city of all the advertisements published throughout the United States. In order to show Senators the character of this business, I hold in my hand an advertisement for the sale of some stuff in Santa Fé published in this city. Here is a whole page of advertisements of mail routes, &c., in the far western Territories.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire how they get those advertisements? Did the Departments furnish them to the papers here?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; they get them from the western papers.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Copy them out?

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose so. I do not know where they get them; I did not inquire into that; but they get them and publish them, and present their bills, but the Comptrollers and the accounting officers hesitate about them. They have overruled them thus far; but the law is doubtful. I think the amendment as I have prepared it will accomplish the purpose that we all desire.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If they play such tricks as that I think we ought to select some other papers.

Mr. SHERMAN. They will all do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Ohio by inserting after the word "proclamations," in line ten, the words "and being required by law to be published in the District of Columbia." That carries us back to the foundation referred to in the act of 1866, to which the Senator from California has alluded; so that it will not permit the head of a Department to have anything published here except what the law already requires.

Mr. CONNESS. Nor prohibit it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would prohibit it; but it only authorizes the head of a Department to deliver to these papers such advertisements as the law requires to be printed here. By looking at the act of 1866 it will be seen that it refers to existing legislation of various kinds, the details of which I am not familiar with, as fixing that which is to be published, and another class were to be published elsewhere. The act of 1867 intended undoubtedly to follow the act of 1866; but from the looseness of its phraseology it covered all classes of advertisements, and in its terms it certainly authorizes the publication here of everything. Now, if we limit the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, in what the heads of Departments shall deliver to them, to those advertisements that the law requires to be published in this District, just as the act of 1866, which is the foundation of all this, requires to be done, we shall be perfectly safe.

Mr. SHERMAN. The difficulty is that there are some advertisements not required by law to be published in the District, but which may properly be published here. For instance, advertisements for mail routes in Maryland might properly be published here, but the law does not require it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not half so much reason for publishing them here as in Baltimore.

Mr. SHERMAN. You have got to leave it after all to the head of the Department. No head of a Department would abuse this discretion. The Clerk of the House selects the papers. No head of a Department will abuse the privilege that is conferred upon him, it seems to me, to publish advertisements unless they are really needed; but I doubt whether we ought to confine it so stringently that the head of a Department cannot publish in this District an advertisement unless the law requires it to be published here. There are cases where the law does not say where the advertisement shall be published.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is not that reasoning in a circle? Does not the law of 1867 require it to be published here? Is not that the very claim you have got here?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understood that what these newspapers contended for was the right to publish in this District everything. That is what they claim.

Mr. SHERMAN. All we say is that they shall not publish in this District advertisements that are not furnished to them by the proper head of a Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That would accomplish it; but I was speaking of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My amendment is additional to that. It still leaves it to the head of the Department, but declares that he shall not deliver anything, even in his discretion, to these newspapers, unless he delivers such notices as the law requires to be published here.

Mr. TRUMBULL. You do not propose to strike out the other?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; by no means; it is merely an addition to it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the attention of the Senator from Ohio to a proposition I will make in lieu of the amendment he proposes. In lieu of what is proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Ohio, I suggest to insert after the word "law," in the ninth line, these words, "and required to be published in the District of Columbia, nor;" so that it will read:

Shall not be so construed as to authorize the publication of any advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations by the newspapers in the District of Columbia, selected in accordance with the law and required to be published in the District of Columbia, nor unless such advertisements, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly the same thing that I proposed to insert after "proclamations" in the next line. It comes to the same result.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know but that it has the same effect; but it avoids the construction that arises from the language of the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, which seems to make it depend upon the discretion of the head of the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will not quite reach it, because so far as it relates to these newspapers selected in accordance with law the law merely requires the selection to be made from the two having the largest circulation. All that that relates to is merely that the selection must be made of the two newspapers having the largest circulation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator is mistaken on that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all. Here it is in the Post Office appropriation bill of 1866: "shall hereafter be advertised by publication in the two daily newspapers in the city of Washington having the largest circulation, and in no others."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the law of 1867 gives it to the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; but it only declares that the Clerk of the House of Representatives is to decide which papers have the largest circulation. That is all. He is the deciding officer. That being so, all that we wish to do now is to limit the advertisements that shall be put into those two papers and exclude all other papers from the advertisements. To do that the Senator from Ohio proposes that the head of the Department shall be the deciding officer, to decide what shall be put into those papers. The objection to his amendment is that it still leaves to the discretion of the head of the Department to insert advertisements that have no place here at all. I propose to correct that by adding in the tenth line, after the word "proclamations," the words "and being required by law to be published in the District of Columbia," not in any particular paper, but published here.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then the Senator and myself reach the same point precisely, except that I offer my proposition in lieu of the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Vermont offers his in addition to the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, which I think will lead to a complication.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not do, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois, to have it read "required by law to be published in the District of Columbia," because the newspaper proprietors contend that by the act of 1867 they are entitled to all these advertisements now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will call the Senators to order for a moment, because there is now an amendment to the amendment pending. Let that be adopted, and then I shall have no objection to either of the others.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no amendment pending except yours, which is an amendment to the bill, and I propose to amend that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have offered an amendment to that amendment, which has not been voted upon, to insert certain words in line nine, and also to add some words to the section. That amendment to the amendment has not been acted on, and until that is disposed of all these other propositions are out of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well. Then we are all out of order. Let us hear what the pending amendment is.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting in line nine, after the word "unless," the words "such publication is deemed necessary by the proper head of a Department, nor unless;" so that the section will read:

That section ten of an act, &c., shall not be so construed as to authorize the publication of any advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations by the newspapers in the District of Columbia selected in accordance with the law, unless such publication is deemed necessary by the proper head of a Department, nor unless such advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations are delivered by the proper head of a Department to such newspaper, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the amendment to the amendment, and declared it rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is some misunderstanding. There is no objection certainly to the amendment to the latter part of the section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have an objection to your amendment to the amendment, for the reason that it leaves an absolute discretion in the head of a Department to decide what he will have published here. I think the law ought to fix that as it does now, and therefore I think the amendment of the Senator will defeat the object he has in view himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I will let the gentlemen try and see if they can fix it up any better.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now, I move to insert after the word "law," in the ninth line of the amendment, the words "and required to be published in the District of Columbia, nor;" so that it will read:

That section ten, &c., shall not be so construed as to authorize the publication of any advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations by the newspapers in the District of Columbia selected in accordance with the law, and required to be published in the District of Columbia, nor unless such advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations are delivered by the proper head of a Department, &c.

That excludes all proclamations and other notices not required to be published in this District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That seems to reach precisely the point my amendment did. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know but that it will accomplish the object. Senators will see. The only doubt I have about it is that it does not say, "required by law."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think it does.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; those words are not in it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I modify my amendment so as to make it read "and required by law to be published in the District of Columbia, nor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe nobody objected to the insertion of the words that I offered, to come in at the end of the section. I ask that those words be read, and the question put on them.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment to the amendment, which was to add at the end of the section the following words:

And no advertisement whatever in any newspaper published in the District of Columbia shall be paid for by any disbursing officer, and if paid, shall not be allowed by any accounting officer, unless published in pursuance of the several acts named in this section.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will merely state that the Executive Departments in some cases are publishing in papers not selected according to law, the Intelligencer and other papers, and they are making claims for advertisements, and are daily inserting them. This is for the purpose of cutting off that, so that the publication will only be in the two papers selected according to law.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. Although this section pretty well guards the interests of the public, I think it requires something more—

Mr. CONNESS. Let the section as amended be read.

Mr. CAMERON. I have no objection to that, and then I shall probably say a word or two on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment as amended, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That section ten of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1867, shall not be so construed as to authorize the publication of any advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations by the newspapers in the District of Columbia, selected in accordance with the law, and required by law to be published in the District of Columbia, nor unless such advertisements, notices, proposals, laws, or proclamations are delivered by the proper head of a Department to such newspaper for publication in accordance with law, and the rates of compensation for such printing shall not exceed the rates paid for similar printing under existing law. And no advertisement whatever published in the District of Columbia shall be paid for by any disbursing officer, and if paid, shall not be allowed by any accounting officer unless published in pursuance of the several acts named in this section.

Mr. CAMERON. I am afraid that this section is not yet sufficiently guarded, and I should like some of the gentlemen learned in the law who so often give us the benefit of their advice here, to draw an amendment repealing the law of last year. I understand that the Government has paid to two newspapers something like $40,000 apiece, $80,000 in all.

Mr. SHERMAN. What papers?

Mr. CAMERON. The Chronicle and the Evening Star of this city have been paid, or will be paid, for the printing of last year, under the section which we passed last year, that amount. The greater part of that advertising was for the purchase and sale of articles so far beyond the circulation of these papers that none of them could ever reach the people who were interested. For instance, there were fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars paid for an advertisement as to the publication of mail contracts in the Territory of Arizona. There was a large sum of money paid for an advertisement asking proposals for a fort somewhere down in New Mexico. I think there were half a dozen mules, or something like that, to be bought in Idaho, and they were advertised here; and in some cases these advertisements were published here a day or two before the sale or purchase was to be made at these remote places. This is an abuse which would shock the community if they knew it; but nobody seems to know anything about it. We hardly know it ourselves. We passed a law last year which we thought was going to prevent the heads of Departments from doing wrong, and we gave the power of selecting the printers to the Clerk of the House of Representatives—a man who had plenty to do besides attending to this duty, which he did not understand very well, I think, from the manner in which it has been done. I do not know exactly how we shall get along with this proposition, for these people are very artful, as they have proved by their conduct last year. I should like to have this tenth section of the law of last year repealed altogether. I ask my friend, the Senator from Vermont, to frame a provision repealing that section in such words that no comptroller who is a lawyer or anybody else can get over it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should want time to do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment, as amended.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will it be competent to amend the amendment afterward?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be when we get into the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think nothing will be accomplished by the amendment of the Senator from Maine, which has been adopted, to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and for this reason: as I understand it, the law of 1867, referred to by the Senator from Vermont, as construed by the newspapers and according to the terms of the law itself, requires every advertisement to be published here in the District of Columbia. The abuse which we wish to correct is this: a newspaper published in the District of Columbia seeing an advertisement in a Santa Fé paper by a quartermaster for lumber to build barracks, copies it into his paper in the District, and then brings his bill to the Treasury Department for payment; and a controversy has arisen there, the Treasury refusing to pay, and the newspaper proprietor insisting that he is entitled to pay. That is the evil. Now, you propose to remove this evil of publication in the city of Washington of an advertisement in reference to a local matter in Arizona or New Mexico or California or elsewhere. All agree that ought to be corrected. The Senator from Maine proposes to correct it by declaring that nothing shall be published in the District of Columbia except what is required by law to be published here. That is reasoning in a circle. You come right around to the same place.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator read the act of 1867 to which he refers?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is the tenth section of the civil appropriation bill, as follows:

"That all advertisements, notices, and proposals for contracts for all the Executive Departments of the Government, and the laws passed by Congress, and executive proclamations and treaties shall hereafter be advertised by publication in the two daily papers published in the District of Columbia now selected under the act of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress."

That requires in so many words all these publications to be made in the two newspapers published in the District of Columbia which have been selected by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the newspaper men insist, and well they may insist on it under the terms of the act, although evidently that was not the meaning of Congress. It is proposed to correct that. I submit you correct nothing when you simply say that nothing shall be published here except what by law is required to be published here. That is the very thing in dispute; and I submit that some other amendment is necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had an amendment to guard against that very difficulty.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know that amendment would have guarded it; but that has been stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that this section be passed over informally for the time being, and that we go on with other parts of the bill, and in the mean time we can fix this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARLAN in the chair.) That course will be pursued, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have another amendment that I desire to offer from the Committee on Finance. It is to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th day of June, 1868, the annual salaries of the Comptrollers of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Customs shall be $1,500 each; of the Solicitor, the Auditors, the Register, and the supervising architect of the Treasury, $4,000 each; and the additional amount necessary to pay the increase of salaries provided for by this section be, and the same is hereby, appropriated.

Mr. President, here is a proposition to increase to some extent the salaries of nine officers. From the temper of the Senate yesterday I suppose it will be very difficult to get them to agree to it; but the circumstances are peculiar; and nothing but peculiar circumstances would have induced us to report the section. This increases their salaries but slightly.

Mr. SUMNER. What is the increase?

Mr. SHERMAN. About one thousand dollars each. They have been allowed out of the fund which we have had so much talk about, by the Secretary of the Treasury, for two or three years, about one thousand dollars extra. I desire to say that the salary of the First Comptroller, the most important officer in the Treasury Department, was fixed in 1799 at $3,500, when a clerk got but $800, and it stands there yet. So with the First Auditor; he got $3,000 then, and he stands there yet. These Auditors and Comptrollers are the most responsible officers of the Treasury Department. Upon their integrity and fidelity depend the entire safety of the Treasury Department. They pass in a month more accounts than the Court of Claims will in three years, and decide causes as important to the Government as the Supreme Court decide in a whole year; and yet their pay stands as it was in 1799. The present First Comptroller, who is a man distinguished for ability, says he cannot live on the salary. The Second Comptroller, Mr. Brodhead, is a gentleman of great distinction; and he is also paid $3,000 or $3,500. These other officers, the heads of bureaus, the Auditors are paid now $3,000; and they include among them, as we all know, men of great ability and high character.

The Committee on Finance were not prepared to take up the bill referred to yesterday, for the reorganization of the Treasury Department, although we expect to do so early at the next session. We thought it would be very difficult to get action on such a bill at this session; but the Committee on Finance unanimously recommended that this relief should be given to these officers, as we have cut off all opportunity, which the Secretary of the Treasury has had under previous laws, to make an additional allowance to them. That power is now cut off, and they are left to their salaries.

I trust, under the circumstances, the Senate will unanimously agree to this slight increase. It will not operate very long, because probably at the next session of Congress we shall be able to act on the bill reorganizing the Treasury Department; but for this coming year it will raise the Comptrollers from $3,500 to $4,500, and I think that is too little; I would rather say $5,000; and it raises the Auditors from $3,000 up to $4,000. The Senate can do as they please on the subject.

Mr. CAMERON. I trust we shall not agree to this amendment. I am satisfied that this is not the time to raise salaries. Not one of these gentlemen would give up his office because his salary was not increased, and I verily believe that if all of them did give up their offices we could get just as good men to put in their places for the present salaries. Why, sir, we have taken off $100,000,000 from our tax laws, and we are now going on almost daily increasing some item of expenditure or other. I doubt whether the Committee on Finance themselves can tell how much increase is provided in this bill by the additional number of clerks allowed, so far as we have gone.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill is a great diminution upon the appropriations of last year. However, the Committee on Appropriations have it in charge.

Mr. CAMERON. That may be, and it ought to be a diminution. Some three or four or five hundred clerks ought to be dismissed in place of increasing the number. When we had an army of a million men in the field, with vast accounts growing out of that immense army, it was necessary, probably, that our clerical force should be very large; but now, in time of peace, it is not necessary that we should have so many of these people; and certainly at this time when taxation is oppressing everybody, and when the town is swarming with men seeking to get places we should not increase salaries. Why, sir, there is not a day that I am not called upon before I get my breakfast by somebody who wants a place here at the present rates; and yet we are asked to increase the pay of these officers. It is this constant increase of pay every day that swells the number of office-hunters in the country. I think the most unfortunate class in the world are the people who are induced to come to Washington to get a scanty living from the Government; and I would give them no more encouragement. A man had better work at home at a couple of dollars a day in a workshop than come here and take one of these places. The most of them are taught idleness; they are taught extravagance; and every one of them will tell you he is not getting enough pay. My impression is that they would be a great deal better off at home. I for one will not vote for any increase of salaries. After awhile, when we get our debt and taxes reduced, it may be wise to do so; it may not be necessary, but it may be proper then to increase some salaries; but I cannot vote for any such proposition now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I believe I am troubled with about as great a stringency of economy as anybody, but I am in favor of the proposition to increase the salaries of these men. I believe that any one of them would command in the business of the country nearly double the salary he gets from the Government. I am not in favor of that kind of economy that would save the cheese parings and give away the cheese. I know that the First Comptroller, as the Senator from Ohio has suggested, has charge of the most important business of the Government. I believe he is worth to-day more than half a million dollars to the Government. He is as good a Republican as my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. NYE. Who is he?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. R. W. Taylor. We have not had a man since the days of Whittelsey that is worth as much money to the Government as this First Comptroller; and I would be willing to pay him as much as any man under the Government. I think he is worth the whole increase that is proposed to all the rest, rather than that we should be compelled to get along without him; and I say to my friend from Pennsylvania, that unless his salary is raised he will leave the service of the Government. He is a man of large family, and he cannot support them here on his present salary; and it is unreasonable that we should ask him to do so.

Mr. CORBETT obtained the floor.

Mr. CAMERON. This is the old argument, that men in office could do a great deal better out of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CAMERON. I beg pardon; I did not observe that the Senator from Oregon had obtained the floor.

Mr. CORBETT. I give way to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON. I am much obliged to the Senator. I merely desire to say that the argument of the Senator from Vermont is the common one always given when you say a word against an increase of salaries. It is said that the men holding these offices can do a great deal better in private life. Then I say let them go into private life. There are plenty of people who will come here and perform the duties just as well probably as they now do. I mean to say nothing against the ability or high capacity of the First Comptroller. I think all that is said on that subject is correct; but there are plenty of men just as good. An old proverb says that "there are as good fish in the sea as ever were caught;" and I am sure there are always good men willing to go into office. According to the Senator's argument, you might go through the whole list of officers here and raise their salaries. I dare say there are men holding $1,200 clerkships who are fitted to perform the duties of these places; and probably there are men getting large salaries who are not fit for their places; but that does not prove to my mind that you ought to increase salaries. I think that the salaries in our Government are as high as they ought to be. I believe we spend a great deal too much money because we have sympathy for individuals. Because a particular incumbent of an office is a gentlemanly and courteous man, and we meet him in our social circles, we are apt to be willing to increase his salary because we like him, or because we are pleased by some attentions that we receive from him or those around him. I do not pretend that I am not susceptible to all these feelings myself; but I am unwilling to increase salaries this year.

I believe there ought to be an entire change in the Treasury Department. I think there ought to be an overhauling and a systematizing there, so as to make the establishment better for the Government and better for the persons employed. I think we could save money enough there to perhaps give some officers higher salaries; but it would be done by reducing the number of people employed and inaugurating a better system. The other day we had a debate about a commissioner of statistics, and we were told that the person employed in the Treasury Department in that service was entirely unfit for his place. I was told so by some gentleman of this body. We were also told that a man must be kept in the State Department to perform the same duties because he had some capacity in gathering up statistics, and the other man, whose special business it was to attend to that subject, was not fit to do it. That is not the way to legislate. I thank the Senator from Oregon for his courtesy.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. President, I have had some little transactions with the First Comptroller, Mr. Taylor, and in my opinion he is not one of those particularly courteous men who cater to Senators or Congressmen. He is a man who attends to his duties faithfully, I believe, and I think he is a very valuable officer. I admire him the more from the fact that I presented a claim to him, and notwithstanding he rejected the claim I was struck by his ability and the manner in which he examined these things. I believe, as the Senator from Vermont says, that he is a very capable, thorough officer. He watches vigilantly the interests of the Government. I believe he is better worth $5,000 a year than any other man that you could place in that position would be half that amount. He is thoroughly acquainted with the business of the office. There is a very large business to be transacted there. Very large claims are coming constantly before him. It seems to me that to give him a salary that will merely keep his family and not allow him to lay up anything for a rainy day is very unjust. I think his services are worth as much as the services of any Senator here.

I shall support this amendment of the Senator from Ohio, to raise the salaries of these Comptrollers and Auditors who pass upon large claims and judge of them. I think they should receive a salary that would place them above any influences that might tempt them to swerve from their duty in judging of claims, and acting upon them independently. We know, and have heard it said, that influences are brought to bear upon officials to force through claims that are illegitimate and improper; and we should place these men in such a position that they cannot be tempted. I do not believe that Mr. Taylor is one of the kind who can be tempted, but I believe that he should be paid a salary commensurate with his services, and commensurate with the large amount of business he performs and the large amount of claims he is constantly passing upon. I simply desired to add my testimony, knowing something of Mr. Taylor, and having seen something of him.

Mr. NYE. I am myself in favor of paying pretty good salaries; but it seems to me that the reason the honorable Senator from Oregon renders for raising the salary of this man is a very strange one, that he presented a claim to him and he rejected it.

Mr. CORBETT. Yes, sir; I thought the prices were pretty high, and he rejected it.

Mr. NYE. It is very queer that the honorable Senator would present a claim that he did not think was right, and go for raising the salary of the officer that rejected it.

Mr. CORBETT. It did not belong to me.

Mr. NYE. But, sir; I rose for the purpose of saying a single word. I see there is a general willingness here to raise the salaries of these officers of the Treasury; and I do not know but that it is right; but in looking around these Departments last year, as I made a little effort to do, I found many men that have more labor to perform than these Comptrollers who get far less salary, and any effort to raise their salary heretofore has been a failure. Now, I propose to test the fairness of the Senate by proposing to put other Departments on a footing with the Treasury Department, if it is in order. If there is a man in any of the Departments of this Government who works more hours than any other, and has the most important labor to perform in a very important branch of the public service, it is the Commissioner of the General Land Office. His salary is $3,000 a year, and his labors are far more severe than those of the Secretary of the Interior, as the present presiding officer [Mr. HARRIS] will understand. He decides all that great branch of business. The public land interests of this country are certainly as large as any comptrollership is, where he is bounded by his room. I think his salary is altogether too low. Any gentleman who goes into that office and discharges its duties faithfully ought to have more than $3,000 a year. In the Treasury Department they have clerks that get more than that. The Senator from Maine will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know of any.

Mr. NYE. About three thousand dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir.

Mr. NYE. I ask the Senator from Maine how much they do get.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No clerk probably except the chief clerk of a bureau gets $2,000; but there are in the office of the Register book-keepers who get $2,500 or $2,600.

Mr. NYE. Well, sir, there is a book-keeper who gets in the neighborhood of three thousand dollars; and with the twenty per cent. we have been in the habit of giving it is more than that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. And they are picked away at once and taken to New York, where they get $5,000, $6,000, and some of them $10,000.

Mr. NYE. My friend from Vermont has an apprehension that there is danger of the Government losing some of these Comptrollers. Let me tell him that he need have no such fear; they will stay. I have never known one to quit here who got good pay. I am not finding fault with paying this salary to these Comptrollers; perhaps it is right; but I insist upon it that the Treasury Department is not the only Department of this Government; and if the committee who have it in charge are going about to do justice, as I have no doubt the Senator from Ohio intends to do, I can find them cases more deserving, men with as large families, and who work more hours a day than any of these Comptrollers, who are getting but little over half what they propose to give these Comptrollers. The Secretary of the Treasury, I believe, gets $8,000, and now it is proposed to give $4,500 or $5,000 to clerks merely; they are called Comptrollers, because they are at the head of that kind of clerkship. I repeat that I do not know that it is too much, but while we are attempting to do justice to these deserving men, I hope we shall have an amendment giving the Commissioner of the General Land Office as much certainly as some of the clerks of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Nevada and his colleague desire to put in the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I appreciate the services of Mr. Wilson, who is an able and excellent officer; but in the first place the matter ought to be referred to a committee. The increase of these salaries was referred to the Committee on Finance, and after consideration we took these officers and made the increase. Officers in the same Department with the same rank have a great deal more salary now. The Treasurer gets $6,500; the Comptroller of the Currency gets $5,000. The heads of bureaus in the War Department get $7,000. If this proposition had been considered by the Committee on Public Lands, I should have no objection to it.

Mr. NYE. The Committee on Public Lands are certainly as capable as the committee to which this matter has been referred to judge of this subject, and having examined into it—

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Committee on Public Lands report this proposition I have not the slightest objection to it.

Mr. NYE. I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio if it is necessary to go through the formal presentation of it to the committee to see whether it is proper to raise this salary, when the Senator knows and every Senator knows that it should be raised. I do not like to pick out one Department and make its officers princes and keep the others all poor.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to inquire whether an amendment to the amendment is now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the impression of the Chair, it is in order.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I move to insert after the word "Treasury," in the sixth line of the amendment of the Committee on Finance, the words "and the Commissioner of the General Land Office." The chairman of the Finance Committee will accept that, I suppose.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that will be done, and I will say—

Mr. CONNESS. It is done now, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio accept this amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; but I am willing to let the sense of the Senate be taken upon it; if it is in order.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair, whether notice was given of this amendment so as to bring it within the rule; and I will state the reason why I make the inquiry. This may be a meritorious case; but there are a great many other meritorious cases; and if without giving any notice, without the amendment being reported by the Committee on Public Lands, this officer is to be added, then with great propriety we may look about and see what other officers ought to be included; and it is rather invidious to establish that way of accomplishing the result. If notice has been given, I do not object; but if it has not been given, and we are to accept this amendment, then there are various officers who ought to be thought of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no knowledge that any notice was given to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will not make that objection; but that if there be any other case as meritorious as this he will propose it.

Mr. CONKLING. Whether there be others as meritorious as this I am not prepared to say, because we have a rule providing that this particular legislation shall not be reached in this way. Of course, therefore, Senators are not prepared, upon a suggestion being made, to say what other meritorious cases there are. I repeat, I do not wish to object to this case in particular; but if we have a rule I think we ought to adhere to it.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I ask for a vote of the Senate upon it.

Mr. CONKLING. Not if it is not in order, I suppose.

Mr. CONNESS. I did not understand the Senator to insist on the point of order.

Mr. STEWART. If the point of order is insisted on I will move that this amendment be postponed until to-morrow, and I give notice that I shall then offer it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. STEWART. Then I move that the whole amendment go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is hardly necessary, because the whole question will be open when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are other appropriation bills, where it can be moved.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to give notice now that to-morrow I will offer this amendment to this bill, as proposed to-day.

Mr. CONKLING. I made the suggestion that I did merely by way of suggestion, not meaning to insist upon it against the wish of even a single Senator who thinks it is important to take the sense of the Senate on this question. I now withdraw the point of order; but in withdrawing it I wish to say again that I think while we have this rule we ought to adhere to it, and that these officers ought not to be dependent upon the friendly diligence of some Senator who may have in mind a particular case, and who from a sense of justice may rise and suggest that when that same Senator, if his attention had been turned in another direction, very likely would be able to remember a number of other persons equally meritorious. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] says he offered this proposition originally rather by way of illustration. I suppose that to be the case, and I have no doubt the illustration is a true one. I have no doubt the case is one of merit. I only say that it establishes a capricious rule that these officers are to be advanced in their salaries dependent on whether some Senator who has personal knowledge of them is able on the spur of the moment to think of them or not. That is a lottery which I think the rules intended to provide against.

Mr. CONNESS. I renew the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I shall be obliged to invoke the rule, and I will say to Senators who have an interest in this matter that when the bill comes into the Senate they can give me the notice and make a motion to amend it then, and that will answer their purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HARLAN in the chair.) The question of order having been raised, the Chair is of the opinion that it is well taken.

Mr. CONNESS. Well, Mr. President, I now renew the notice that to-morrow I shall offer this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio to add at the end of his amendment the words "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869," so that the salary provided for shall be for that year.

Mr. SHERMAN. That will be proper enough, although this being an appropriation bill for that year the preliminary words of the bill would cover it. I wish now to add to the amendment "and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." These formal words have been omitted, and they ought to be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHANDLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Cattell, Conness, Corbett, Davis, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sumner, Van Winkle, Vickers, Wiley, and Williams—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, McCreery, Stewart, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, and Yates—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cole, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Wade, and Wilson—23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer from the Committee on Finance the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That each night watchman at the Treasury Department shall, from the 1st day of July, 1868, receive a compensation of $900 per annum; and an amount sufficient to pay said increased compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, is hereby appropriated.

I will state that there are twelve night watchmen in the Treasury Department, every one of whom is a wounded soldier.

Mr. SUMNER. What is the pay now?

Mr. SHERMAN. Seven hundred and twenty dollars a year. This gives them the same pay allowed to other watchmen—much less than our watchmen in this building. I trust the amendment will be adopted. The provision was agreed to last year.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to add a proviso that all other watchmen in the Departments shall receive the same compensation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe they do.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to amend the amendment in the way I have indicated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to that amendment, because I do not know precisely how many it would affect.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am opposed to raising the pay in one Department and leaving the same class of officers in other Departments at a lower compensation. Let us have them all alike. I shall to-morrow propose an increase of the salary of all men in the same grade in all the Departments, where the salaries of any have been raised.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know even that there are night watchmen in the other Departments.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then my amendment can do no harm.

Mr. SHERMAN. It would not be wise to legislate in that loose way. If the Senator from Michigan had seen these men performing this duty every night in the year, watching over hundreds of millions of property, he would not deny to them $2 50 a day, $900 a year. We agreed to this last year, but it has been dropped off now in some way. I do not know how. The salary of $720 is totally inadequate. Every one of these twelve men is a soldier, and a wounded soldier, and they are all faithfully serving the Government.

Mr. CAMERON. I shall certainly vote to add the $200 to the night watchmen after we have given $1,000 additional to each of the Comptrollers; and I give notice now that to-morrow I shall offer an amendment to this bill providing for paying the women in the Treasury Department the same compensation that is paid to men for the same service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have but one more amendment to offer, and then I shall relieve the Senate. It is in regard to the pay of the Assistant Treasurer at Charleston. I move on page 46, line eleven hundred and thirty-two, to strike out all after "Charleston" and insert "and after the 30th of June, 1868, the annual salary of the Assistant Treasurer at Charleston shall be $4,000, and that amount is hereby appropriated—$22,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York, Boston, Charleston, and St. Louis, namely: for the Assistant Treasurer at New York, $8,000; those at Boston and St. Louis, each, $5,000, and the one at Charleston, $4,000; and after the 30th of June, 1868, the annual salary of the Assistant Treasurer at Charleston shall be $4,000; and that amount is hereby appropriated—$22,000.

This proposes to raise the pay of the Assistant Treasurer at Charleston from $2,500 to $4,000 a year on the ground of the vastly increased business. He now disburses $7,500,000 a year. His pay was fixed under the old régime at Charleston when the business was small. The papers are quite voluminous which I have received from the Department, showing the necessity of this increase. It simply puts this officer on the same grade with other officers in that Department who perform the same character of service, no more, no less. If the Senate want any further information on the subject the petition of this officer can be read. The proposition is simply to raise his pay from $2,500 to $4,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. How does that conform with the salaries of similar officers at other points?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is less than the pay of the sub-Treasurer at St. Louis and at Boston.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is less than is paid to any other officer who disburses that much money.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The sub-Treasurer at Philadelphia gets $5,000, I think. This officer is the great disbursing officer for the South.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish now to call up the amendment of the Senator from Ohio in regard to the Government advertising, which was passed by informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be regarded as now before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out after its enacting clause and inserting:

That all advertisements, notices, and proposals for contracts, executive proclamations, treaties, and laws, required by law to be published in the District of Columbia, shall be published only in the two papers selected under the act approved May 18, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1867, and for other purposes," and only when the same shall be delivered to such papers by the proper head of a Department for publication; and all of section ten of the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes," preceding the proviso thereof, is hereby repealed, and no advertising whatever in any newspaper published in the District of Columbia shall be paid for by any disbursing officer, and if paid shall not be allowed by any accounting officer, unless published in pursuance of law.

That, in effect, repeals the enacting part of the tenth section of the act of March 2, 1867, out of which this difficulty grows. It refers to the same selection of newspapers, and confines it to these advertisements in the District of Columbia that the law requires to be published here. I feel quite sure that it will cover the whole case.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only modification I want to make is in the last clause. I would change the words "in pursuance of law" to "in pursuance of this act," because the power to publish advertisements in the Intelligencer and other newspapers is claimed under various old laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the slightest objection to that modification. I would have put it in that form, but I thought the language I proposed was more acceptable to the Senator. It is much better, I think, to say "under this act," and I so modify my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted, and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I propose an amendment on page 36, an amendment which I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move: in the eight hundred and seventieth line, after the word "dollars," I move to insert "of solicitor and naval judge advocate general, $3,500." The object of this amendment is merely to continue that office. By an act of 2d of March, 1865, the office of solicitor and naval judge advocate was created "to continue during the rebellion and for one year thereafter," and it has been continued every year by means of the appropriation, and unless this appropriation is made that office will expire. This is for no increase of salary, but merely to continue the same office in existence. The Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives were unanimous in their recommendation of the passage of a bill making the office permanent. The Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate recommend that it be continued for this year with unanimity. The Secretary of the Navy recommends that it be continued. I have his letter here. I have also a letter in my possession from General Grant; he considers the office of importance, and that it ought to be continued. This officer has to examine the returns of about a thousand cases from naval courts of inquiry and courts-martial every year. He has to examine contracts and claims. He is a gentleman of ability, excellent character, familiar with the business; and the Secretary of the Navy states that instead of this office being an increase of the expenses of the Government it will cost much more to have the business attended to by persons who are not paid by a salary than if this office is continued. The probability is that by another year, under a new organization of the Attorney General's department, some arrangement will be made by which this office can be dispensed with or come under the charge of that Department in some way; but I think it very clear that it ought to be continued for this year, and such is the opinion of the Naval Committees of the House of Representatives and of the Senate and of the Secretary of the Navy and of the General, and the facts clearly show that it ought to be so.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to put my notice in form: after the word "Treasury," in the section inserted on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, I propose to insert the words "Commissioner of the General Land Office." I ask that that be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can be done by unanimous consent. No objection being made the proposed amendment will be so referred. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I inquire of the Senator from New Jersey whether he moves this by instructions from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes, sir; I offer it by the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then the Senator is in possession of all the facts, I suppose. This office was created during the war, to continue for two years after the war, I think, and that was the reason he was not appropriated for in the House of Representatives, and the reason he was not appropriated for by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire if this amendment has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We had notice that an amendment would be moved to this effect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What does the rule amount to that has been adopted here requiring these matters to be considered by the Committee on Appropriations if it suffices for a Senator to stand up in his place and say that he intends to do a certain thing at a certain time? I had supposed that the rule would operate to give us the benefit of the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, superadded to the judgment of the committee by whom the amendment was proposed. I only speak for the sake of ascertaining what the rule is to be. If nothing is to be done except simply to give notice that such an amendment will be moved, I do not think the Committee on Appropriations have any opportunity afforded them to pass on the merits of the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The rule requires, as I understand it, that no motion shall be in order to amend an appropriation bill unless that subject-matter has one day before been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to give them an opportunity to see the relation it has to the general bill. That is the object I suppose. Sometimes it appears that an appropriation has been omitted from the appropriation bill which is provided for by law; and in such a case, if notice is given to the Committee on Appropriations of the proposed amendment, we examine it, and if we find that the law authorizes that appropriation we make it in conformity with the proposition; but if we find, as in this case, that it provides for a new service, or for the continuance of an old service, whether that service is necessary or not, which question belongs to some particular committee, as in this case the Committee on Naval Affairs, we leave them to examine it, and we do not examine it because it belongs to them. And hence they present it, as the Senator from New Jersey from that committee has presented this case here today. The Committee on Appropriations felt that their duty was performed in this case when they had examined the proposed amendment in committee and found there was no law for it, or, in other words, found that the law justifying this appropriation had expired, and so we contented ourselves with leaving it in the hands of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CONNESS. I shall not vote for this amendment, because I do not think this office ought to be longer continued. It was created in March, 1865, just before the war had closed; when the number of ships in the Navy of the United States had reached nearly six hundred or thereabouts. There was some reason then perhaps for an office of this kind, and some reason for the continuance of the office while the surplus ships of the Navy were being sold, which work is now all done; but I cannot understand why the office is necessary now. I suppose, of course, the committee believe there is sufficient necessity for it, or else they would not have recommended it; but I have not heard reasons given sufficient for the maintenance of an attorney in that office longer. As for the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy or that head, I do not know whether I would give much for it or not. I do not know how far it would go with other Senators.

I suppose that the Secretary of the Navy has sufficient knowledge of law himself to do all the legal business of the Department that remains now to be done. I am replied to by a Senator behind me that "he has not any." I incline to that opinion myself, and I kept that in view when I said that he had a sufficient knowledge of law for all the legal purpose necessary to the Department. It seems that we are asked to continue this office for a year longer just because we have had it for three years. That is not a good reason. I think we can just as well dispense with this attorney as continue him at a salary. I am not sure that we could not dispense with the head of the Department. I think we could. I remember an occasion when President Lincoln lived, and I failed to be able to get the attention of the head of this Department to important business, I went to see the President on the subject. I seriously stated our case, and he replied to me that there was a real live man in that Department, and asked me if I knew Fox. I told him no, I did not, and it ended by his giving me a note to Fox. I never had any trouble in doing business at the Navy Department while Mr. Fox was there. He was better than all the nominal heads of Department in creation, and all the attorneys, such as they employ, thrown in. I incline to think that we can do without one attorney there.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the Senator from California says that he does not know what necessity there is for continuing this office. It is not to be expected that every Senator will know all the details of the business of the various committees; and I supposed the very object of having committees was that they might examine as to the necessity of these questions and supply that want of information which individual Senators necessarily are subjected to. I stated in the hearing of the Senator from California that the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House were unanimously in favor of a law to make the office permanent; that the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate were unanimous in recommending that this office be continued this year; that the Secretary of the Navy was of the same opinion, and thought it would be a saving of a good deal of money to the Government to have it continued rather than to employ counsel for particular cases; that the General of the Army, being somewhat conversant with the affairs of the Navy as well as of the Army, was of the same opinion. Secretary Stanton is of the same opinion. This amount of authority ought to have some influence in forming the judgment of the Senate; but if authority is not enough, I also stated that there were a thousand cases in a year coming up from naval courts of inquiry and courts-martial which were examined by this solicitor; that questions of prize were examined by him; that questions of claims and contracts passed under his examination; and that his time was consequently fully occupied and well occupied in the interest of the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire who made the examination into these contracts and claims before this office was created prior to the year 1865?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suppose the Senator is as well informed on that subject as I am. I do not suppose that prior to 1865 there was one contract made where there are twenty made now; and perhaps it may have been by comparing the expense of this office with the expense which the Department was put to prior to 1865 that the Secretary of the Navy is enabled to certify here that the expenses are lessened by having a salaried officer rather than employing counsel in given cases. I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I can reply

partly to the inquiry of the Senator from Oregon. It is within my knowledge that before the creation of this office it was the habit of the Navy Department to employ counsel and pay them fees. The Senate will see at once that that was hardly an economical proceeding; that the fees of counsel in individual cases, if there were many of them, would be much more than a reasonable salary. I think it was that uneconomical proceeding which finally led to the creation of this office. I believe the office since it has been created has been found to be useful, and I have understood that there is still a great deal of business at the Department for this officer, and which, if he is not continued there, must devolve upon some paid counsel.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will offer an amendment to carry out the purpose of the Senator from New Jersey, to insert at the close of the paragraph proposed to be amended, in lieu of his amendment, these words:

For Solicitor and Naval Judge Advocate General, $3,000: Provided, Said office shall expire with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869.

If we make appropriation for one year we continue the office by the practice of the Government, and next year it will be considered a permanent office. If the Senate think it can be dispensed with at the end of the year, let us say so. The continuation of the appropriation will continue the office.

Mr. DRAKE. I object to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I do not know why we should a year in advance of the period fixed in this amendment, and when there is to be an intervening session of Congress, undertake to determine that this office shall cease on the 30th day of June, 1869. I do not understand this seeming opposition to the appropriation for this office, an office, manifestly upon the statement made here, that conduces to a saving of the public money. Why there should be such an anxiety among Senators to abolish it and get rid of it I cannot comprehend. It seems to me to be a very good exemplification of the penny-wise and pound foolish policy. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will not be adopted, but that we shall leave that question to the next session to be determined.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will only add to what the Senator from Missouri has said, that I do not see any propriety in reducing the compensation of this officer when the Senator from Ohio has just been introducing a bill to increase the salaries of others.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know I reduced it. Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Three thousand five hundred dollars is the salary fixed by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not mean to decrease the amount, I meant to put the amount the same. I intended to take the Senator at his word; he said the office was only needed for a year longer.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This office was created by an act of 2d March, 1865, to continue during the rebellion and for one year thereafter, so that the office is only continued alive by the appropriation; and there is no necessity for putting in an affirmative provision that it shall not exist next year, because we may want it to exist next year the same as we do this year. It depends on what arrangement is made in reference to the Attorney General's department. I think, therefore, we had better leave it under the existing laws.

Mr. CONKLING. Allow me to say to the Senator from New Jersey that I think he will find that under the practice of the Government (if there is anything in the suggestion that making the appropriation without the restriction will make the office permanent) that result has occurred already. As I understand, two years at least since the office expired by law appropriations have been made without the proviso. Therefore if the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey would be to perpetuate the office that effect has already been produced by previous appropriations such as he proposes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from New York will allow me to inquire of him in that connection what will be the effect of appropriating $150,000 year by year for temporary clerks. Will that make them permanent, too?

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; and I do not suppose this appropriation makes this office permanent. I only suggested that if it were so, that the simple act of appropriating petrified the office, that effect would have been produced already, because for two years at least, according to my recollection, just such an appropriation has been made. I do not wish to be understood as saying that I think it would have that effect, or would have had the effect if it had been offered a year or two years ago.

Mr. COLE. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations perhaps I ought to act with the committee in this matter; but it is certainly my opinion that the solicitor of the Navy Department is a useful officer to the Government, and that his services have resulted in saving large sums to the Government. If he is a faithful officer there can be no question but that his advice to the Secretary of the Navy is useful in many cases; and I believe the present incumbent—a person, by the way, with whom I have no acquaintance, whom I only know by sight—is a faithful officer, and I cannot but regard his position as one of great utility and saving to the Government. I believe to continue the office will be an act of economy and not of waste.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have an amendment that I wish to propose.

Mr. CONNESS. I would like to know if the Senator will give way for a motion to adjourn? It is half past five.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My amendment will only take a minute.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Other committees have amendments.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If there shall be any debate about this I will give way to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to offer an amendment, to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator cannot wait until I get through with this I will yield. [Laughter.] On page 32 I move to amend the seven hundred and fifty-eighth line by striking out "three" and inserting "four," and the seven hundred and sixtieth line by striking out "two" and inserting "one." The effect is to transfer one clerk from class three to class four in the office of the Paymaster General. I have a letter here addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations requesting that that be done. There is a very considerable reduction of force in that office; it has been reduced two clerks in class three, two in class two, and four in class one, and four messengers, by the consent of the Paymaster General; but he requests that there may be one other clerk of class four. His reason is that one clerk in the office has charge of a room, and ought to be put upon the same level with others having the same duty to perform. I presume there is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The amount of the appropriation should now be changed. In line seven hundred and fifty-eight "$5,400" should be changed to "$7,200," and in line seven hundred and sixty "$3,200" should be changed to "$1,600." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move to correct the text of the bill in pursuance of the vote of the Senate the day before yesterday, by inserting in line three hundred and forty-seven, page 15, after the words "Secretary of State," the words, "Second Assistant Secretary of State, examiner of claims." I do this under direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I will say nothing about it, for the whole matter has been discussed fully.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That makes it conform to our vote of the other day.

Mr. SUMNER. Yes, sir.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. At the same time the chairman of the committee will take notice that there must be an amendment in line three hundred and fifty-one, as to the sum appropriated, by adding the salaries of those two officers. One is $3,000 and the other $3,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported now.

Mr. SUMNER. In line three hundred and fifty-one "$57,880" should read "$63,880." I move that amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Adding $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to offer an amendment from the Committee on Agriculture. On page 44, line ten hundred and sixty-seven, I move to strike out the word "five" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the clause read:

For grading, forming roads and walks, and improving the grounds, $12,000.

My amendment raises from $5,000 to $12,000 the appropriation for improving the grounds around the new Agricultural Department building. It is a new building, as the Senate is aware. This appropriation is for the preparation of the grounds, draining, paving, and making necessary improvements. It will only be required once, for the improvements will be permanent when made. It is necessary to have this sum at present.

I am willing to save money, and I propose to strike out "five," on page 43, line ten hundred and fifty-five. There is an appropriation there of $25,000 for seeds, and I think it is larger than necessary; I am perfectly willing to take $20,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment of the Senator, in line ten hundred and sixty-seven.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. Now I move to strike out "five," so as to reduce the appropriation for seeds, in line ten hundred and fifty-five, from $25,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. On page 54, after line thirteen hundred and ten, I move to insert:

And that the district attorney for Nevada shall receive a salary for extra services of $200 per annum; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to audit and pay out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated of salaries of the present incumbent and his predecessor, R. M. Clark, at the rate of $200 per annum for their services.

I am directed to offer this amendment by the Judiciary Committee. By an omission in the law the usual $200 salary is not allowed to the district attorney for Nevada.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think there is some mistake about this. My recollection is that this district attorney now gets all the compensation that other district attorneys get. There is a uniform compensation for all the district attorneys of the United States except in California.

Mr. STEWART. No; he does not get any salary whatever. I can state the precise situation of the case. In California, by a special law, the district attorney is allowed double fees and $500 salary. In Oregon the district attorney has double fees and the usual salary of $200, the same as the district attorneys get generally. In Nevada double fees are allowed, but the salary has been left off entirely, so that the district attorney gets no salary. I have a letter in my hand from the Secretary of the Treasury explaining that the law did not allow the usual salary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will ask the Senator whether it is not true that this officer gets double fees in lieu of salary?

Mr. STEWART. No, not in lieu.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does he not get double fees?

Mr. STEWART. Double fees? Yes, and double fees are allowed in Oregon and California. The double fees were allowed for a different reason altogether. The district attorney in California has not only double fees but $500 salary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Committee on Appropriations examined the matter and came to the conclusion that there was no occasion for an interposition in this case, because with the double fees that are authorized this officer, so far as we had any information on the subject, was quite as well compensated as the generality of this class of officers. I think it is true, as the Senator says, that in regard to California there is in addition to the double fees a salary—

Mr. STEWART. Not only that, but more than double the usual salary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That may be; but in this instance there is no evidence that the Legislature intended to give the double fees and the salary too. It will be seen that this proposition allows the retaining of double fees, and superadds to them a salary not prospective alone, but prospective and retroactive and going back how far?

Mr. STEWART. About three years.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It covers up all the life of the State and the life of the Territory together, I believe.

Mr. STEWART. No; it simply applies to the present district attorney and his predecessor.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is for the Senate to say. The committee hardly thought an equitable case was made out.

Mr. STEWART. I will state that this is a very poor office, and we have had a great deal of trouble to get anybody to take it and hold it. It has been vacant half the time. There are some important duties for which it is necessary to have an officer there.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This amendment was examined by the Committee on the Judiciary and the facts ascertained.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to submit an amendment to this bill, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to amend the bill as follows:

In lines nine hundred and eighty-nine, nine hundred and ninety, nine hundred and ninety-one, and nine hundred and ninety-two, strike out "eleven clerks of class four, $19,800; forty-nine clerks of class three, $78,400;" and insert "fourteen clerks of class four, $25,200; forty-six clerks of class three, $73,600."

In lines nine hundred and ninety-three, nine hundred and ninety-four, and nine hundred and ninety-five, strike out "twenty-three clerks of class one, $26,600; fifty female clerks at $900 each, $45,000;" and insert "fifty-five clerks of class one, $36,000; sixty-one female clerks at $900 each, $54,900."

Strike out the following clause, contained in lines one thousand and two, one thousand and three, and one thousand and four, namely: "For twenty-five clerks in dead-letter office, under act of January 21, 1862, $20,000."

This amendment relates to the classification of the clerks in the Post Office Department. It transfers three clerks from class three to class four; it increases the expense of clerk hire in the Post Office Department about six hundred dollars. I have a communication from the Second Assistant Postmaster General on this subject, which I will read:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, CONTRACT OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, June 22, 1868.

SIR: The following table shows the number of clerks of the fourth and lower classes now employed in the Post Office Department, and the number provided for by the amendments to the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, submitted with my note of the 20th instant:

Classes.	Paid out of the regular appropriation.	Paid out of appropriations for temporary clerks.	Total number now employed.	Number provided for by proposed amendments.
Fourth.....	11	-	11	14
Third.....	49	-	49	46
Second.....	45	-	45	45
First.....	23	32	55	55
Female.....	50	11	61	61
Temporary.....	-	14	14	-
			235	221

The amendments provide for the same number of clerks now employed, transferring to the fourth class three third-class clerks who are heads of divisions, and leaving fourteen temporary clerks dependent upon such appropriation as may be made "for temporary clerks."

Very respectfully, &c.,

GEORGE W. McLELLAN,

Second Assistant Postmaster General.

HON. ALEXANDER RAMSEY, Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, Senate United States.

The business of the Post Office Department is divided into fourteen divisions. There are eleven clerks of the fourth class presiding over eleven of those divisions. The Department wish three clerks of class three promoted to class four, so as to have fourteen clerks of class four to preside over the fourteen divisions. This arrangement only increases the expense $600.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There are twenty-five clerks in the dead-letter office discharging certain duties who are regarded as temporary clerks, but who are now to be incorporated into the system by these provisions. I only wish the Senate to understand it; I make no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 25, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. JAMES BALLOCH, of Baltimore.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

NEW YORK POST OFFICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the supervising architect of the Treasury Department, in reply to report of architects of the post office at New York; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. Before demanding the regular order of business, I am appealed to by half a dozen gentlemen to allow some matters to be disposed of which will not require division or discussion. I will yield for that purpose.

ISSUE OF ARMS TO THE MILITIA.

Mr. PAINE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to provide for the issue of arms for the use of the militia, that it may be referred to the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Let us hear the bill read first.

Mr. PAINE. As I do not desire to detain the House, I will withdraw the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table sundry bills and joint resolutions from the Senate that they may be referred to the Committee on Commerce, with the understanding that they shall not be brought back by motions to reconsider.

There was no objection.

HARBORS IN CALIFORNIA.

Accordingly a joint resolution (S. R. No. 46) in relation to certain harbors on the coast of California was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COASTING TRADE.

A bill (S. No. 266) to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EZRA CARTER, JR.

A bill (S. No. 353) to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of Ezra Carter, jr., late collector of customs at Portland, Maine, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REFUNDING OF DUTIES.

A bill (S. No. 448) to refund duties erroneously exacted in certain cases was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

D. H. M'DONALD.

A bill (S. No. 361) for the relief of D. H. McDonald, late acting United States consul at Cape Town, Cape of Good Hope, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CAMBRIDGE, MARYLAND, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

A bill (S. No. 533) to establish Cambridge, in the State of Maryland, a port of delivery, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COLLECTION DISTRICT IN OREGON.

An act (S. No. 153) to establish a collection district in the State of Oregon was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FRAUDS ON THE REVENUE.

A bill (S. No. 442) to amend section one of an act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1863, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THOMAS W. WARD.

A bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs, district of Corpus Christi, Texas, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BRIG HIGHLAND MARY.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 113) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the British-built brig Highland Mary was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BARK AUG. GUARDIEN.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 36) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Aug. Gardien was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire that that joint resolution shall be put on its passage. It has been examined by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate and found to be correct.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Aug. Gardien, of the port of New York, the same being a French-built vessel, but now owned by American citizens.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will let the joint resolution be passed provided I may make a motion to reconsider so that the Committee on Commerce may look into the matter.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I object to the passage of the bill. You refused to have a similar bill passed for the benefit of my constituents.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REGISTERING OF VESSELS.

A bill (S. No. 505) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOSPITAL MARINE SURGEONS.

Senate bill No. 204, to provide for the appointment of the supervising surgeons of the marine hospitals of the United States, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the various votes by which bills were referred to the Committee on Commerce; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IMPRISONED ABROAD.

Mr. VAN WYCK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this House whether any American citizen have been arrested, tried, convicted, or imprisoned in Great Britain for words spoken and acts done in this country; whether any American citizens have been by Great Britain denied their rights as such, or otherwise treated as English subjects; whether American citizens have been denied the privilege of mixed juries; whether American citizens thus treated are now confined in English prisons; and what he has done to secure the release of any such persons, and why they have not been released.

COIN CONTRACTS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask consent that Senate bill No. 180, relating to contracts payable in coin, may be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. COBB. I object.

W. SHERWOOD AND D. W. MARTINDALE.

Mr. JOHNSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1311) for the relief of Walter Sherwood and David W. Martindale; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ADDITIONAL ADJUTANTS GENERAL.

Mr. JOHNSON, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1312) to add to the service three adjutants general; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INDIAN POLICY, ETC.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of John B. Wolf, in behalf of white settlers in Colorado and Dakota Territories, praying for the abolition of military posts and other reforms in the Indian policy of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ETHAN A. SAWYER.

Mr. STOKES, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 309) for the relief of Ethan A. Sawyer, of Jefferson county, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MOORE asked and obtained leave of absence for four days.

J. Q. A. KECK.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the Senate amendment to the bill of the House No. 286, granting a pension to John Q. A.

Keck, late a private in the third Missouri cavalry.

No objection was made.

The amendment of the Senate was to insert after the words "pension-roll" the words "and to pay him a pension of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN MURPHY.

Mr. HAIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to present the petition of John Murphy, for leave to apply for extension of letters-patent, for reference to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. COBB. I object.

The SPEAKER. The petition can be handed to the Journal clerk and referred under the rule.

MRS. SARAH HACKLEMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be no objection at all to the consideration at this time of a bill referred to last Friday week, when the subject of pensions was being considered. It is well known that there are seven widows of brigadier generals who fell in battle; six of them have been pensioned at the rate of fifty dollars per month. Mrs. Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman, who fell on the field of battle at Corinth, has not been so pensioned. I ask that she may be placed on the same footing with the widows of other brigadier generals who fell in actual battle. Mrs. Hackleman lives in my district; she is the mother of three daughters, one of whom is an invalid, and this pension is necessary for their support. I state facts that will be attested by every gentleman from Indiana on this floor. I hope there will be no objection to this bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have no objection to the introduction and reference of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read at length. The first section directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman, for a pension at the rate of fifty dollars a month, from the 3d day of October, 1862, on which day General Hackleman fell mortally wounded at the battle of Corinth. The second section discontinues the pension heretofore allowed to Sarah Hackleman under the general law, and provides that the sum already received by her shall be deducted from the pension hereby granted, which shall be subject to the provisions of the general pension laws.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the bill will be considered as before the House.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN AERNAM] will withdraw the objection. The facts of this case are well known to every member from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN AERNAM] insist on his objection?

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I do. I desire that the bill may be referred.

Mr. BLAINE. Let it be referred, then, with leave to the committee to report at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will be satisfactory if the bill cannot be passed now.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 1313) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman, was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with leave to report at any time.

SCHOOL SITE, BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 469) entitled "An act confirming the title to a tract of land in Burlington, Iowa," be taken from the Speaker's table for consideration at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information.

The bill, which was read, provides that all of the title of the United States in and to a certain tract of land in the city of Burlington, Des Moines county, in the State of Iowa, described as being west of lot No. 978 in said city, south of Valley street, west of Boundary street, and north of Market street, and which was originally reserved from sale by the United States and dedicated to public burial purposes, be confirmed to and vested in the Independent School District of said city, to be forever dedicated to and used by that school district for public school purposes, and for no other use or purpose whatever.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. All that this bill proposes is to authorize the use of this tract of land for a high school.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not see why we should provide for a high school at Burlington any more than at any other place.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will explain the matter in a few words.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let the bill be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will ask, then, that the committee have leave to report the bill at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Committee on Private Land Claims will probably be called soon after the tax bill has been disposed of.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My reason for desiring that the committee be authorized to report at any time is that until this bill shall be passed the erection of the high school building will be suspended.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Private Land Claims will be called very soon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Very well.

The bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

REFERENCE OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. UPSON. I move to reconsider the various votes by which bills, &c., have been referred this morning; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. RAUM. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 347) entitled "An act to amend an act to divide the State of Illinois into two judicial districts," approved February 13, 1855, be taken from the Speaker's table, that we may concur in the amendments of the Senate; which will occupy but a moment.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read for information, after which objection can be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

First amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That in addition to the terms of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, now required by law to be held at the city of Springfield, terms of said court shall hereafter be held at the city of Cairo, in said State, commencing on the first Mondays of March and October in each year.

Second amendment:

Amend the bill so as to read as follows:

An act for holding terms of the district courts of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, at the city of Cairo in said State.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would like my colleague [Mr. RAUM] to explain, if he can, the necessity for this additional expense of holding courts at Cairo.

Mr. RAUM. I can do so very readily. This bill, after a reference to the committee in this House, was passed here, and being sent to the Senate was referred to the Judiciary Committee there, on whose recommendation it appears these amendments were adopted. The bill simply provides for two additional terms of the district court to be held at Cairo. My colleague well knows there is a large commerce at Cairo. Five or six thousand steamboats land there every year, and a large amount of litigation necessarily results, most of which must go through the United States courts; and holding the United States courts at Cairo to be a convenience for the people of that section.

Mr. CULLOM. The district judge in the southern district of Illinois states in a letter that this is necessary.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Judge Treat is the party most interested, and his opinion has great weight with me.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. RAUM moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KERR was granted leave of absence for four days, and Mr. MUNGEN for one day.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to make an explanation in regard to the condition of the tax bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to notify the House we have now reached in committee page 61 and section fifty of the internal tax bill, that is within three or four of one half the number of sections and one half of the pages of the bill. It may be considered we are more than half through the bill, because we have disposed of the question of whisky in a great degree, so far as the tax upon it is concerned, and that is known to give rise to more debate in this House than anything else. I merely desire on public grounds, which every one will understand, this bill should be finished in the present week. I hope we will finish it to-morrow. We can hardly get through with it to-night. I desire to give notice, in order to finish it Friday or Saturday. I propose to press it with all the vigor I can; and in this connection to say one of the great obstacles in the progress of the bill is the want of a quorum in Committee of the Whole, and especially is that the case in the evening. Last night we were without a quorum and had to have a call of the House. It was so the night before, and the same thing may occur to-night. If so, I suppose it will be my duty to drive the call of the House through. I hope there will be no objection to that.

I appeal now earnestly and most respectfully to all the gentlemen round the Hall to come up and help us to keep a quorum. Especially do I make that appeal to the gentlemen on this side of the House. There has been no factions opposition whatever to the bill, nothing but fair treatment so far as the Democratic side of the House is concerned. It is true they have sustained amendments not in accordance with the views of the committee, but after they have been offered and voted on there has been no disposition manifested to defeat the bill. I do not know there is any intention on the part of any one of that kind; and in reference to attendance, I may especially say to our friends on this side it is not only proper for them to come here considering what may be their sense of duty, but it is only fair to us who are in regular attendance. My friend from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] who is looking so serious, is always here. I think it their duty to the "workers" to attend. My condition last night was such that I ought to have been at home, and I am little better this morning. I was surprised last night to find mine was not a single case. It would seem an epidemic prevailed from the number of members who were reported to be detained from the House last evening by illness. I hope with this favorable weather there will be a better sanitary condition.

Mr. PRICE. I suggest we meet at eleven o'clock in the morning.

Mr. BOUTWELLE. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that all debate on the pending section be closed in ten minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

The House, under the order heretofore made, resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. PRICE, to add at the end of section fifty the following:

Provided, No distilled spirits shall be removed from the place of distillation until the tax provided for in this act shall have been paid, anything contained in this and in any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. PRICE. I will modify the amendment by striking out the words "place of distillation," and inserting "distillery warehouse;" so that it will read "No distilled spirits shall be removed from the distillery warehouse."

Mr. SCHENCK. That is an amendment in the first degree. I now—

The CHAIRMAN. The House was dividing and tellers were about to be ordered for lack of a quorum. Nothing is in order until that is settled.

Mr. SCHENCK. There was no decision declared.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been a vote by voice and by raising. Nothing can arrest the decision of the House. The Chair appoints as tellers Messrs. PRICE, and HOOPER of Massachusetts.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move to amend the section as amended by striking out all after the word "country," in the sixteenth line. I had supposed, as a matter of course, that no decision had been made last evening at the adjournment and that the committee would go on this morning with an opportunity for some explanation of the amendment. I take this opportunity, however, to make the amendment which I have offered, which by including two or three words at the end of the section as it stood will strike out the amendment which has just been agreed to.

Now, I desire to say to the committee, with no feeling on this subject in behalf of the bill or the system which it proposes, that by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] and which is now renewed conversely by myself, the whole question is brought up whether we shall abandon and crush out the export trade altogether or in any degree and under any regulation retain it. It has already been agreed in Committee of the Whole that so far as the removal of spirits from the distillery warehouse for the purpose of consumption in the United States is concerned, it must always be taxed, then and there, so that there is nothing whatever to prevent that. Then comes the question, shall it be removed for any other purpose whatever without the prepayment of the tax? The bill provides that it may go directly to an export warehouse to be sent immediately on board of a vessel to go abroad. The bill provides that it may be used in the manufacture of certain compounds, of which alcohol is the principal component part, for the purpose of actual transportation. The bill also provides that being redistilled into alcohol to meet the growing demand abroad it may be exported. Making these exceptions, and providing as we have fully and sufficiently against abuse in carrying out these objects, the bill requires prepayment of the tax upon all spirits used in the country taken from the distillery warehouse for consumption in the United States. That saves the export trade.

Now, the position taken by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] and those who agree with him puts an end to all export trade whatever. The committee decided last night not to convert the export trade into a system by which, instead of going without prepayment of tax, these articles might be sent abroad and a drawback allowed. That question being settled, the gentleman now proposes to put an end to the export trade, requiring the repayment of tax and not allowing any drawback. All I have to say is that every one conversant with the subject knows perfectly well that I put it as a proposition really before the committee when I say it is a proposition to crush out and put an end to the exportation of alcoholic spirits entirely from this country. What we carry abroad, as has been explained before and as is now provided for by amendment to this bill, is only alcohol and rum. Alcoholic spirits in those two forms does go abroad, to an amount of nearly five million dollars a year, to Hamburg, Smyrna, and some other ports of the Mediterranean, and the trade is increasing.

Mr. LOGAN. You mean gallons; it is more than that in dollars.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is more than that in dollars. The statistics of the last two years show it to be very considerably and rapidly increasing, although it had not been very material up to 1867, when it first came up to about three million dollars. Now, believing as I do, that we can, and that the bill provides for enabling us to do so, carry out a system of export trade without at the same time endangering the collection of the tax justly due upon that which is consumed in the country, the bill was so framed, and it is for the House to determine which side they will take on this subject; which horn of the dilemma; to give up exports entirely, because they believe that there can be no sort of protection, no security given by law, which I utterly disbelieve, or else allow the bill to stand as it is.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, the House will remember that last night we proposed to guard this drawback principle, so that no drawback should be allowed unless the parties could prove that the liquor had paid the tax at the port whence it was shipped, and also that it had been delivered and received at the place that it was consigned to, so as, if possible, to avoid frauds in the matter. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means opposed that measure, and it was defeated; so that as the question stands before the committee to-day we can only export, without the payment of the tax, all liquors that the manufacturers say are for exportation, and we must take their word for it. It is no secret to this House, and it is no secret to the country, that ever since this tax was levied upon distilled spirits we have been cheated from the beginning to the end. At the last session of Congress, when the Committee of Ways and Means came in with their system of locks and bars and bolts, they told us confidently—and I have no doubt they believed it—that they had adopted a system by which the distillers could not cheat the Government out of its revenue; but you see that they have cheated it out of four fifths of all that was due us. And now, in my judgment, and in the judgment of two thirds of the House, as the vote this morning demonstrates, the only way left is to close up all the side doors and to compel the manufacturer of distilled spirits to pay the tax on it before it leaves the place of distillation.

Now, suppose for the sake of the argument that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means makes, that it does kill the export traffic. I need not say to gentlemen of this House or to the country, who have watched the progress of this matter, that where we make one dollar by the export trade in alcohol we lose, by being defrauded of the tax on distilled spirits, more than ten dollars; or, as a friend near me suggests, more than $100. So that even if we should kill the export trade we will have saved nine dollars if not ninety-nine dollars where we lose one. That is the plainest proposition in the world, and I am only surprised that a gentleman of the sagacity and research of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means should advocate for a moment any system by which the distillers should be allowed to defraud the Government out of the tax due the Government. They have been doing it for years; they are doing it to-day while we are talking about it, and they will continue to do it so long as there is any loop-hole left out of which they can make their escape. I yield now to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.]

Mr. PAINE. With the permission of the gentleman from Iowa I desire to say a word to the committee, not for the purpose of arguing upon this amendment, upon which I have already said all I desire to say, but for the purpose of addressing a word or two more particularly to those who entertain the same opinion as the gentleman from Iowa entertains and as I entertain respecting this amendment. I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa ought to pass, and I exceedingly desire that it shall pass. I desire that it should stand; I believe it ought to stand. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.] But I wish the Committee of the Whole to understand this: we must now finally decide it. It is for the interest of every single gentleman on this floor to have this question finally decided now. If the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is allowed to stand, then there must needs be a very extensive modification of subsequent portions of this bill. If the House, after having made these numerous and material modifications of the bill, shall finally, when the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is presented to the House and the yeas and nays are called, as they will be called, if the House shall then vote down that amendment it will involve the consideration of a large number of amendments to the bill, leading, in my opinion, to a serious complication of action on this bill. It is, therefore, very important to us that this question should be decided now; it is of the utmost importance. I would very much rather encounter an adverse decision than postpone the question.

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order on this section. By the order of the House all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto was to terminate in ten minutes after its consideration was resumed, and the ten minutes have expired. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

The amendment was to strike out the following words:

As hereinafter provided. But no distilled spirits shall be removed from the distillery warehouse until the tax provided by this act shall have been paid, anything contained in any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I rise to a point of order; that this amendment is not in order, because it proposes to strike out what the Committee of the Whole have inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order on two grounds; in the first place the point of order is made too late; and in the second place the amendment is in order, because it includes not only what has been inserted, but a portion of the original section.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK, and it was not agreed to; there being upon a division—ayes 24, noes 77.

Mr. ALLISON. I would inquire of the Chair if the words "alcohol and rum" have been substituted for the words "distilled spirits," in the first part of this section?

The CHAIRMAN. They have not.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to amend the section in that way.

Mr. JUDD. I object, unless some reason is given for it.

The amendment of Mr. ALLISON was then agreed to.

Mr. RAUM. I now move to amend this section by striking out all after the first word "that," down to and including the word "but" in the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] so that the section will then read:

And be it further enacted, That no distilled spirits shall be removed from the distillery warehouse until the tax provided by this act shall have been paid, anything contained in any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment of Mr. RAUM was not agreed to; there being, upon a division—ayes three, noes not counted.

No further amendment was offered to section fifty.

Section fifty-one was then read, as follows:

SEC. 51. And be it further enacted, That the warehouses established and designated in accordance with the preceding section shall be under the direction and control of the collector of internal revenue at the port where such warehouse is located, who may have charge of all matters relating to the exportation of articles subject to tax under the laws to provide internal revenue, and such warehouses shall be in charge of an internal revenue storekeeper assigned thereto by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the collector so designated is hereby charged with the duties connected with the entry for warehousing, bonding, and custody of all distilled spirits of domestic production transported to such port of entry from any other district, and connected with the exportation of all distilled spirits of domestic production from such port of entry; and such warehousing and custody thereof shall be subject to all the provisions of law and to all the regulations hereinafter provided, and such further regulations, not inconsistent therewith, as may be established by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out this section for the reason that it has now become useless. The adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] by which the Committee of the Whole has determined that all the taxes on whisky shall be collected at the distillery warehouse, has rendered unnecessary all the provisions of this bill in relation to the export trade. That amendment was adopted upon the express ground that the export trade should be killed.

Mr. PRICE. I did not say that the export trade should be killed; but that if my amendment did kill it, let it go.

Mr. BUTLER. Exactly; if it did kill it, let it go; I am willing to admit the correction. That is to say, that at all hazards there shall be no regard shown to the export trade of this country, either in regard to this matter or any other. We of the Atlantic coast have stood here and seen you strike down our shipping by a vote of 85 to 45. You have now adopted an amendment which strikes down one of the very largest items of the export trade.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What does the gentleman mean when he says "You strike down our shipping trade?" One of his own colleagues voted against that bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I mean whoever voted against it; and I observed that most of the votes on that division came from the West. Be it so. I can only say that the head can live as long as the legs and body under any legislation that you choose to put upon it. But I do not see why we should stay here hour after hour and day after day to perfect a section which every man in this House having any intelligence upon this subject knows can be of no earthly use, for under the provisions already adopted there can be no more export of spirits. The question you have determined is not how many gallons of spirits can be exported; that may not be so important, but it is important to consider how much that export trade brings back, how much it tends toward settling your balance of trade with Europe and abroad, how it affects your commerce and the revenue from your external trade. You get one hundred and fifty to one hundred and eighty million dollars in gold every year from your external trade or export; and you propose to strike a large portion of that down under an insane hope of getting something out of whisky. You propose to strike down that which is certain for that which is uncertain in the most uncertain future, depending upon the honesty of the officers appointed by Andrew Johnson; and if there is on earth anything more uncertain than that, I should like to know what it is. That is the only hope you have, for which you propose to kill your foreign trade. That is what you are doing, and I want it fully and distinctly understood by the House.

Great Britain gives a bounty on her foreign export trade in spirits; and she has had some reputation for commercial and national sagacity in legislation; and we here, when we have been able to collect an external and internal revenue from whisky of only $13,000,000, strike down to-day by a single vote an export trade which during the last year brought you mediately and immediately more than half that amount, as can be demonstrated by statistics. The question is whether you are not throwing away the substance while you grasp at the shadow; whether you are not killing the goose that laid the golden egg, in some insane hope of finding a mass of gold in her crop. It seems to me there is just about that much wisdom in this proceeding by which you kill your export trade.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not rise to oppose particularly the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I think that if the amendment just adopted by the committee, in relation to the payment of the tax, is to stand, this section may as well be struck out. Now, there are several subsequent sections, all of which are affected by the proposition made by my colleague, [Mr. PRICE,] which has been adopted by the committee. If that amendment should be agreed to by the House these subsequent sections will be of no utility; but if the proposition should be voted down so as to allow export at all, then these subsequent sections should be retained. Now, what I propose is, that these several sections be now stricken from the bill pro forma; and when we consider the bill in the House this can be reinserted if the amendment of my colleague be retained. I yield to my colleague, [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to understand from my colleague [Mr. ALLISON] whether the committee is opposed to incorporating in this bill any system of drawbacks, and if not, whether it would not be wiser for the committee to propose some system of drawbacks than to ask the House now to strike out all these provisions?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what the committee may propose. For myself I look upon this system of drawbacks as opening a wider door to fraud than anything else contained in this bill. I am, therefore, opposed to any system of drawbacks. Now, we have only the alternative of striking out these sections or allowing them to remain. The Committee of the Whole decided against drawbacks, and has now decided against any exportation at all. I am not finding fault with that decision; I only want a vote of the House on these propositions.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that we informally pass over all these sections with the condition that they may be amended or struck out in the House, in conformity to the action which may finally be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SCHENCK. I cannot consent to the proposition of my colleague, which will keep these sections open for discussion and amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman objects there is no use of stating the reasons, because unanimous consent is necessary.

Mr. SCHENCK. If we have these sections open to amendment and discussion in the House we shall have this whole scene over again.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless by unanimous consent, the bill must be proceeded with, section by section.

Mr. JUDD. I move to insert "bonded" in the first line preceding the word "warehouse;" and I do that, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of referring a little to the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who alluded to the position this question has assumed before the House. He seems to say and charge it upon the West that we desire to destroy this business of exportation. On that point he is entirely mistaken. We only desire it regulated in such manner that it shall not be the means of defrauding the Government out of its revenue. And when he tells us this proposition will substantially take $180,000,000 out of the Treasury of revenue derived from exports, he exaggerates entirely the importance of the question of distilled spirits in the economy of exportation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say that it is for those who favor the exportation of alcohol to devise a method, after the internal tax has been paid, where the property has been really used in business or for the purposes of exportation, so they can get their money back. Last night those of us who desired to carry out the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] tried to get over the point of the destruction of that business by introducing a system of drawbacks, and nearly all the gentlemen in favor of this system of exportation fought it, and it was defeated by their votes. If, then, the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa operates harshly in regard to this thing, it is the fault of the gentlemen who last night refused to accept any amendment which entitled them to receive back any portion of the tax after the distilled spirits have actually been exported.

My object is to meet this question fairly. There is no necessity for these sections of the bill if the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is adopted. From what I have seen they are only a portion of the machinery. I would trust the question of machinery to the chairman, as to have discussion in the House after the principle has been established.

Now, sir, if gentlemen who believe with us and are in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, desire in good faith to export distilled spirits, let them prepare such a system as will return the tax after the article is exported in good faith, and I will vote for it. We tried to do it last night, but it was not satisfactory. If they will do it I will vote for it. We of the West are not for striking down any portion of the industrial interests of this country. We have as large a stake in this country as the gentleman from Massachusetts, and we are for giving free scope and encouragement to the business and commerce of the country. When he insinuates we struck it down—

Mr. BUTLER. I did not insinuate it—I said it.

Mr. JUDD. When he says we struck down the export trade, he presents us in an attitude before the House and country I, for one, will not submit to it if I can help it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt the speech of my friend from Illinois was made in all seriousness, but it is about as funny a thing as I have ever listened to. Here are two systems. I was disposed to stand up in favor of the system of transportation and exportation, sufficiently guarded, as I think, but on the other side it was thought safer and better that distilled spirits, in every form and for every purpose, must have the tax prepaid at the distillery. The gentleman says they have prevailed over us, and now they want us to fix up the machinery for them. Now, a system of drawbacks was offered last night. I think about drawbacks as these gentlemen do about transportation in bond. Having carried their point, that distilled spirits intended for exportation must have the tax prepaid, it seems to me they should go further and renew their proposition of drawbacks, or in some way operate the bill on their plan. Therefore it is an amusing proposition, really, as presented by the gentleman from Illinois, that it becomes our bounden duty to furnish the machinery for their plan.

I desire now to say that I was perhaps not clearly understood when up before, when I objected to the proposition made by my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD.] He proposed that these sections, four or five of which are of no use now upon the decision made by the committee, should be kept open for amendment. That I objected to. I was about to suggest that if the committee will adopt that proposition the Committee of Ways and Means have no amendment to offer. But I prefer the proposition made by my colleague on the committee for saving time, that by unanimous consent we withdraw these sections or pass them over with the understanding—of which, however, I have not much hope from what I have seen—that if the plan proposed by the gentleman from Iowa and others, to be established by his amendment, prevails, then these sections shall be stricken out; but if it does not prevail, then these sections may be voted on as they stand in the bill. It will save a great deal of time.

Mr. JUDD. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows of no way in which the object can be reached except by considering the sections as stricken out.

Mr. LOGAN. I renew the amendment of my colleague. I desire to say a word on this question. It probably will be the last time I shall trouble the committee with any discussion of this point. I offered an amendment last night which was voted down. I had no opportunity to reply to the chairman of the committee or to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I take this occasion to say now that in my judgment fair treatment of all propositions is the best policy if we desire to come to a rational understanding. It will not do to undertake to change gentlemen's opinions in reference to collecting the tax on whisky at the distillery by shaking a quart cup at them. Nor will it do for the gentleman from Massachusetts to undertake to change gentlemen's opinions about the propriety of arranging a drawback by offering an amendment saying it shall not amount to more than all the revenues of the Government. That may be a very good way of discussing a question, but it has very little argument in it.

Now, I propose to answer the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] last night, while fighting my proposition. It was so remarkable and so perfectly absurd that I take this occasion to answer it. My proposition was that the drawback system should only be allowed on the number of gallons exported, and that they should only have a return of fifty cents after evidence taken at the port of exportation and of arrival, and submitted to the entire satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The gentleman said that was opening a wider door for fraud than by any other system. Now let us see. Our exportation of rum and alcohol amounts to from three to five million gallons. Now, will any man say to a sensible body of people that there is a greater door open to fraud where there are only four or five million gallons exported than there is where you provide for the transportation of all distilled spirits from Maine to California, amounting to a hundred million gallons? I ask gentlemen to reflect a moment and tell me if there is likely to be more fraud in the exportation of five million gallons than in the transportation of one hundred million?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will allow me, I will admit there is more chance for fraud in reference to one hundred million gallons than in reference to five million; but I believe if this drawback system is adopted your exportation would amount to from twenty to fifty million gallons within a year or two.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; then to satisfy the gentleman we will limit it. There was never yet exported more than five million gallons from the country, but we can limit it and provide some way by which the door shall be closed. But do not let gentlemen, because they have wedded themselves to a particular section of a bill, because it is their own child and is like themselves in feature, perhaps, when anybody else offers a proposition here, undertake to laugh it down. Now, sir, I say that if gentlemen strike these provisions out of the bill, and are not willing to provide any other means, I will introduce a proposition that will provide means for the saving of the export trade. I will introduce the same proposition that I did before, and the committee may guard it as well as they have a mind to. You may reduce your export to $5,000,000, as the gentleman suggests, and then if you have to pay drawback on every gallon when there shall not be one exported you will make $30,000,000 by it rather than to have transportation all over this country.

Mr. LOGAN. Will gentlemen of the committee allow me to give them the quantity of exports in 1866? From grain, five hundred and three thousand one hundred and ninety-six gallons; from molasses, one million nine hundred and ninety-three thousand three hundred and thirty-four gallons. A little over two million gallons were exported from this country in 1866.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am opposed to the amendment. It seems to me that the argument presented here by the Committee of Ways and Means and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] that if drawback is allowed it will open the door for immense frauds, is a confession of weakness. It certainly is a confession that the machinery presented by this bill for the collection of the tax upon whisky is very imperfect. If it is so imperfect that you are not sure that you will collect the tax on whisky I ask gentlemen what sort of assurance we may have, if you allow exportation without payment of tax, that whisky will not go upon the market through the same leaks and imperfections. It may be, if gentlemen cannot prepare a bill that makes the machinery perfect enough to insure the collection of this tax, that they have not ingenuity enough to provide for the payment of drawback, and to secure the Government against frauds. But it seems to me that it would not tax the ingenuity of a man much to do it, and I believe the gentleman from Ohio can provide a section which shall insure the Government, by requiring proof that the whisky which it is sought to export has paid a tax before the money is refunded. If a man manufactures whisky at the distillery for the purpose of exporting it he pays the tax there, and it is easy to trace that whisky to the seaport and to the foreign port, and to prove its identity.

Mr. ALLISON. That is just what we do in this bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Very well; that is all we ask. Let the tax be paid at the distillery, and if your machinery is so perfect that you can trace that identical whisky, where is the chance to commit frauds on the Government by drawback?

Mr. HARDING. Suppose it is transported in bond to the rectifying establishment where it is made into alcohol, how can the gentleman say how many other barrels of illicitly distilled whisky are mingled with it in the production of alcohol, which alcohol goes out without any new imposition of tax? If you will make alcohol by continuous distillation at the distillery, and brand it there as tax-paid, you can identify it at the port of exportation as easily as you could a horse, and you cannot do it in any other way.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I was arguing on the supposition that this bill provides sufficient machinery to secure the collection of the tax at the distillery warehouse. If the bill is not sufficient for that purpose, it is good for nothing. If it is sufficient for that purpose, then it is sufficient to guard the Government against frauds by drawback. You certainly can trace the article anywhere and everywhere after it has paid the tax. If the machinery of this bill is not sufficient, if it is so imperfect that it does not insure the collection of the tax on whisky, then the Government is equally as liable to be defrauded as if you allowed exportation without the payment of the tax. So if you take either horn of the dilemma we are equally at sea, and equally liable to be defrauded. Now, I suppose the Committee of Ways and Means, by proposing a reduction of the tax to fifty cents per gallon, and by the contrivances proposed by them and by this Committee of the Whole to secure the collection of this tax, have acted upon the presumption that the Government will be able to secure the whole or nearly the whole of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask that, in order to save time, sections fifty-one, fifty-two, fifty-three, and fifty-five be stricken out.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend that motion by inserting what I send to the Clerk's desk in place of the sections proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Strictly speaking only section fifty-one is now under consideration. The gentleman can move what he proposes as a substitute for that section, and the question upon striking out the other sections can be determined when those sections shall have been reached.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well; then I offer what I have sent to the Clerk's desk as a substitute for section fifty-one.

The substitute was read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That a drawback shall be allowed upon alcohol and rum exported to foreign countries, on which taxes have been paid under the provisions of this act, of which proof shall be furnished by the person exporting the same, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe. Before any drawback shall be paid the exporter claiming drawback shall furnish satisfactory proof that the articles exported have been landed in a foreign country and sold, or consigned for sale in such country; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to secure the Treasury of the United States against fraud. The drawback allowed shall include all the taxes levied and paid upon the alcohol and rum exported, not, however, exceeding sixty cents per gallon of proof-spirits.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will add to my substitute the following from a proposition read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] the other day:

Provided, however, That no claim for drawback shall be allowed on either of the said articles which shall have been exported as aforesaid prior to the time at which this act shall take effect.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall fraudulently claim or seek to obtain an allowance of drawback on any article or articles aforesaid, on which an internal tax shall have been paid, or shall fraudulently claim any greater allowance or drawback than the tax actually paid thereon as aforesaid, such person or persons shall forfeit and pay to the Government of the United States triple the amount wrongfully or fraudulently sought to be obtained; and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period not less than one year nor more than ten years.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Upon the suggestion of members of the Committee of Ways and Means, I will modify my amendment so that the rules and regulations in regard to this drawback shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and not by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; perhaps that would be better. Now, I wish to say a few words to the Committee of the Whole in reference to this proposition. As is very well known, I am in favor of a system of transportation in bonds. I proposed a plan of my own which did not meet the approbation of the Committee of the Whole. I next sustained, as well as I was able, the proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means for a system of transportation in bond. But the judgment of the Committee of the Whole seems to be that there shall be no such transportation in bond, but that the taxes upon all distilled spirits shall be paid before the article is removed from the distillery warehouses. I am unwilling that the export trade in distilled spirits shall be broken up; not because the trade itself is of such importance to the country as because of the fact that it is connected with a large trade in domestic products, cotton goods of various kinds, as a leading article of export to the coast of Africa, to South America, to the Indian ocean, and to other parts of the world. The abolition of this trade is not limited to the five millions of export commerce in whisky and alcohol and rum; but it is quadrupled, perhaps multiplied tenfold, or soon will be, in connection with other trade which cannot be successfully carried on, if this be abolished.

Although I think the drawback system the least desirable of the three propositions which have been presented to the committee, I still cannot consent, after ascertaining the judgment of the committee, that this branch of trade shall be abolished without making one more effort for its continuance under a drawback system pretty carefully guarded, as I believe it is, in the amendment I have submitted.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment. The drawback of sixty cents now proposed is certainly too high, if any drawback at all should be allowed, which I very much doubt. In my judgment, if we allow any drawback at all it should be a very small one. By other provisions in this bill we have cut off all right of removal of distilled spirits from the West to the markets of the East, where it is to be sold for home consumption. The manufacturers of the West can store their whisky only in the distillery warehouse, which must be upon the same lot as the distillery. Our Kentucky manufacturer, who never redistills, rectifies, or exports must keep his whisky on hand in the distillery warehouse at an immense expense for insurance, &c. He is never allowed to remove it until the tax has been paid. What we insist upon is that no other person shall be allowed, under pretense of export or anything else, to remove whisky until the tax is paid. Let every manufacturer or dealer be put on the same footing. Under pretense of exporting it whisky is sent across the river from Buffalo or Black Rock, from Detroit to Windsor, from Maine to Nova Scotia, from Brownsville to Matamoras; it is dodged about from one place to another under pretense of export until it gets back and floods the whole country, and heavy drawbacks are claimed on it. More frauds are committed in this way than in any other form. In this way the revenue is defrauded, while the honest manufacturer is debarred from getting his whisky to market. He must store it in the distillery warehouse, as I said, in the custody of the Government officers until the tax is paid. He cannot even transport to a fire-proof warehouse, which may be within a short distance of his establishment, without subjecting himself to the severest penalties.

But the exporter can carry whisky all over the country with the amplest opportunity to fraud, and he subjects himself to no penalty except the forfeiture of his bond, which may be worthless; while the distiller is punished by fine, imprisonment, seizure, and confiscation of all his property if he is guilty of any fraud, or even neglects in the smallest details, even to the failure to paint pipes, guess at the capacity of his mash-tubs, or in the slightest particular violate a law that none but a lawyer can understand. Why this severity on the distiller and this leniency to the fraudulent pretended exporter who has partners in his fraud all along the lines? This whole system ought to be made harmonious. If gentlemen desire to impose such stringent requirements upon the manufacturers of whisky to be consumed in this country, let everybody else be subjected to similar requirements. Every gallon of whisky that gets into the market fraudulently under pretense of export is just that much stolen from the Government—that much stolen from the honest manufacturer who has to pay the tax or keep his whisky in the distillery warehouse. Hence the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa seemed to me to cover the difficulty; and this amendment proposing to allow a drawback ought not to be adopted unless the amount of the drawback be reduced from sixty to ten, fifteen, or twenty cents at the utmost, and I think it had better be stricken out altogether.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish merely to state my reason for putting the drawback at sixty cents. The committee knows very well that the specific tax per gallon has been fixed at fifty cents. The tax of four dollars per barrel or ten cents a gallon increases the tax to sixty cents; and the additional tax upon the capacity of the distillery amounts to three cents more per gallon, making in all sixty-three cents tax. I have limited the drawback to sixty cents, three cents less than the tax actually paid. Hence, I think, there can be in this respect no ground of complaint. I wish only to add that the drawback is limited to alcohol and rum.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GRISWOLD.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire merely to say that in view of the striking out of every other provision calculated to preserve this export trade of the country, I for one trust the amendment submitted by my friend from Massachusetts will be adopted. I regard it as he does, as the most objectionable of the three plans which have been submitted to the House; but for one I am prepared to adopt almost any plan within the range of reason and propriety rather than strike down any material export interest that now exists in this country. I am one of those who will regard a business of that kind, a business now important and which promises in the future to become enlarged; but, sir, I am not one of those who believe we are at liberty in legislating for any of the great interests of the country to strike down any other interest. Inasmuch as this committee has indicated a determination they will accept no other amendment, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be adopted.

Mr. HARDING. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there is no provision in this bill for the payment of tax on alcohol. This provides that the tax on alcohol shall be returned as drawback on exportation. The presumption is, I suppose, under the bill as amended, that all alcohol is made out of spirits that have paid the tax. But, sir, that is not susceptible of proof except in the case of alcohol which is produced by continuous distillation. There we may have identification. Alcohol may be made out of distilled spirits that have not paid any tax, and yet when the alcohol is exported the Government will be compelled to pay these parties—not refund, for they did not pay anything—the amount of the tax that would be levied upon it. When you permit a man to take distilled spirits from the distillery and to transport them in bond, as this bill provides, to a place where they can be rectified and manufactured into alcohol, when it comes to be exported, in the nature of things, it cannot be identified.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill, as amended, provides that all distilled spirits shall pay tax prior to removal from the distillery. Alcohol, therefore, must be made out of tax-paid whisky.

Mr. HARDING. Not necessarily. The great frauds perpetrated are perpetrated in this way: we know there are many small distilleries in garrets and cellars. These people distill alcohol out of whisky that has never paid any tax.

Mr. LOGAN. You cannot make alcohol in a rectifying establishment. Rectifying is only running it through charcoal.

Mr. HARDING. When alcohol is made out of whisky that is manufactured illicitly in this way, how is it to be identified? Only by affidavits, except in the case of alcohol from continuous distillation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

ENROLLED BILL.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill H. R. No. 865, constituting eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, one of his Secretaries.

INTERNAL TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. HARDING. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty" in the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of drawbacks. I am not in favor of destroying this export trade; but I do not think there should be a premium upon that foreign trade. I therefore move to strike out sixty cents and insert fifty cents, the amount of the tax.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There is more than ten cents of special taxes.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I understand that. We propose to refund the tax, and that is fifty cents; and I do not think the special taxes ought to be refunded. I am a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and I have not said a word on this subject, as I could not support the chairman in the view he took. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] has been adopted, however, and I am glad of it. I think it is a good amendment. It seems to be impossible to transport whisky from the distilleries to the sea-board in bond without the perpetration of frauds. The whole country knows it. I agree in this bill there are guards and checks thrown around this transportation not before in existence; but, sir, we know they will do us as they have done heretofore, get their whisky to market without paying any tax. I was opposed in committee to this transportation of whisky in bond, and also to these bonded warehouses, and I hope they will be entirely abolished. I am in favor of a drawback of fifty cents upon exported whisky, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. BENTON. I rise to oppose the amendment. I think there has been an exaggeration of the importance of this export trade. But still it would probably be bad policy to undertake to prohibit it, and if we are not disposed to prohibit it, we should not impose such clogs upon it as to discourage exportation. It certainly seems to me a tax of fifteen cents would have that effect. Now, as has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts, a drawback of sixty cents would fall short of covering the amount paid on the gallon by at least from three to five cents. Now, while I think this export business of alcohol and rum is not to be specially favored in this country, still, under the present circumstances of our national indebtedness and the necessity of fostering and encouraging our manufacturing resources, I think we should not prohibit it. Therefore I am opposed to fixing the amount of the drawback at such a rate as will amount to a tax of from thirteen to fifteen cents on the gallon. It seems to me if we allow any at all, such guards and restrictions should be imposed as to prevent all frauds and all impositions upon the officers of the Government, so as to secure an honest administration of the law. I think we should allow such a sum as will approximate very nearly to the amount of the tax paid.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MOORHEAD, and there were—ayes 48, noes 52.

Mr. RAUM. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. MOORHEAD, and STEVENS of New Hampshire.

The committee divided; and the tellers were unable to agree as to the count.

The Chair ordered other tellers; and appointed Messrs. CULLOM, and WASHBURN of Indiana.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 42.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire unanimous consent of the committee to stop debate on this section. I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] to be a substitute for sections fifty-one, fifty-two, fifty-three, and fifty-five.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think the Chair stated it as a substitute for the fifty-first section.

The CHAIRMAN. It could be regarded as a substitute for the sections that have not been read only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent that debate may cease on the pending section.

No objection being made, debate on the pending section was closed.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BOUTWELL as a substitute for section fifty-one, it was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move to strike out sections fifty-two and fifty-three.

The motion was agreed to; and the sections were accordingly stricken out, as follows:

SEC. 52. And be it further enacted, That distilled spirits may be removed in bond, without payment of the tax, from a distillery warehouse, to be transported directly to an export bonded warehouse for the storage of distilled spirits, established at a port of entry as hereinbefore provided, on application of the distiller or owner of such spirits to the collector of internal revenue of the district from which such transportation is to be made, and under such rules and regulations, and after making such entries and executing such bonds and giving such other additional security, as may be prescribed by law and by regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and after being inspected, gauged, proved, and marked, as provided by this act. The entry to withdraw for transportation shall be made in triplicate, and shall designate the name of the distiller or owner applying for the transportation, the name of the place to which it is to be transported, with the name of the consignee or agent at such place, and a full designation of the whole route by which it is to be transported, whether by water, by railroad, or otherwise, and shall be in form as follows:

[Transportation entry to export warehouse.]
Entry of distilled spirits to be withdrawn, by — from the bonded warehouse of —, in district —, State of —, for transportation to —, by —, via —, consigned to —.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, the marks and serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on such distilled spirits, all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the distiller or owner of the spirits, who shall give his bond, executed in duplicate, with one or more sureties satisfactory to said collector, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will transport the distilled spirits as specified to the port of entry named, and that said spirits shall be entered on or before arrival there, and shall be deposited in the export bonded warehouse; also, that he will export the said spirits beyond the jurisdiction of the United States within six months from the date of said bond, or cause the same to be so exported; and the penal sum of said bond shall not be less than double the amount of the tax on such spirits. One of the entries shall be filed in the office of the collector, one shall be transmitted by said collector, with the bill of lading, to the collector in charge of exports at the port of entry to which the spirits are to be transported, and one, together with the duplicate of the bond, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be filed in his office. The removal from the warehouse of such distilled spirits for transportation shall be only after receiving the order or permit for the same, signed by the collector and addressed to the storekeeper, and after each cask or package has been distinctly marked or branded, at the expense of the distiller or owner, as follows: "Bonded in —, district of —, for transportation to the port of —, in the State of —." (Inserting, in each case, the number of the district and name of the State whence, and the name of the port and State to which the same is to be transported.) The bills of lading for such transportation shall be not less than three in number, and shall contain the name of the owner or his agent, with the name of the collector in charge of exports as joint consignees at the port of entry to which the same is to be transported, with a full statement of the whole route by which it is to be transported, and shall specify the marks and numbers on the casks or packages, and the name of the distiller of said spirits; two of said bills of lading shall be delivered to the collector of the district whence the spirits are transported, one of which shall be filed in his office, and the other transmitted by him, with the transportation entry, to the collector in charge of exports at the port of entry to which the spirits are to be transported. Every master of a vessel, conductor of a railroad car, and person in charge of any other bond by any route shall exhibit, on application of any officer of internal revenue, a manifest particularizing the casks or packages, a manifest particularizing the casks or packages of distilled spirits so transported; and any distilled spirits transported under bond from one district to another shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture if found elsewhere than in regular transit on the route as prescribed in the entry for transportation of the same, or if, after arrival at the port of entry to which it was destined, it has not been entered for deposit in the warehouse as prescribed by law and regulation. Every collector shall report weekly, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, all entries made of distilled spirits, for transportation in bond from their respective districts during the week, and of distilled spirits transported into such district from other districts.

SEC. 53. And be it further enacted, That before the arrival of any distilled spirits, transported in bond as aforesaid, at the port of entry to which it was destined, or immediately on its arrival, the owner or agent named in the bill of lading as one of the consignees shall enter the same for deposit in the warehouse; and said entry shall be in triplicate, and shall contain the name of the person applying to make the deposit, the designation of the export bonded warehouse in which the deposit is to be made, the district and State whence it was transported, with the date of the transportation entry, and the conveyance by which it arrived, or is to arrive, in form, as follows:

[Entry for deposit in export bonded warehouse.]
Entry of distilled spirits to be deposited by — in export bonded warehouse —, which was withdrawn for transportation by — from — warehouse in the — district, State of —, on the — day of —, A. D. —, for transportation to —.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, with the marks and serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons, and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on the distilled spirits contained in them, as stated in the transportation entry, all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of said owner or agent, which shall be attached to the entry, and be in form as follows:

I, —, do solemnly swear that the distilled spirits described in this entry are the identical spirits described in the transportation entry made by —, in — district, State of —, on the — day of —, A. D. —; and that said spirits are the same in quantity, quality, value, and package, unavoidable waste and damage excepted, as at the time of said entry for transportation.

The said spirits, after being entered, shall, on arrival at the port of entry, be unladen from the vessel, railroad car, or other conveyance by which they were brought, under the supervision of an officer of internal revenue designated by said collector in charge of exports, who shall also supervise the transfer or conveyance of the same to such export bonded warehouse as the collector may by written order designate; and, after being gauged and inspected by a United States gauger designated by said collector, shall be deposited in such warehouse and a return shall be immediately made by the gauger to said collector of such gauging and inspecting, and the tax shall be paid on any difference in the number of proof gallons as shown by the return of the gauger and the number of proof gallons stated in the entry to withdraw the distilled spirits for transportation, after deducting therefrom the allowance for actual loss by leakage, to be established, ascertained, and proved under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe. One entry for deposit in the warehouse shall be retained in the office of said collector, one shall be transmitted to the collector of the district whence the transportation was made, and one sent to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be recorded and filed in his office.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 54. And be it further enacted, That any distilled spirits may, on payment of the tax thereon, be withdrawn from warehouse on application to the collector of the district in charge of such warehouse, on making a withdrawal entry, in duplicate, and in form as follows:

[Entry for withdrawal of distilled spirits from warehouse. Tax paid.]

Entry of distilled spirits to be withdrawn, on payment of the tax, from — warehouse by —, deposited on the — day of —, A. D. —, by —, in said warehouse.

If withdrawn by any other person than the person who made the deposit, the authority for so doing shall be attached to the entry signed by the person who made the deposit, and be in form as follows:

I authorize — to withdraw from warehouse — the distilled spirits described in this entry.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, with the marks and serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons, and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on the distilled spirits contained in them; all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person making such entry; and on payment of the tax the collector shall issue his order to the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse for the delivery. One of said entries shall be filed in the office of the collector, and the other transmitted by him to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 55. And be it further enacted, That distilled spirits may be withdrawn for immediate export, without payment of the tax, from any warehouse at a port of entry where a collector has been designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to have charge of all matters relating to the exportation of articles subject to tax under the laws to provide internal revenue, on application of the owner thereof to the said collector, and under such rules and regulations, and after making such entries, and executing such bonds, and giving such other additional security, as may be prescribed by law and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The entry for such exportation shall be in triplicate, and shall contain the name of the person applying to export, the name of the distiller, and of the district in which the spirits were distilled, the date of transportation from that district, and the name of the vessel by which, and the name of the port to which, they are to be exported; and the form of the entry shall be as follows:

[Entry for export of distilled spirits.]
Entry of spirits distilled by —, in — district, State of —, and transported thence on the — day of —, A. D. —, to be withdrawn from — warehouse by —, for immediate export by him on board the —, whereof — is master, bound to —.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, the marks and serial numbers thereon, the quality or kind of spirits as known in commerce, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons, and amount of the tax on such distilled spirits; all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the owner of the spirits, and that they are truly intended to be exported to the port of —, and not to be reloaded within the limits of the United States; and said owner shall give his bond executed in duplicate, with one or more sureties satisfactory to said collector, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will export the distilled spirits as specified in said entry to the port of —, and that the same shall not be landed within the jurisdiction of the United States. The penal sum named in said bond shall be equal to not less than double the amount of the tax on such spirits. For the discharge of any such export bond the same time shall be allowed, and the same certificates of landing and other evidence shall be required as is or may be provided and required for imported merchandise exported from the United States, that the said spirits have been landed at the port named, or at any other port beyond the jurisdiction of the United States, or upon satisfactory evidence that the spirits have been lost after shipment. One bill of lading, duly signed by the master of the vessel, shall, when shipped, be deposited with said collector, to be filed at his office with the entry, retained by him; one of said entries shall be sent to the collector of customs at said port of entry, and when the shipment is completed the other entry shall be transmitted, with the duplicate of the bond, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be recorded and filed in his office. The removal of such distilled spirits from the warehouse for exportation shall be only after the receipt of an order or permit signed by the collector in charge of exports and directed to the storekeeper of the warehouse, and after each cask or package shall have been distinctly marked or branded, at the expense of the owner, as follows: "U. S. export warehouse; for export." Before shipment the casks or packages shall be inspected and gauged alongside of or on the vessel by an internal revenue gauger, designated by said collector in charge of exports, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe; and on application of the said collector in charge of exports it shall be the duty of the surveyor of the port to designate and direct one of the custom-house inspectors to superintend such shipment. The gauger, as aforesaid, shall make a full return of such inspecting and gauging, certifying thereon that the shipment has been made, in his presence, on board the vessel named in the entry for export, which return shall be indorsed by said custom-house inspector, certifying that the casks or packages have been shipped under his supervision on board said vessel; and the said inspector shall make a similar certificate to the surveyor of the port indorsed on, or to be attached to, the entry in possession of the custom-house.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to strike out that section.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 56. And be it further enacted, That distilled spirits may be withdrawn from any bonded warehouse other than an export warehouse for the purpose of being redistilled into alcohol within the city, town, or district in which such warehouse is situated, on application of the distiller or owner of such spirits to the collector of internal revenue of the district in which they are stored, under such rules and regulations, and after making such entries and executing such bonds, and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by law and by regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The entry to withdraw for redistillation shall be made in duplicate, and shall designate the name of the distiller or owner applying for the redistillation, the name of the distiller and of the district in which it was distilled, the distillery in which it is to be redistilled, and by whom, and shall be in form as follows:

[Entry to withdraw for redistillation.]

Entry of spirits distilled by —, in — district, State of —, to be withdrawn from the distillery warehouse by —, for redistillation into alcohol by —, at — distillery, and to be returned thereafter to the said warehouse.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, the marks or serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on such distilled spirits, all of which shall be verified by the distiller or owner of the spirits, who shall give his bond, with one or more sureties satisfactory to said collector, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will return the said spirits, and enter the same after redistillation into alcohol for deposit in the warehouse from which it was withdrawn, within thirty days from the date of said bond, and will pay the tax on any quantity of proof gallons so returned less than the number of proof gallons stated in the entry to withdraw the distilled spirits from the warehouse; and the penal sum of said bond shall be not less than double the amount of the tax on such spirits. One of the entries shall be retained and filed in the office of the said collector, and the other transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be filed in his office. The removal from the warehouse of such distilled spirits, for redistillation, shall be only after receiving the order or permit for the same, signed by the collector and addressed to the storekeeper, and after each cask or package has been regauged and inspected, and distinctly marked or branded at the expense of the distiller or owner, as follows: "United States warehouse for redistillation."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out that section. It is the same subject.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 57. And be it further enacted, That within thirty days from the date of the bond given for the withdrawal from warehouse of any distilled spirits for redistillation, the alcohol redistilled therefrom shall be entered for warehousing by the distiller or owner thereof, and deposited in the same warehouse from which it was withdrawn; and the entry for warehousing shall be made in duplicate, and shall designate the name of the distiller or owner, the warehouse in which it is to be deposited, and the date of its withdrawal from said warehouse, and shall be in form as follows:

[Entry of alcohol for warehousing.]

Entry of alcohol for warehousing by —, in — warehouse, —, State of —, redistilled from spirits withdrawn by me from said warehouse on the — day of —, A. D. —.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, the marks or serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on such alcohol. The said alcohol, after being gauged and inspected by a United States gauger designated by said collector, shall be deposited in such warehouse; and each cask or package shall be branded or marked "alcohol," and with the name of the distiller thereof, and serial numbers placed thereon; and a return shall be immediately made by the gauger to said collector of such gauging and inspecting, and the tax shall be paid on any difference in the number of proof gallons, as shown by the return of the gauger, and the number of proof gallons as stated in the entry to withdraw the distilled spirits for redistillation. The distiller or owner of any alcohol so deposited in the warehouse shall give his bond, with one or more sureties satisfactory to the said collector, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will, within six months from the date of said entry, withdraw the alcohol specified in the entry for consumption or sale, and pay the tax thereon; and the penal sum of such bond shall be not less than double the tax on such alcohol. One of the entries shall be retained and filed in the office of said collector, and the other transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be filed in his office. Alcohol deposited in any United States bonded warehouse may be withdrawn on the payment of the tax, or for transportation in bond, without the payment of the tax, to an export bonded warehouse established and designated at a port of entry, and for export, in the same manner and on the same conditions, and the execution of such entries and bonds in all respects as provided for in the case of other distilled spirits.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out that section.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 58. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permits to curators or principal officers of incorporated or chartered scientific institutions to withdraw alcohol in specified quantities from bond, without payment of the internal revenue tax on the same, or on the spirits from which the alcohol has been distilled, for the sole and exclusive purpose of preserving specimens of anatomy, physiology, or of natural history, belonging to said institutions: Provided, That the said curators or other officers, on applying for such permit, shall file a bond for double the amount of tax on the alcohol to be withdrawn, with two good and sufficient sureties, who shall not be officers of the institution making application, said bonds and sureties to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and conditioned that the whole quantity of alcohol so withdrawn from bond shall be used for the purpose above specified, and for no other; and that the curators, or other officers, shall comply with such other requirements and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe. And if any alcohol so obtained shall be used or allowed to be used by any curator or other officer of said institution for any purpose other than that above specified, then the said curators, officers, and sureties shall pay the tax on the whole amount of alcohol withdrawn from bond, together with a like amount as a penalty in addition thereto.

Mr. BUTLER. That section should be stricken out. It provides for putting alcohol in bond, and taking it out without payment of tax. I move that it be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it ought to be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 59. And be it further enacted, That at any port of entry bonded warehouses may be established, to be known as bonded manufacturing warehouses, in which medicines, medical preparations, compositions, perfumery, and cosmetics, and cordials or liqueurs, composed in part of alcohol or other distilled spirits, may be manufactured for export exclusively, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe; and no building, or part of a building, shall be designated for such warehouse which has openings connecting it with other buildings or other rooms in the same building, or which shall be within six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying establishment, nor unless recommended by the collector of the district and the collector having charge of exports at such port of entry, and approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and such warehouses shall be used for manufacturing the articles aforesaid for export, and for no other purpose, and shall be under the direction and control of said collector, and in charge of an internal revenue storekeeper assigned thereto by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall keep a record of the distilled spirits received and how used, and of the delivery of any articles from the warehouse, and make such reports as required of storekeepers in other bonded warehouses; and no article manufactured therein shall be removed from such warehouse except on an order or permit from the collector in charge of exports at such port of entry for immediate transfer to the vessel by which it is to be exported to a foreign country as hereinafter provided. Any materials imported into the United States may, under such rules as now exist, or as may hereafter be prescribed for the removal of imported goods into United States bonded warehouses, be removed in original packages from on shipboard or from bonded warehouses in which the same may be, into the bonded manufacturing warehouse in which such manufacture may be carried on, for the purpose of being used in such manufacture, without payment of duties thereon. No articles so removed shall be used except in the manufacture of any of the above enumerated articles; and it shall be the duty of the internal revenue storekeeper in charge of such bonded manufacturing warehouse to personally see that said articles are used in such manufacture, and his certificate of such articles having been so used shall be taken by the collector of customs of the district in which such warehouse may be situated, in cancellation of any bonds given for the payment of duties on such imported articles.

SEC. 60. And be it further enacted, That alcohol or other distilled spirits required for use in the manufacture of medicine, medical preparations, perfumery, cosmetics, and cordials or liqueurs, composed in part of such spirits, may be removed from bonded warehouse without payment of the tax, to be transferred directly to a bonded manufacturing warehouse in the collection district, to be used in manufacturing the articles aforesaid, on application of the manufacturer having such warehouse to the collector in charge of exports at such port of entry, and under such rules and regulations, and after making such entries, and executing such bonds, and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by law and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The entry for such removal and transfer shall be in duplicate, and shall contain the name of the person applying therefor, the kind of spirits, and the name of the distiller and of the district in which it was distilled, and designate the warehouse to which it is to be removed; and the form of the entry shall be as follows:

[Entry of distilled spirits for manufacture in bond.]

Entry of —, to be withdrawn from bonded warehouse in the — district, State of —, by —, to be manufactured by me for export from the port of —, to my bonded manufacturing warehouse in —.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, the marks and serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on such distilled spirits; all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the distiller or owner of said spirits, also by the oath or affirmation of the person making such entry, who shall give his bond executed in duplicate, with one or more sureties satisfactory to said collector, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will transfer the spirits specified in the entry to his bonded manufacturing warehouse, and, after using the same for manufacturing any of the articles allowed by law, will enter for export all such articles in which said spirits have been used, and export the same to some foreign port, and that such articles shall not be landed or consumed within the jurisdiction of the United States. The penal sum named in said bond shall be equal to not less than double the amount of the tax on such spirits. The removal of such distilled spirits from the bonded warehouse shall be only after the receipt of an order or permit signed by the collector in charge of exports, and directed to the storekeeper of such warehouse, and after each cask or package shall have been gauged and inspected, and shall have been distinctly marked or branded, at the expense of the person making the entry, as follows: "For removal to bonded manufacturing warehouse of —." One of said entries, with the duplicate of the bond, shall be transmitted by said collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be filed in his office, and the other entry and bond shall be retained and preserved in the office of said collector.

SEC. 61. And be it further enacted, That medicines, medical preparations, perfumery, cosmetics, and cordials or liqueurs composed in part of alcohol or other distilled spirits and manufactured in bonded manufacturing warehouses as hereinbefore provided, shall be withdrawn from such warehouses for immediate export, without payment of tax and without having stamps affixed thereto, on application by the manufacturer to the collector in charge of exports, and under such rules and regulations, and after making such entries and executing such bonds and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by law and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The entry for such exportation shall be in triplicate, and shall specify the name of the article to be exported, the number of packages, and the estimated quantity in proof gallons of distilled spirits consumed in the manufacture of the article to be exported and the amount of the tax on such spirits; and in all other respects, so far as applicable, the same forms shall be observed and the same proceedings had as provided for in regard to the export of distilled spirits; and the proof required of landing the same beyond the jurisdiction of the United States shall be the same as in the case of distilled spirits exported.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out those three sections.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

Sec. 62. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits in any bonded warehouse shall within one hundred days after the passage of this act be withdrawn from such warehouse, and the tax paid on the same; and the casks of packages containing said spirits shall be marked and stamped and be subject in all respects to the same requirements as if manufactured after the passage of this act. And any distilled spirits remaining in any bonded warehouse for a period of more than one hundred days after the passage of this act shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend that section by striking out the word "tax" in line four and inserting "taxes." I offer that amendment because I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means, when we reach section sixty-five, to move to add a provision that whisky in bond shall pay four dollars a barrel as a special tax as well as whisky in the distillery.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to strike out the section. I do not see why the very hard condition proposed in this section should be put upon those who have whisky in bond. There are many persons in this country, in all the cities on the sea-board, who have invested their money in whisky legitimately, either for the purpose of home consumption or for exportation. I cannot imagine why the committee should insist upon putting these hard terms on men who, perhaps to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars, in single instances have invested in whisky, and who have a right in fair business transactions to a profit on their investment at the time when according to their own notions they should sell. I undertake to say that the payment of this tax at the expiration of one hundred days by some of these gentlemen would amount to so large a sum that their entire capital in this trade might be swept away. Why, look at it. Compare it with the bonded system in the customs department of the Government. Look how the Government protects the merchants who import goods from foreign countries. It does not make a sweeping law, saying to them, "In a hundred days you shall withdraw your goods for consumption, or if you do not you shall forfeit them, and thus lose every dollar you have invested in them." I think, sir, that we ought to give the manufacturer of whisky, or the purchaser of whisky to sell again, the legitimate business man, who has used his capital for the purpose of making money by it, the same chances that we give under the laws to the importer of foreign goods. We allow him to-day the privilege of putting his goods in a bonded warehouse for one year without exacting from him any penalty, giving him the right to withdraw them at any time within that year for consumption at home, to sell them in the home market, and then, after that period has expired, he has the further period of two years to withdraw them, at an advance to be paid by him of ten per cent. upon the duties, and if for exportation only, no advance upon their withdrawal.

But here it is proposed to every one who is doing business legitimately, simply because it is in whisky, that unless he take it out of bond within one hundred days, thus throwing millions of gallons upon a falling market, perhaps, that the extreme penalty of forfeiture shall be suffered. The severity of such an enactment would drive good men out of our community and would stifle enterprise. We would have bankruptcy all around us; and the citizen who feels that he has a right to embark in such occupation as he pleases would at once complain that instead of being protected in his operations by just and fair laws he is made the victim of such demands as must inevitably lead to his destruction and utter ruin.

I do not mean to espouse the cause of the manufacturer or trader in whisky especially. The duty of Congress is not confined to imposing severe laws upon one class of business men only. To be sure we should not hesitate to provide for taxation, but let us be careful in our efforts not to oppress our constituents so far as to injure their investments, although they may be made in whisky. That it should bear a large portion of our burdens I believe, but legitimate transactions should be fostered, and the exactions of the law should be so enforced as to bring about their cheerful observance by every one. We can afford to defend the upright dealer in whatever line of business he may be; and even if we are persuaded that great frauds have been committed in the whisky traffic, yet we can all of us bring to our minds many of our constituents who, in a series of years, have been engaged in making and selling that article, and have never been known to deprive the Government of one dollar of taxes. It is difficult to bind bad men by even the most stringent laws; and so we have the greater reason for legislating for the benefit of the honest, who, at last, have to pay the penalty, in one way or another, of the shortcomings and frauds of the dishonest.

Now, sir, I do not care to stand here as the special defender of the whisky sellers, either small or great; but I do stand here as the defender of the legitimate business men of the country. I am always ready to vote for what I believe to be right. I desire, if possible, to increase the revenues of the Government, but in seeking that object I am not willing to do an act of injustice. I hope the section will be stricken out.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the committee rise, so that the House may act on the veto message of the President on the "omnibus" reconstruction bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope the committee will not rise till we have gone through with the provisions relating to special taxes.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. There are many very good reasons why that veto message should be acted on now.

On the motion of Mr. FARNSWORTH, there were—ayes 43, noes 46.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FARNSWORTH and FOLEY were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 36.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 236) granting a pension to John Q. A. Keck, late a private in the third Missouri cavalry; and

An act (H. R. No. 847) for holding terms of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, at the city of Cairo, in said State.

REPRESENTATION OF SOUTHERN STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In returning to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, a bill entitled "An act to admit the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to representation in Congress," I do not deem it necessary to state at length the reasons which constrain me to withhold my approval. I will not, therefore, undertake, at this time, to reopen the discussion upon the grave constitutional questions involved in the act of March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto, in pursuance of which it is claimed, in the preamble to this bill, these States have framed and adopted constitutions of State government. Nor will I repeat the objections contained in my message of the 20th instant, returning without my signature the bill to admit to representation the State of Arkansas, and which are equally applicable to the pending measure.

Like the act recently passed in reference to Arkansas, this bill supersedes the plain and simple mode prescribed by the Constitution for the admission to seats in the respective Houses of Senators and Representatives from the several States. It assumes authority over six States of the Union which has never been delegated to Congress, or is even warranted by previous unconstitutional legislation upon the subject of restoration. It imposes conditions which are in derogation of the equal rights of the States, and is founded upon a theory which is subversive of the fundamental principles of the Government. In the case of Alabama it violates the plighted faith of Congress by forcing upon that State a constitution which was rejected by the people, according to the express terms of an act of Congress requiring that a majority of the registered electors should vote upon the question of its ratification.

For these objections, and many others that might be presented, I cannot approve this bill, and therefore return it for the action of Congress required in such cases by the Federal Constitution.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1868.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to the passage of this bill notwithstanding the objections of the President?

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I call for the previous question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Would it be in order now to move that this message be printed, and that it lie over for consideration on a future day?

The SPEAKER. It would be if the previous question should not be sustained.

Mr. ROBINSON. I tried to get the Speaker's eye to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] addressed the Chair before the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ROBINSON.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] however, having had charge of the bill in its previous stages, was, by the usage, entitled to be recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. For the information of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ROBINSON,] I will simply say that there is not a word of news in this whole message. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants "news," had he not better have read telegrams from various parts of the country showing the results of recent elections? [Laughter.]

The previous question was seconded; there being—ayes 75, noes 26.

The main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to the passage of this bill notwithstanding the objections of the President? On this question the vote, by the requirement of the Constitution, must be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 31, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Boles, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Butler, Sidney Clark, Cobb, Coburn, Cornell, Corvode, Cullom, Delano, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Ela, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Garfield, Gravelly, Griswold, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Hinds, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Kelsey, Ketchum, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Logan, Loughridge, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Mercier, Moore, Moorhead, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Pomeroy, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taylor, Thomas, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Windom, and the Speaker—108.

YAYS—Messrs. Adams, Axtell, Barnes, Beck, Brooks, Cary, Chanler, Eldridge, Getz, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Holman, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Pruyn, Robinson, Sitgreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auken, and Woodward—31.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, James M. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barnum, Bingham, Boyer, Bromwell, Burr, Cake, Churchhill, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Dawes, Dodge, Donnelly, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Hill, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hunter, Johnson, Kitchen, Latin, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, Miller, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Nunn, Perham, Peters, Randall, Roots, Ross, Selye, Stone, Taffo, John Trimble, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Thomas Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodbridge—55.

During the roll-call,

Mr. GETZ said: On this question my colleague, Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, is paired with Mr. CAKE and Mr. MORRELL.

The roll-call having been concluded,

THE SPEAKER. On the question, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to the passage of the bill to admit the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to representation in Congress, notwithstanding the objections of the President?—the yeas are 108, and the nays are 31. Two thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill has again passed the House, and will be transmitted with the objections of the President to the Senate for similar reconsideration.

PROTEST OF DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That twenty thousand copies of the protest of the Democratic members of the House against the admission of the Representatives from Arkansas be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will say fifty thousand copies.

Mr. BUTLER. Agreed; I have no objection to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Say one hundred thousand.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reception of the resolution as modified, to be referred under the law to the Committee on Printing?

No objection was made; and the resolution, as modified, was received and referred under the law.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope the committee will report it back at once, if they can.

TEST OF LIFE-SAVING APPARATUS.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair has received the following communication, which he will lay before the House for the information of members:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1868.

To Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Having come here for the sole purpose of giving an exhibition before the honorable members of Congress to prove the benefits of the life-saving apparatus of the National Life-Saving and Ship-balling Company, to take place Friday the 26th instant at six o'clock p. m., Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the United States Navy, has kindly furnished me with a United States steamer, which will be in readiness at the foot of Seventh street wharf to convey such members of both Houses as wish to participate in this exhibition.

Trusting to have the honor of proving before your honorable body the great benefits of this life-saving apparatus, I have the honor to remain, most respectfully, your obedient servant.

M. L. ROSSVALLY,
General agent National Life-Saving and Ship-balling Company.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now insist upon the regular order of business.

The House, under the order heretofore made, accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr.

BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. O'NEILL, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 62. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits in any bonded warehouse shall within one hundred days after the passage of this act be withdrawn from such warehouse, and the tax paid on the same; and the casks or packages containing said spirits shall be marked and stamped and be subject in all respects to the same requirements as if manufactured after the passage of this act. And any distilled spirits remaining in any bonded warehouse for a period of more than one hundred days after the passage of this act shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. O'NEILL. I will withdraw my motion to strike out this section, and move instead to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That all distilled spirits in any bonded warehouse shall, on and after the passage of this act, pay, in addition to the tax unpaid upon the same, one per cent. a month upon the amount of the said tax while remaining in any bonded warehouse as aforesaid.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. Whisky now in bond is that which has paid no tax. The tax at present is two dollars per gallon. It has been in bond for various periods of time; some of it for but a few months, probably, but some of it for years, during all of which time the United States has been playing the part of the warehouse-keeper for the owner. I have always thought there ought to have been some limit—there was none originally made, I suppose—to the time during which whisky can be left in bond, because it is generally presumed to be an article that grows better with age, unlike some of us here, I suppose. But the proposition now is to leave it in bond for an indefinite time, upon the condition that there is paid upon it what is called a tax, but which in fact will be storage fees, at the rate of one per cent. a month. Now, I am afraid the whisky will leak, by some means or other, just about as much as the one per cent. would amount to. Even if it did not leak, I would object to the United States becoming for an indefinite time the warehouse-keeper for the owners of this whisky. The system being now changed, and the tax reduced from two dollars to fifty cents per gallon, the Committee of Ways and Means have thought it but wise to make provision requiring that within a given time all this whisky shall be taken out of bond, and the tax paid upon it; the time being limited to one hundred days, which is perhaps not too short a time for the purpose, with the condition that at the end of that time it should be forfeited.

Mr. KELLEY. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, for the purpose of saying that if the amendment of my colleague [Mr. O'NEILL] does not prevail I will move to extend the time for the removal of whisky now in bond from one hundred days, as now proposed, to six months.

There is a special trade connected with whisky which deserves the consideration of this House. The general business of raw whisky for alcohol is one trade, and the manufacture of fine whiskies for the table and general use is another. These provisions of this section aims specially, though undesignedly, at the latter class of goods. The tax of fifty cents adds one hundred and fifty per cent. to the cost of western whisky, and one hundred per cent. to the cost of that produced in the eastern States, and if demanded immediately will absorb the capital that would otherwise be employed in production. Whisky gains in quality and value with age. Whisky three, four, or five years old is another thing than new whisky as to price in the market. That carefully distilled from grain, either Bourbon or Monongahela, is bringing in our market today from seven to twelve dollars a gallon where its age is well established.

Now, are we ready to declare that no man not worth millions of dollars who can embark fifty per cent. of more of his commercial capital in Government tax shall be able to hold whiskey for ripening? I am sure no interest of the country can be subserved by such action as that. There is no reason why a man who may deposit his whisky one day after this law goes into effect shall have one year on which to pay the tax, while another man who deposits it the day before shall on pain of forfeiture pay his tax within one hundred days. The provision embodied in this section will compel every man who has a large stock of fine whisky in bond who is not a millionaire and able to add to his investment hundreds of thousands of dollars by paying the tax to throw his stock upon the market. This pressure is to be applied all over the country. It will produce panic. It will compel the sacrifice of that which has been adding to the wealth of its owners and the country by the improvement imparted to it by the lapse of time during which its owner has been losing interest and paying the expense of storage. When the war came on there were stocks of fine whisky in the country ten or fifteen years old which were bringing from five to seven dollars a gallon. That class of whisky competed for supremacy among epicures and bon vivants with French brandy and was beginning to be an article of exportation to England and France. The high tax interrupted the growth of that export trade. And now by the provisions of this section all such stock in bond is to be thrown upon market, and men who are endeavoring to build up a great trade are to be sacrificed.

Now, sir, I am not here to ask any special privileges for distilled spirits that other industries do not enjoy, and when we make other industries pay a tax of one hundred and fifty per cent. upon the cost of production, and when we require those engaged in them to embark three fifths of their capital in Government taxes, other industries will be upon the same level with this, and may ask to hold stock in bond. There is no analogy between this and any other interest except tobacco, which, as a luxury, is also heavily taxed.

Mr. MULLINS. I rise to oppose the amendment on the same ground advocated by the chairman of the committee. It is evident to every gentleman who has heard the able argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania who preceded me that it must come to this and nothing more. I give all credit to what he has said about the quality and value of whisky being increased by its age. I speak from theory, and not from practice. I have not such an experimental knowledge on the subject as some others. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires this whisky to remain in bond at the expense of the United States, while its value is being increased to the owner. Every one of us is interested in the revenue that is to accrue from this tax, and I believe that it ought to be paid promptly so the Government shall get the benefit of it in order to as rapidly as possible extinguish our great national debt. The gentleman's theory is, however, that it should be kept in bond as long as possible, at the expense of the Government, for the benefit of the owners. I am against it. He reverses the argument. He says this is for the poor men. It is not so. It is the rich who hoard up liquor. They keep it for weeks and months in the bonded warehouses at the expense of the Government. They have their liquor locked up and make the Government keep it for them. I am opposed to it. I think it is nothing but class legislation. It is the bowing of the law to the rich. It is hoarding up this liquor at the expense of the Government. I say let it go upon the market and let us have the tax upon it. The Government needs all this tax to pay the public debt, and it ought to have it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COVODE. My colleague [Mr. KELLEY] withdraws his amendment, and I renew it for the purpose of giving my views on this subject. As I stated a few days ago, I live in a district where there are now one million nine hundred thousand gallons of whisky in bond, as reported to me by the collector of the district. Now, the effect of compelling these distillers to pay this tax on that quantity in one hundred days will be to put them at the mercy of capitalists who furnish them money. They have already exhausted their ability to borrow money to keep their distilleries running, and now to compel them to pay this tax would force them to put their whisky into market or to accept whatever conditions the bankers and moneyed men of the country require of them for the purpose of raising the money to pay this vast amount. It will require $1,000,000 in that district in which there is to-day a banking capital of only $50,000. They will have to go into the eastern market and get the money on such terms as they can, or put their whisky in the market at once, which must unquestionably depress the price and cause a great loss to the owners.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to oppose the amendment. Mr. Chairman, what is the necessity of legislating in regard to when this particular article shall be put on the market any more than as to when corn or flour or any other article of trade or commerce shall be put on the market? Why not leave it subject to the laws of trade? If you have twenty-five million gallons of spirits in the warehouses, let it be taken out whenever there is a demand for it. If you undertake to legislate as to when it shall be put on the market, why not legislate to fix the price, and at such a price that shall be remunerative to the owner. Whenever the price will justify its sale the owner will sell it without any requirement of law. He will gladly pay the Government tax whenever he can sell it at a profit. The owners of these twenty-five million gallons would have taken them out of bond at any time since the tax of two dollars per gallon was imposed if they could have sold them at the cost even of production above the tax. There is not a gallon of whisky in New York made from grain that has not cost fifty cents a gallon to make it. Some of it has been manufactured, perhaps, two years ago, and has been held by the owner at a cost of not less than ten dollars a barrel in addition to the original cost. Now, you propose to place them at a great disadvantage with those who make whisky to-day. Old high wine is no better for manufacturing purposes or redistillation than new. But you allow a distiller to make whisky at a tax of fifty cents, and he may redistill it or do what he pleases with it, while those who happen to be so unfortunate as to have made it two years ago and held it till now at a cost of nine or ten dollars a barrel by insurance, leakage, and storage, you compel to pay four dollars a barrel in addition and take it out of bond in one hundred days or you will forfeit it to the Government. There are twenty-five million gallons now in bond that are required to pay this tax in one hundred days or suffer confiscation by this bill. Now, why not leave it in bond until there is a demand for it? If there is a demand for it you will get your tax as fast as it is taken out without breaking faith with the manufacturer and bankrupting him beside. Leave it to be called for when there is a demand for its consumption. Then it will be brought out perhaps in thirty, sixty, or ninety days, or six or twelve months, just as it is required for trade, commerce, or consumption. That is the way this should stand, and in no other way.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws the amendment and I renew it. I desire to say that I prefer the bill as it comes from the committee. I think it ought to pass in this shape, and for these reasons: I take it there is in the country now little or no whisky or spirits exported that have honestly paid the tax. All that is outside of the warehouses, or the greater portion of it, has been illicitly distilled. How much of it there is I will not undertake to say. The best information we have is that there are about twenty-five million gallons in bond. The annual produce of the country is not far from ninety million gallons, and the amount now in bond is hardly the consumption of one hundred days. Those who are familiar with the manufacture of spirits, I presume, will bear me testimony that there will be very little liquor manufactured between now and the 1st of November, the summer season of the year not being favorable to this business. The one hundred days allowed by this bill will have elapsed by that time. The liquor that is now in bond will supply the demand of the country during that period, and when the fall distillation commences the supply on hand will have gone out of the warehouses, the Government will have received the tax upon it, and we shall be ready to open new books and commence again. There is a great deal of force, it seems to me, in what has fallen from several gentlemen in respect to the burden that already exists upon the liquor that is in bonded warehouses, enough, as I think, to counterbalance the per-bushel tax and per-barrel tax which is specially imposed by the present bill as it comes from the committee. I do not think, therefore, that it is giving whisky in bond an undue advantage to allow it to be taken out by a payment per gallon the same as we require upon whisky that is now made, and that is a policy which will insure the tax on all that liquor which has been accumulating.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I rise to oppose the amendment. I am decidedly in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to extend the time for paying the duty on this whisky in bond to six months. I do not wish to be factious about this matter; but I know that if the Committee of Ways and Means will look at this subject as it really is, they will be in favor of that amendment.

Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] asks why should we not let the laws of trade regulate this subject the same as corn and other articles? I will tell him why. We have, as a Government, held out inducements to certain parties to pile up their products, their manufactures in bonded warehouses. By law we have held out those inducements, and they have so done. We have now reached a point where we are about to disband and disorganize those warehouses and tell them to take their stock away. We say by this bill that they must take it away in one hundred days. Well, we ask in justice to these parties that you give them at least six months. And why? Why, as the gentleman has well said, if you throw whisky on the market faster than the market will take it, you will glut the market and break it down so that there will be, as there has been heretofore, no sale whatever; but if you let it go out gradually it will all work off and the Government will get the money. Now, what does the Government lose by this? It may be said that the Government is paying to keep up the bonded warehouses; but is not the owner of the whisky paying for storage and insurance? Does he not have to stand more than the Government stands?

Now, I want to tell gentlemen how it will operate in my city. One fifth of all this whisky, according to the report of the internal revenue department, is in the city of Cincinnati. About five million gallons, a little over one hundred thousand barrels, is in bond there. I tell the committee that the distillers do not own the whisky. The men who made the whisky own very little of the whisky that is in bond in that city. There are small rectifiers who have bought their one, two, and three hundred barrels. There are alcohol dealers who have bought it; there are druggists who have it; it has gone through various shapes and trades; and there are commission merchants who have advanced money upon it. I say we should give them a chance to pay the money to the Government and take this liquor away. Suppose, at the end of the one hundred days, these men cannot pay the money, what is the result? You are then to put the officers of the law upon them and put the whisky upon the market and sell it at what it will bring. What will the Government make by that process? But if you give these men six months then they will come out all right, and the Government will get the money without breaking down these parties. But otherwise you not only will not get the money, but you will break down these parties and outrage the feelings of the community where this tax is to be paid. All the whisky which is in bond now belonging to distillers is just that portion which they were unable to smuggle.

Mr. LOGAN. I must confess I am a little surprised to see the favor which this proposition apparently receives. My friend from Philadelphia, [Mr. KELLEY], who offered this amendment, has submitted an argument upon it, which I have read in a letter which has been sent here.

Now, if gentlemen will examine the statistics they will find this to be the fact: within the last eight months—after the passage of the bill by Congress to prevent the taking any more of this whisky out of bond without the payment of the tax—the majority of the whisky of the United States has been purchased for from fifteen to thirty cents per gallon, the greater portion of it at not more than eighteen cents per gallon, by large whisky speculators, and that whisky is now in bond. It has been held in bond waiting for the tax upon it to be reduced. And now the very moment you reduce the tax to fifty cents per gallon gentlemen get up here and asked that they be allowed six months to take it out of bond, so that they may be enabled to speculate more largely in it.

Now, I am opposed to any such proposition. If these men could afford to pay the tax of two dollars per gallon at once, they certainly can afford to pay the tax of fifty cents per gallon in a hundred days. If you ever expect to have the time commence when you can collect the revenue from this whisky you must have some time fixed when this whisky shall be taken out of bond, so as to let the new stock of whisky come forward. It is said that this is not fair, because the distiller who now makes whisky can put it in bond and keep it there a year. But the distillers are now to commence under the new law at fifty cents a gallon tax. These other men were under the old law at two dollars a gallon tax. Suppose a man owed you $400,000, and the debt was now due. He comes to you and says: "I am not able to pay this $400,000; great frauds have been committed upon the country, and you must reduce this debt." Well, you agree to reduce it to $100,000, just one quarter of the debt, and then agree to take his note for that $100,000 at one hundred days. Just as soon as you have reduced his debt three fourths, he asks you to extend the time to six months, just because you reduced his debt so much. That is the proposition of the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] and the gentleman from Cincinnati, [Mr. EGGLESTON.] After you have reduced the tax three fourths, then they ask you to extend the time in which that one fourth is to be paid. There is not a man with this whisky in bond who can have the impudence to come here and ask any such thing.

Mr. BECK. I advocate the view of this subject taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY], though I would extend the time longer than he suggests. Much of this whisky, in fact all of the whisky that is made for home consumption and to be drunk without rectification or redistillation, has to be kept from one to two years before it is fit to be drunk. And the men who have been making that grade of whisky heretofore have been making it with the assurance, if not with the agreement, that if they placed it in the hands of the Government, allowed the Government collectors to take it and lock it up in their bonded warehouses and hold the keys, that this whisky should be allowed to remain, subject to the tax, until they could make a sale of it. And if the Government can get its tax before the manufacturer gets his money as it does now, that seems to be all the Government has a right to ask. That liquor has been so put into bonded warehouses, and held by the Government so that the distiller cannot touch it. There are now twenty-five million gallons of whisky in bond. It has been agreed that this shall be allowed to remain in the hands of the Government. Yet now it is proposed to require that this whisky shall be forced upon the market within one hundred days after the passage of this bill. The distillers of my district and that adjoining, represented by Colonel Jones, have in bond three million four hundred thousand gallons, the tax on which would be $1,700,000, and they are to be forced to put this upon the market in one hundred days. If that is done our distillers will have to stop business and go to work to raise money to take their whisky out of bond, or let it be confiscated and sold for whatever the speculator will give. Is this fair treatment on the part of the Government?

"But," it is said, "we have reduced the tax, and it can now be paid much easier." Not at all. Now the purchaser pays the tax. The important point to the manufacturer is that there shall be stability in the price. You now propose to compel the manufacturer to force on the market whisky made within the last six months, and which has been held back because purchasers have refused to buy, in expectation of the passage of this very bill making a reduction in the tax. If the manufacturers be now compelled to sacrifice this whisky within the next hundred days, the speculators will hold back till that time, and buy it all up at their own prices, to the ruin of the distiller. Why should not the owners of whisky be allowed as much time as the owners of imported goods when placed in bond. The Government, at any rate, gets its money as soon as the article is sold. Why should we kill the goose that lays the golden egg? I concur in the statement made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] that this interest, from which the Government expects to raise its largest revenue, ought to be fostered and encouraged, instead of being crushed out by hostile legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state briefly the reason for the insertion of this section. Every gentleman must have observed that we have entirely changed, so far as this bill may take effect, the law in relation to the production of distilled spirits. We do this at the precise period of time when no distillery in this country can run. At this time grain is commanding such a price in the market as to prevent any honest distiller from commencing operations at this season of the year. No legitimate distiller will undertake the business of manufacturing whisky until the new crop comes in, because at the present price of grain whisky cannot be manufactured so as to compete with distilled spirits that have been already manufactured. There is very little whisky now on the market; and nearly all of that which is on the market is illicitly-distilled whisky. The amount of whisky now in bond is twenty-five million gallons, and this, it is estimated, is about what is necessary for the consumption within the one hundred days following the passage of this bill.

Mr. PILE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] whether he is not aware that since this bill has been agreed upon by the committee, fixing ninety days as the time for the removal of whisky from bonded warehouses, and fixing the tax at sixty cents, whisky in bond has increased in price at the rate of from eight to ten cents per gallon?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe that is the fact.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I would like to know the authority for that statement.

Mr. PILE. I know it is the fact in my own city.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, sir, we propose in this bill to fix one hundred days as the time within which this whisky must be taken out of bond. Possibly this time might be extended or shortened to some extent; but we need to get rid, at some early period, of the present system of bonded warehouses; and especially should we get rid of the system, now that we have adopted a principle whereby the tax on every gallon of whisky is to be collected at the distillery warehouse. Gentlemen say that a distiller can keep his whisky in bond a year under this bill. That is true; but he is in a very different position from the man who has whisky in bond in the city of New York. My friend from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL,] who represents a large distilling district, must remember that there are men having four, five, or ten million gallons of distilled spirits in bond in the city of New York, and they occupy a very different position from those who have their distilleries and distillery warehouses at Peoria, Dubuque, or other cities of the West. This whisky now in bond will be required at once for consumption in the country; and I believe it will be to the interest of every man who has whisky in bond, except those who are holding it for the additional value which it is to obtain from age, to bring it on the market, because the moment this new tax system goes into operation, most of our distilleries will resume the manufacture of distilled spirits.

Mr. O'NEILL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] closed his remarks by substantially expressing his surprise that anybody should assume to know anything about the commercial affairs of this country which he does not know, or should have considered any facts he has not specially considered. I have the vanity to assume that I do know a little more about the particular question before us than he does, and to know that the whisky of which I speak, that is in bond, has not been bought by speculators, although it may be true that persons may have attempted, and perhaps successfully, to speculate by purchasing new whisky in bond. I know one warehouse in the district of my friend from Alleghany, [Mr. MOORHEAD,] the owners of which have given bonds to the Government to the extent of $1,500,000 on whisky of their own distilling. I know, too, that that firm has in two years paid the Government over two million dollars, and that the whisky in bond belonging to it is much of it three or four years old, and that as an offset to the loss of interest and cost of storage, it has more than doubled in commercial value. They hold the fact that it is in bond as a certificate of its purity, age, and consequent value. It adds to its commercial value, as it shows it has not been doctored, but went there directly from the still of a well-known distiller of fine whisky. I ask gentlemen whether they are willing to sacrifice the men who are legitimately engaged in trade because the gentleman from Illinois asserts that others are taking advantage of the contingencies and seeking to profit by them? The Government will get from day to day the tax on the whisky demanded for consumption. These men have been paying tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands, and millions of dollars tax on this article of whisky, and indeed have paid all the tax that has been collected. The illicit distiller or dealer in whisky sought the concealment of night and got his goods off his hands as quickly as he could. His dealings have been surreptitious, while the honest dealer has sent his goods into bond. They are in the bonded warehouses. Yet, sir, this provision and the argument of the gentleman from Illinois are calculated to hurt the honest distiller whom we have already ruined by failing to collect the tax from the illicit distillers who were underselling him.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the gentleman yield me a minute?

Mr. KELLEY. I have but five minutes, and cannot yield twenty per cent. of the time allowed me.

The provision I am striving to amend affects those whom we have almost ruined because they were disposed to pay the tax while the scoundrels all round them have been permitted to sell their whisky without paying any tax. It provides that within one hundred days they must gather up one hundred and fifty per cent. upon the prime cost of the whisky. What I propose, the extension of this time to six months, is a commercial necessity. If gentlemen will traverse the block from Dock to Front and Walnut to Spruce streets, Philadelphia, they will see warehouses containing several millions of capital embarked in these fine old whiskies, and there is no reason why the Government should compel their owners to sacrifice them and prostrate the general market.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that debate be closed on this section by unanimous consent.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I want five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I have an amendment which I will offer at the proper time, and if there be no objection I will have the Clerk read it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not object.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. It is a substitute for section sixty-two.

The Clerk read as follows:

That one half of all distilled spirits now on hand in bonded warehouses shall be withdrawn within one hundred days after the passage of this act, and thereafter one half of the remainder within sixty days, and the balance within sixty days more: Provided, That this act shall work no remission of tax on distilled spirits already manufactured.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I would like to offer that amendment and make a few remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not now in order.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am told that certain distillers and others have on hand an amount of whisky that would pay a tax, if collected, of $80,000,000. Now, to collect it in one hundred days and to compel them to raise the money in that time would be a great burden. It would distress those engaged in the business seriously. It is a legitimate trade with them, and I think they should have more time. If we provide they shall pay so much in one hundred days, and then so much in sixty days, it will be a great relief to them and will be no injury to the Government. I have added a proviso because I am not quite sure but that the effect of the passage of this act will be to repeal the uncollected tax. I incline to think it will, though I give no opinion, for I presume the committee have examined it. But I have added the proviso to save any difficulty about that. I would like to be able to offer this amendment and see whether it meets the approbation of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be entertained at the proper time. By unanimous consent it will be considered pending.

Mr. PRUYN. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that from the reading of the last clause I understand it to say that it shall not take effect upon spirits already distilled. Does he intend to collect the two-dollar tax on that?

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. No, sir; if there is any tax now assessed on anything which has been removed from the distillery the passage of this act before its collection I fear will be a remission of the whole of that tax. I give no positive opinion about it, however. I have added the proviso by way of precaution.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend the section by inserting the following:

Provided, That the days in which the market price in New York during that time shall be less than one dollar per proof gallon, including the tax, shall not be counted in the one hundred days.

If that amendment is adopted it will prevent any considerable loss, beyond the mere cost of the production of the distilled spirits to the owner. Suppose that the price in New York is only eighty cents, the tax included. Fifty cents of that goes to the Government, leaving thirty to be returned to the manufacturer. Now, I affirm here that there is not a gallon of whisky in New York which was made out of corn that cost less than fifty cents a gallon without the tax; and when you add a tax of fifty cents that makes it cost one dollar. Now, if you want to do justice and at the same time collect your revenue, do not force a sacrifice upon the owners of these spirits; and if you do not want to, then count only the days to make up the one hundred when the market price shall be at least one dollar a proof gallon, which amounts perhaps to the mere cost, including the tax.

But I have other objections to this section. I am in favor of the original proposition to strike out this section. It has no business in the bill. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that when every gallon of the twenty-five millions now in bond was manufactured it was made under the express authority of Congress that it should remain in bonded warehouses just as long as the maker of it should please to leave it; that it should only be withdrawn from bond at his option. Had the maker supposed that within a year after the passage of that act you would have declared that unless they should pay the tax in one hundred days after the passage of this bill their spirits should be forfeited and confiscated to the Government, do you believe they would have made a gallon? No, sir; instead of there being now twenty-five million gallons there would not have been a gallon in bond at this time. Sir, it is downright robbery on the part of Congress to declare a forfeiture of twenty-five million gallons of spirits unless the tax shall be paid within one hundred days. It is bad faith, it is in violation of every principle of right and justice. On the part of an individual it would so be considered. Perhaps it can be justified by some when the Congress of the United States does it, but not by me. It will not stand the test of common justice between man and man.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KELLEY, to strike out "one hundred days" and insert "six months," there were—ayes 51, noes 49.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. KELLEY and JUD.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. O'NEILL's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend the section by adding to it the following:

And may be sold or disposed of for the benefit of the same in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "may" and inserting "shall."

Mr. STEWART. I accept that as a modification.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Very well; but I object to the amendment. It is a vicious amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 49, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGERSOLL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. INGERSOLL and STEWART were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 86.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make a point of order on that amendment. We have just adopted a clause that the time shall be six months.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. This is a substitute for the section.

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to—ayes fifteen, noes not counted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

At this point the committee rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate having proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the bill entitled "An act to admit the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to representation in Congress," returned to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States with his objections, and sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate with the message of the President returning the bill, have resolved that the bill do pass, two thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union then resumed the consideration of the
INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. KELLEY. In order to make the second clause of the section conform to the amendment which has been adopted, I move to strike out the words "one hundred days" in line nine, and insert "six months."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to add to the section, as amended, the following:

Provided, That it shall be sold at public sale and to the highest bidder for cash, and all overplus arising from such sale shall be paid to the owner.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the amendment by adding the words:

But no such sale of distilled spirits shall be made for less than the taxes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I agree to that. I accept it as a modification of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, as modified, will be regarded as agreed to if there be no objection. The Chair hears none; and the Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 63. And be it further enacted, That any person owning, or having in his possession, any distilled spirits intended for sale, exceeding in quantity fifty gallons, and not in a bonded warehouse at the time when this act takes effect, shall immediately make a return, under oath, to the collector of the district wherein such spirits may be held, stating the number and kind of packages, together with the marks and brands thereon and the place where the same are stored, together with the quantity of spirits, as nearly as the owner can determine the same. Upon the receipt of such return the collector, being first satisfied that the tax on said spirits has been paid, shall immediately cause the same to be gauged and proved by an internal revenue gauger, who shall mark, by cutting, the contents and proof on each cask or package containing five wine gallons or more, and shall affix and cancel an engraved stamp thereon, which stamp shall be as follows:

[Stamp for stock on hand. No. —.]

Issued by ———, Collector of ——— district, State of ———.

Distilled spirits. Tax paid prior to (here engrave the date when this act takes effect.) ——— proof gallons. Gauged ———, 18—.

—, Gauger.
All distilled spirits owned or held by any person, as aforesaid, shall be included in the same return, and the gauging shall be continuous until all the spirits owned or held by such person are gauged and stamped, as aforesaid, and a report thereof in duplicate shall immediately be made by the gauger to the collector and assessor of the district, showing the number of packages, contents, and proof of each package gauged and stamped; and one of said reports shall be transmitted by the collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No such spirits shall be gauged or stamped in any cistern or other stationary vessel. Any person owning, or having in possession, such spirits and refusing or neglecting to make such return shall forfeit the same; and all distilled spirits found, after thirty days from the time this act takes effect, in any cask or package containing more than five gallons, without having thereon each mark and stamp required therefor by this act, shall be forfeited to the United States. Any person who shall gauge, mark, or stamp any cask or package of distilled spirits under the provisions of this section, or who shall cause or procure the same to be done, knowing that the same were manufactured or removed from warehouse subsequent to the taking effect of this act, or that the taxes thereon have not been paid, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. All stamps required by this section shall be prepared, issued, and affixed upon casks and packages and canceled in the same manner as provided for other stamps for distilled spirits in this act, and shall be charged at the rate of twenty-five cents for each stamp.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a question of order. The Chair did not know that we were objecting to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] to the last section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to assent to the amendment with the modification.

Mr. SCHENCK. Not at all. I wanted to make the amendment not quite so bad as it was, but I tried to get a vote on it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I make the point of order that we have passed that section.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the uniform habit of this Chair—of the Speaker, carried into the Committee of the Whole—that where a misunderstanding has occurred—and the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means states that that is the case now—the Chair will go back and take the vote over again. That is the uniform practice of the House and of the Committee of the Whole, and therefore, the Chair not having heard the call for a division, now takes cognizance of it, and will order a division.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. RAUM. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment, to come in immediately before it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain an amendment to the amendment. He goes back only on this point to correct a misunderstanding.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I suppose as we have gone back and as there was no debate on this proposition, that debate is now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not; the Chair goes back merely for the purpose of a division.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask leave to modify my amendment so as to read, "the overplus beyond the taxes and costs."

Mr. MULLINS. I object.

The question was then taken upon the amendment; and it was not agreed to, there being upon a division—ayes 14, noes 92.

Mr. RAUM. I ask consent to offer another amendment to section sixty-two.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The Committee of the Whole then resumed the consideration of section sixty-three.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to this section on this point; there seems to be no provision in it for getting a tax on spirits that may be in bottles or vessels of any sort holding less than five gallons. It seems to me that opens the way for the disposition of an immense quantity of whisky which may be on hand on which the tax has not been paid.

Mr. ALLISON. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the committee have considered the point that is enough.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee have considered it fully, and I do not think there is any necessity for any further provision.

No amendment was offered to section sixty-three.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 64. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits sold by order of court, or under process of distraint, shall be sold subject to tax; and the purchaser shall immediately, and before he takes possession of said spirits, pay the tax thereon. And any distilled spirits condemned before the passage of this act, and in the possession of the United States, shall be sold as herein provided. And if any tax-paid stamps are affixed to any cask or package so condemned, such stamps shall be obliterated and destroyed by the collector or marshal after forfeiture and before such sale.

No amendment was offered.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask that the next section, relating to special taxes on distilled spirits, be read by paragraphs for amendment.

No objection was made.

The first paragraph of section sixty-five was then read, as follows:

SEC. 65. And be it further enacted, That the following special taxes shall be, and are hereby, imposed, that is to say:

Distillers producing fifty barrels, or less, of distilled spirits, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, within the year, shall pay $200, and if producing more than fifty barrels shall pay in addition four dollars for each such barrel produced in excess of fifty barrels. And monthly returns of the number of barrels of spirits, as before described, distilled by him, shall be made by each distiller in the same manner as monthly returns of sales are made. Every person who produces distilled spirits, or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who by any process of vaporization separates alcoholic spirits from any fermented substance, or who, making or keeping mash, wort, or wash, has also in his possession or use a still, shall be regarded as a distiller. Provided, That no tax shall be imposed for any still, stills, or other apparatus used by druggists and chemists for the recovery of alcohol for pharmaceutical and chemical or scientific purposes which has been used in those processes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting just before the proviso the following:

Provided, That a like tax of four dollars on each barrel, containing forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, shall be assessed and collected from the owner of any distilled spirits which may be in any bonded warehouse at the date of the taking effect of this act, to be paid whenever the same shall be withdrawn from such warehouse under the provisions of the sixty-second section of this act.

I will explain in a few words the object of this amendment, which I have offered in pursuance of the instructions of the Committee of Ways and Means. There is a special tax provided in this paragraph upon distillers distilling fifty barrels a year or less of $200, and four dollars per barrel on each barrel additional. This special tax amounts to ten cents a gallon, and is in addition to the direct tax of fifty cents. Then there is the capacity tax, which will be some three and one third cents per gallon, and the tax on sales, which, of course, cannot now be estimated. We supposed it would not be unfair, and so the committee have decided to add at least as much as this special tax on whisky in bond in order to make the tax uniform so far as regards the distiller and the owner of the bonded whisky. The distiller who manufactures hereafter is not to be charged the two dollars per gallon that distillers heretofore have been charged, but only fifty cents per gallon. The tax on whisky now in bond is also brought down to fifty cents per gallon. And we propose to put the same special tax of four dollars per barrel on that whisky that is proposed to be put on whisky hereafter distilled.

Mr. PAINE. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a communication relating to this subject which I have received from the firm of Armour, Plankinton & Co., who are beef and pork merchants of the city of Milwaukee. They also have a house in Chicago and another in New York. It seems that they have on hand about five thousand barrels of whisky in bonded warehouses. Now, I have no knowledge as to the particulars which they set forth except what I derive from this letter. But I can assure this committee that these gentlemen are among the very first business men of Wisconsin. They are not distillers or dealers in whisky, but beef and pork packers. I invite the attention of gentlemen to the facts and figures they give. By their statement it would seem that the expense incurred in storing and keeping this whisky, together with the loss in wastage, amounts usually to about sixteen cents per gallon, just about the amount of the additional tax laid by this bill over and above the direct tax of fifty cents per gallon. I ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF ARMOUR, PLANKINTON & CO.,
129 BROAD STREET,
NEW YORK, June 24, 1868.

DEAR SIR: We have noticed in the public journals a movement on foot to make a special tax on spirits now in bond of ten cents per gallon, and wish to call your attention to a few facts showing the injustice of such a special tax. We have held from necessity about eighteen months some five thousand barrels of whisky on commission at an expense as follows, namely:

Storage and labor eighteen months, 20@20c.....	$3 80
Insurance, 1 bbl. average 55 gal., at 4c.....	$22 for eighteen months, 24 per cent. per annum.....	82
Cooperage, 60c. per bbl., interest 7 per cent on $22.....	2 91
Leakage and evaporation at 4 gal. per bbl. at 40c.....	1 60

Making a total cost per bbl. of $9 13 or over sixteen cents per gallon. In view of these expenses incurred through lack of "Government protection" we think this special tax very unjust, and would thank you to give it attention when brought up.

Yours, with respect,
ARMOUR, PLANKINTON & CO.
Hon. H. E. PAINE, Washington.

40TH CONG. 2D SESS.—No. 219.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "barrel," where it occurs the second time, the words "and an additional tax of three and one third cents per gallon;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That a like tax of four dollars on each barrel containing forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel and an additional tax of three and one third cents per gallon shall be assessed and collected from the owner of any distilled spirits which may be in any bonded warehouse at the date of the taking effect of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] accept this as a modification of his amendment?

Mr. SCHENCK. Certainly not.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to explain to the committee what I understand to be the reason for this additional tax. I have fixed the additional tax at three and one third cents per gallon, which corresponds exactly with the amount of tax now levied in this bill upon distilled spirits according to the capacity of the distillery; that is to say the taxes altogether if this paragraph should be adopted, will amount to sixty-three and one third cents per gallon upon spirits to be hereafter distilled.

Now, there are certain spirits held in bond, some having been so held one year, some two, some three years, decreasing in quantity while thus stored, but increasing rapidly in value. The letter which has been read upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] does not bear at all upon this question. In spite of the storage, the leakage, the wastage, spirits kept in bond increase in value. It will be seen that if this tax be omitted those who have spirits in bond derive an advantage from the policy of the Government in not taxing old spirits in a sum corresponding to the tax to be hereafter imposed upon new spirits. For example, spirits waste, according to the statement of that letter, at the rate of eight gallons to the barrel in eighteen months; in fact, by evaporation alone, about one gallon and a half in a year. These spirits when taken out of bond will be regauged, so that a barrel of spirits which when it went into bond contained forty gallons, having been reduced to thirty-five gallons by evaporation, will pay a duty of sixty-three and one third cents per gallon upon the thirty-five gallons only, while the men who hereafter manufacture new spirits will be obliged to pay the tax upon the new spirits at the rate of forty gallons to the barrel, thus paying tax upon five gallons more in each barrel than the man who has held his spirits two, three, or five years in a bonded warehouse, because the latter escapes the tax on the amount which has been lost by wastage, leakage, and everything of that kind; while the value of the spirits has increased not in proportion to the loss in measurement and the expenses of keeping it from year to year, but in a much greater proportion in consequence of the increasing age of the spirits. New spirits are worth at the present time, minus the tax, only thirty cents, the cost of manufacture, while old spirits which have been in bond two, three, or five years, are worth from three to seven dollars a gallon over and above the tax.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I did hope that we should derive some tax within a hundred days from the large amount of whisky now in bond; but it has been the pleasure of the House to decide that we shall not get anything from this source until next winter. But, although I think a great deal has been gained to the holders, owners, dealers, or distillers who have whisky in bond, by the extension of the time to six months, still I believe it would be a hardship to exact from them to the letter all the taxes which may be calculated under the bill now proposed. The special tax at four dollars a barrel of forty gallons amounts, as I have already stated, to just ten cents on the gallon. The tax the gentleman proposes also to add may be estimated at about three and a half cents. It will be more on some whisky and less on other whisky. Supposing whisky on the average brings twelve quarts or three gallons to the bushel and a tax of two dollars, every twenty bushels of mash would be equivalent of course to a tax of two dollars on every sixty gallons. I agree with the gentleman in that calculation; but when the committee looked over the whole ground they recollected there is now little regular distilling. It will not recommence, except slightly, at this season. The heat of summer is most unfavorable to distilling, and as distilling is not likely to come into competition with the man who has whisky in bond until late in the fall or the winter there is not much advantage in the holder of whisky in bond over the distiller in this matter of competition. Looking over the ground the committee came to the conclusion while fifty cents was not a proper charge upon this whisky in bond, being what is the charge on whisky taken from the distillery warehouse, yet there ought not to be, in all fairness, added to that any more than ten cents, which will bring it up to whisky in bond. If this additional tax be extended to whisky in bond as an equivalent for the special taxes imposed on the distiller is to be based on any principle at all, as I think it is, that principle is, if you did not impose it, it would give the advantage to the dealer in whisky in bond, and give him the control of the market.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTWELL's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHENCK's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to move an amendment to perfect the clause.

The CHAIRMAN. That is first in order.

Mr. BOUTWELL. In line seven, after the word "barrels," I move to insert as follows:

And the amount of said tax upon alcohol and rum shall be allowed as drawback when said articles are exported; this drawback to be in addition to the drawback of fifty cents per gallon in this act otherwise allowed; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry the provision into effect.

Mr. Chairman, it will be recollected that the previous amendment in reference to drawback, which the committee adopted, limited it to fifty cents, the amount of direct tax. This paragraph imposes an additional tax of ten cents a gallon on distillation of whisky. The amendment I have offered will allow drawback on alcohol and rum to the amount imposed by this section, to wit: ten cents per gallon in addition to that allowed by the previous section. The effect of this is to give sixty cents, while the aggregate paid is sixty-three and one third, which makes a difference against the exporter of three and one third cents. If the amendment is not adopted I think the action of the committee is equivalent to the abolition of the export trade altogether, for the export trade cannot stand a differential duty of thirteen and one third cents per gallon. I will say this is but an indirect way of enacting an inhibition of exportation. To impose a tax of sixty-three and one third cents and grant a drawback of only fifty cents is equivalent to a tax against exportation of thirteen and one third cents per gallon. I think the committee ought to deal fairly with this question. Either we should provide a drawback which allows this business to be carried on, or we should say distinctly that on grounds of public policy we will abolish exportation of this article altogether. I will say, so far as my experience of this business extends, that a drawback of fifty cents, with a tax of sixty-three and one third cents, is an abolition of the export trade of this article. Therefore I hope my amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. This is the same proposition that we have had before us this morning once before, and which we have voted down. I do not suppose it is necessary to make much of an argument in reference to the proposition, because the question has been fully and fairly discussed once to-day, fairly considered, and fairly defeated. If I understand the vote of the committee, it is clearly in favor of making this discrimination, so that distilled spirits exported shall receive a drawback of fifty cents a gallon, and no more. So the committee have declared by a large majority, and I am rather surprised to find the gentleman from Massachusetts bringing up this defeated proposition. If a proposition is to be argued over again every three hours in the day, it will take some time to go through this bill. The best way to get it through, in that case, would be to take the bill out of committee, call the previous question on it, and pass it. Our object is to make the bill better, not worse; and I am clearly of the opinion that the gentleman's amendment will make it worse. Therefore I shall vote against it.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to amend the amendment pro forma by striking out the last word. I am sorry to trouble the committee on this subject again, and I would not do so except that this is a matter of the very gravest consequence. Unless the amendment can be passed your export trade will be very much injured, ay, I may say, destroyed. There can be no such thing as the exporting of spirits with a drawback of fifty cents against a tax of sixty-three cents and a tax on the sales besides. It is not a mere question how many gallons of spirits are exported, because that would be but a bagatelle in comparison, perhaps, with the whole amount manufactured; but it is of great consequence whether the article shall be made and shipped by our merchants to foreign countries, there to meet other merchants on their own ground.

Let me state a single fact which is capable of demonstration by anybody who will look into the matter. While England puts a very heavy duty on spirits, she allows the exporter an advantage of two pence per gallon to enable him to compete with the Dutch merchants in India, while we are putting on now fifteen per cent. Our own merchants can but struggle now with the English trade. Our trade has been falling off largely, but we hope by superior energy to compete with them unless you load us down. We take our spirits in assorted cargoes to the East Indies or Africa. Now, strike out spirits and we are not able to compete because we have not what is known as an assorted cargo. It is no small matter. We bring back gold and put it into your Treasury by the customs duties paid on the goods which are brought in the return cargoes. They are considerably more in amount than the whole value of the spirits we export. It is said that if you keep the amount down you will substantially stop fraud; but let me say to you if frauds can only be perpetrated by perjury and by sending out water men will carry water at fifty cents a gallon just as quick as they will at sixty.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Chairman, I have no views to submit in regard to the merits of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts except what may grow out of the constitutional proposition to which he has appealed in its support. But I do want to say a word in regard to that question of law, the application of which, if the apparent view of the gentleman be adopted by the House, will not be confined to the proposition now before the committee, and which, if adopted by the House as a rule for our action on this bill, or any other internal revenue bill, I think would be very unfortunate and wholly inadmissible. The gentleman says if the committee refuse to allow an additional drawback, so as to make the drawback substantially equal to the internal tax, we shall thereby, and by a mere indirection, virtually levy a tax upon exports equal to the difference between the internal tax and the drawback, and shall in that way violate the constitutional prohibition which forbids the taxation of exports. It seems to me this cannot be the law, and that constitutional consideration surely ought not to affect the vote upon his amendment. The proposition will result in this: that you could impose no internal revenue tax upon any commodity which might enter into our exports unless you also allowed a drawback just equal to the revenue tax, lest thereby you were taxing exports and violating the Constitution. Take for an illustration the article of tobacco. Suppose we allow no drawback upon it, it might be said with exactly the same propriety that because you impose a tax upon tobacco you are evading the Constitution and taxing its exportation. Now, the truth is, as it seems to me, that the allowance of drawback, instead of being a prohibition of exportation or tax upon exportation, is really a bonus offered to exportation to the amount in this case of fifty cents per gallon. We might impose a tax of sixty cents, or any other internal tax that we choose, on this article, and leave it there. Instead of doing that we propose to encourage exportation by allowing a drawback of fifty cents per gallon as an invitation to export. What the Constitution prohibits is the levying of a tax on exports as such, and because they are such. It forbids the selection of "articles" about to be exported from any State, and the taxing of them because they are exported, thus taxing them as a class as distinguished from the other productions of the State. The argument of my friend surely has no weight, for if it has it would result in prohibiting all internal tax on any article which might be exported; because the tax might so enhance its cost as to render the exportation unprofitable. In regard to the merits of the amendment, except as affected by this legal point, I did not desire to say anything.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I renew it, merely for the purpose of saying that I meant the committee should understand that the reasons which lie at the foundation of the constitutional rule that there shall be no export tax imposed, apply also in this case and probably in every other. As regards cigars, the Committee of Ways and Means have made provision for export without payment of tax.

I now withdraw the amendment to the amendment, and ask for a vote on my amendment.

The question was put on Mr. BOUTWELL'S amendment; and there were—ayes 51, noes 50. Mr. MAYNARD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRICE and BOUTWELL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 39, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, under the order of the House the committee will take a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The hour of half-past seven o'clock p. m. having arrived, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

Mr. SCHENCK. I suggest that the Clerk read down to the end of the sixty-fifth section. It will then all be open to amendment instead of only the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no objection, and that course will be pursued.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the sixty-fifth section, as follows:

Rectifiers of distilled spirits rectifying, purifying, or refining two hundred barrels or less of distilled spirits, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, within the year, shall each pay $200, and fifty cents for each such barrel produced in excess of two hundred barrels. And monthly returns of the quantity and proof of all the spirits purchased and of the number of barrels of spirits, as before described, rectified, purified, or refined by him, shall be made by each rectifier in the same manner as monthly returns of sales are made. Every person who rectifies, purifies, or refines distilled spirits or wines by any process, and every wholesale or retail liquor dealer or compounder of liquors who has in his possession any still or leach-tub, or who shall keep any other apparatus for the purpose of refining in any manner distilled spirits, shall be regarded as a rectifier.

Compounders of liquors shall each pay twenty-five dollars. Every person who, without rectifying, purifying, or refining distilled spirits, shall, by mixing such spirits, wine, or other liquor, with any materials, manufacture any spurious imitation, or compound liquors, for sale under the name of whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, spirits, cordials, or wine biters, or any other name, shall be regarded as a compounder of liquors.

Retail liquor dealers whose annual sales do not exceed $2,500 shall each pay twenty-five dollars; if exceeding $2,500 and not exceeding $5,000 shall each pay fifty dollars; if exceeding $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000 shall each pay $100; if exceeding $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000 shall each pay $200; and if exceeding $20,000 shall each pay $100. Every person who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors, in less quantities than one quart at a time, or in any quantity to be drunk at the place or on the premises where they are sold, shall be regarded as a retail liquor dealer. And any peddler who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, fermented liquors, or wines shall pay $1,000, in addition to his special tax as a peddler, the special tax of a wholesale or retail liquor dealer according to the amount of his sales.

Wholesale liquor dealers shall each pay $100, and, in addition, shall pay thirty dollars for every $1,000 of sales in excess of $2,000. Every person who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors in quantity of not less than one quart at one time, and not to be drunk at the place or on the premises where the sale is made, shall be regarded as a wholesale liquor dealer. But no distiller or brewer who has paid his special tax as such, and who sells only distilled spirits or malt liquors of his own production in the original casks or packages in which they are placed for the purpose of affixing the tax stamps, shall be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer.

Manufacturers of stills shall each pay fifty dollars, and twenty dollars for each still or worm for distilling made by him. Any person who manufactures any still or worm to be used in distilling shall be deemed a manufacturer of stills.

Dealers in leaf tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall each pay twenty-five dollars; and if their annual sales exceed $10,000 shall pay in addition two dollars for every $1,000 in excess of $10,000. Every person shall be regarded as a dealer in leaf tobacco whose business it is, for himself or on commission, to sell or offer for sale leaf tobacco. And payment of a special tax as wholesale dealer, tobaccoist, manufacturer of cigars, or manufacturer of tobacco, shall not exempt any person dealing in leaf tobacco from the payment of the special tax therefor hereby required. But no farmer or planter shall be required to pay a special tax as a dealer in leaf tobacco for selling tobacco of his own production, or tobacco received by him as rent from tenants who have produced the same on his land.

Dealers in tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed $1,000 shall each pay five dollars, and when their annual sales exceed $1,000 shall pay in addition two dollars for each $1,000 in excess of $1,000. Every person whose business it is to sell or offer for sale manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, shall be regarded as a dealer in tobacco. And any retail dealer or keeper of a hotel, inn, tavern, or eating-house, who sells tobacco, snuff, or cigars, shall pay in addition to his special tax the special tax as a dealer in tobacco.

Manufacturers of tobacco shall pay ten dollars, and in addition thereto, where the amount of the penal sum of the bond of such manufacturer required by this act to be given shall exceed the sum of $5,000, two dollars in for each $1,000 excess of $5,000 of such penal sum. Every person whose business it is to manufacture tobacco or snuff for himself, or who shall employ others to manufacture tobacco or snuff, whether such manufacture shall be by cutting, pressing, grinding, crushing, or rubbing of any leaf or raw tobacco, or otherwise preparing raw or leaf tobacco or manufactured or partially manufactured tobacco or snuff, or the putting up for use or consumption of scraps, waste, clippings, stems, or deposits of tobacco, resulting from any process of handling tobacco, shall be regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco. But no manufacturer of tobacco shall be required to pay the special tax as a dealer in tobacco for selling the products of his own manufacture.

Manufacturers of cigars, whose annual sales shall not exceed $5,000 shall each pay ten dollars; and when their annual sales exceed $5,000 shall pay, in addition, two dollars for each $1,000 in excess of $5,000. Every person whose business it is to make or manufacture cigars for himself, or who shall employ others to make or manufacture cigars, shall be regarded as a manufacturer of cigars. No special tax receipt shall be issued to any manufacturer of cigars until he shall have given the bond required by law. Every person whose business it is to make cigars for others, either for pay, upon commission, on shares, or otherwise, from material furnished by others, shall be regarded as a cigar-maker. Every cigar-maker shall cause his name and residence to be registered, without previous demand, with the assistant assessor of the division in which such cigar-maker shall be employed; and any manufacturer of cigars employing any cigar-maker who shall have neglected or refused to make such registry shall, on conviction, be fined five dollars for each day that such cigar-maker so offending by neglect or refusal to register shall be employed by him.

Mr. KOONTZ. I move to amend the first paragraph by striking out the word "fifty," in line three, and inserting "twenty-five;" by striking out the word "two," in line five, and inserting "one;" by striking out the word "fifty," in line six, and inserting "twenty-five;" and by striking out "fifty," in line seven, and inserting "twenty-five;" so that the paragraph will read:

Distillers producing twenty-five barrels or less of distilled spirits, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, within the year, shall each pay $100, and if producing more than twenty-five barrels shall pay in addition four dollars for each such barrel produced in excess of twenty-five barrels.

Mr. Chairman, I will say, first, that the amendment which I propose will make no difference whatever to the Government in the amount of revenue that will be produced. It will be observed that $200 on fifty barrels makes exactly four dollars per barrel. Now, to make each distiller who distills twenty-five barrels pay $100, and then pay four dollars in excess of twenty-five barrels, will, when it reaches fifty barrels, realize for the Government the amount fixed by the provisions of this section. It will yield precisely the same revenue, and it will give a better chance to the small distillers than they would have under the section as it now stands. Now, under the unjust and oppressive legislation of the last two years, many of the small distilleries have been compelled to stop. The consequence is that it has worked very serious injury to a number of men who have invested their capital in small distilleries. It has driven the business from the country to the cities, where fraud can be practiced with more security. It has caused men who were engaged in an honest business to stop. I make this motion for the protection of the small distillers, and at the same time it must be manifest to every gentleman that it will produce just as much revenue as the section now stands.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope that amendment will not be made. It was originally proposed that distillers should be assessed a much larger tax, of $1,000 upon two hundred barrels and less. But after consultation and consideration, in order to accommodate the demand and expectation of those representing the smaller distillers, we came down to fifty barrels. I really think we have got about low enough. I know there are small distilleries in the country; and I know it is the policy in every other country than ours, as far as practicable, to confine the business of distilleries to a few persons. I believe they have gone so far in England as to bring it down to eight persons. We do not expect anything of the kind in this country. I believe my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KOONTZ] has about twenty-six distillers, more or less, in his district.

Mr. KOONTZ. Thirty-odd.

Mr. SCHENCK. Thirty-odd in his own district. Surely there ought not to be any attempt on the part of the Legislature of the country to encourage and increase the number of these small distillers. We have by this standard put it down to a point so low that a fifty-barrel distillery, or less than one quarter of a barrel per day, is provided for. I doubt very much whether we ought to put it any lower than that. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. KOONTZ, and it was not agreed to; there being upon a division—ayes eight, noes not counted.

Mr. STEWART. I move to strike out the paragraph relating to retail liquor dealers.

The paragraph was as follows:

Retail liquor dealers whose annual sales do not exceed $2,500 shall each pay twenty-five dollars; if exceeding $2,500 and not exceeding $5,000 shall each pay fifty dollars; if exceeding $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000 shall each pay $100; if exceeding $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000 shall each pay $200; and if exceeding $20,000 shall each pay $1,000. Every person who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors, in less quantities than one quart at a time, or in any quantity, to be drank at the place or on the premises where they are sold, shall be regarded as a retail liquor dealer. And any peddler who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, fermented liquors, or wines, shall pay in addition to his special tax as a peddler the special tax of a wholesale or retail liquor dealer, according to the amount of his sales.

Mr. STEWART. The reason I have for moving to strike out this paragraph is simply this: dealers of liquors who sell to the amount of $25,000 a year now pay a tax of twenty-five dollars; dealers who sell more than $25,000 a year are regarded as wholesale dealers, and charged a different tax. Now, it strikes me that this class of business ought not to be wiped out of existence by special legislation. Yet if this tax is adopted by this House it will reduce the number of retail dealers one-half. They now have to pay not only this twenty-five dollar tax, but they have to pay a tax on their rentals, amounting in the aggregate to a very large sum. Now, I thought, and I think it was so understood by the House, that this bill was to refer specially to distilled spirits. It is well known that retail dealers in liquors do not deal and retail out whisky coming from the still, but they do deal in whisky worth from five to ten dollars a gallon—that is, the most of them do; ninety-nine out of every hundred. In any event, it strikes me that the committee will see at once that if my motion to strike out is not agreed to this paragraph should be amended so as not to be as burdensome as it will be in its present form. I think it should be stricken out and the law allowed to stand in this respect as it now is. There is nothing to be gained by this provision this year even if it should be adopted. The retail dealers have already taken out their licenses, which run from the 1st of May this year to the 1st of May next year.

Mr. SCHENCK. Under the existing law retail liquor dealers and wholesale liquor dealers are divided by a line indicated by the amount of sales. That is, every man selling less than $25,000 a year is styled a retail liquor dealer; every man selling more than $25,000 a year is styled a wholesale liquor dealer. The committee, for reasons which I think will be obvious to every one, have abandoned that arbitrary division between wholesale and retail liquor dealers. We now define a retail liquor dealer to be any man who sells in quantities less than a quart, or who sells liquor to be drank on the premises, following the much more sensible definition found in the statutes of most of the States. And we have defined a wholesale liquor dealer to be any one who sells in quantities above a quart, as, for instance, by the bottle or case of bottles, or by the gallon or barrel or otherwise, and who does not sell liquor to be drank at the place where sold. This, I say, is the distinction adopted in the statutes of most of the States, and it is founded in reason. The man who sells by the case, by the demijohn, by the barrel, not to be drank at the place where sold, sells upon a different principle and with a different degree of profit upon his sales from the man who sells by the drink. The man who sells liquor in larger quantities, not to be drank where it is sold, is treated as a wholesale dealer, whatever may be the amount of his sales, and is charged upon those sales three per cent. The man who sells by the drink makes a very much larger profit. While the man who sells by the gallon, demijohn, or barrel makes a profit of ten, fifteen, or twenty per cent. upon his stock, the retailer who sells by the drink makes from one hundred to four hundred per cent.

Mr. STEWART. But all these retail dealers are taxed by the local authorities, and taxed very heavily.

Mr. SCHENCK. I know they are; and we propose also to tax them. Yet, notwithstanding all that, the retail liquor dealer will pay under this bill one per cent., or between one and two per cent., while the wholesale liquor dealer will pay three per cent. We have fixed what is considered to be a high rate of tax, but I think not too high.

Mr. CARY. Are druggists who sell liquors as medicines embraced in this bill?

Mr. SCHENCK. This has nothing to do with them.

Mr. CARY. They often sell by the pint.

Mr. SCHENCK. There is a provision for that.

Mr. CARY. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out the first sentence, as follows:

Retail liquor dealers whose annual sales do not exceed $2,500 shall each pay twenty-five dollars; if exceeding $2,500 and not exceeding $5,000, shall each pay fifty dollars; if exceeding $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000, shall each pay $100; if exceeding $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000, shall each pay $200; and if exceeding $20,000, shall each pay $1,000.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Retail liquor dealers whose annual sales do not exceed $500, shall each pay twenty dollars; if exceeding $500 and not exceeding $1,250, shall each pay fifty dollars; if exceeding $1,250 and not exceeding $2,500, shall each pay $100; if exceeding $2,500 and not exceeding $5,000, shall each pay $200, and forty dollars for each additional $1,000 on all sales in excess of $5,000.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee to this amendment, which I offer in good faith, and which I hope will commend itself to the judgment of the House. The bill as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means taxes retail dealers; and retail dealers, as the House will have observed from the remarks of the chairman of the committee, are those who sell liquor by the small to be drank at the place where sold. They are taxed by the bill one per cent. upon the amount of their sales. Wholesale dealers, it will be seen, are taxed two and a half per cent.; considerably more. I presume that every member of the House is aware that no traffic is so profitable; certainly no traffic in spirits is so profitable as the retail liquor traffic. No other class of persons are so ready and willing to pay a tax. Whatever other evils attach to the business, certainly it is not a kind of traffic that makes the dealer penurious or close-fisted. Every gentleman who was connected with the Army during the war will bear witness that the license to traffic in spirits was one for which men would give almost any price; and the profit made from that traffic was very great. I see no justice in taxing the wholesale dealer two or three times as much as we tax the retail dealer. It is reversing the true policy. The retail dealer can afford to pay a larger percentage. His profits are immensely larger than those of the wholesale dealer, and I think we ought to take this into consideration in our policy of taxation.

The gentleman from New York says this is a thing that can bear taxation. There are things which in the language of legislation will bear taxation. The policy of the law is to collect the tax, not in one body at the tail of the worm, as under the present law, two dollars a gallon and no more, but to carry the tax along and to collect a little from the man who makes the still, a special tax on the distiller, a special tax on the number of bushels of grain which represent the capacity of the still, and then a tax of fifty cents at the tail of the worm, besides a tax upon the retail dealers and the wholesale dealers. As was properly stated by the chairman of the committee the aggregate of the tax on whisky as it comes to the consumer would be a little under a dollar a gallon. Now, sir, it seems to me the tax we have reported in the bill, of one per cent. on retailing spirits, is entirely incommensurate with the other taxes in the bill. I hope, therefore, my amendment will be adopted. The amendment, as I have offered it, commences with a small tax on those who deal to the extent of $500 a year. This will embrace those who expect to carry on the business for a short time, such as at places of amusement, or at watering places, where the traffic will be carried on only for a few months. For that class of persons I thought it proper to commence at $500. I graduate it up to the large hotels in the cities and towns, where the traffic amounts to thousands in the course of a year. I hope the gentleman will accept my amendment.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. What will the amendment add to the aggregate tax on whisky per gallon?

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman can make the calculation. It is a mere matter of arithmetic which his mind can work out for him.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I did not think the gentleman would offer an amendment without making the calculation.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is three per cent. on the amount of sales.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, that this was considered over and over again in the committee, and I believe every member of the committee, except my friend from Tennessee, came to the conclusion that the amount in the paragraph is all we can procure from this class of persons. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MAYNARD. I must be permitted to say, as "the secrets of our prison house" have been exposed, that my recollection is different.

Mr. PRICE. Let me ask my colleague a question. The estimate of the tax under this bill is one dollar a gallon upon whisky. This proposes a tax of one per cent. One per cent. of a dollar is one cent. Now, I ask whether they cannot bear a tax of four per cent?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARY. In the fifty-fifth line, after the words "malt liquors," I move to insert "except druggists and apothecaries;" so it will read:

Every person who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors, except druggists and apothecaries, in less quantities than one quart at a time, or in any quantity to be drank at the place or on the premises where they are sold, shall be regarded as a retail liquor dealer.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is so manifestly proper that I will not consume the time of the committee in debating it.

Mr. SCHENCK. By the general law, which is not interfered with, this has already been provided for. If the gentleman will look at it, he will find it provides that no apothecary shall be required to pay, in addition, the special tax as a retail dealer in liquor in consequence of selling alcohol, or selling or dispensing, on the prescription of a physician wines and spirits official in the United States or other national pharmacopœias, in quantities not exceeding half a pint at any one time, and not exceeding in the aggregate cost value thereof the sum of $300 in any one year. There is the provision saving their right to sell for medicinal purposes. It remains in the general law.

Mr. CARY. I suppose it does remain in the general law. This is a new law, and they are not excepted, and I want them to be excepted.

Mr. SCHENCK. This act does not interfere in the slightest degree with the general law in regard to special taxes.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to oppose the amendment. I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio to be to authorize apothecaries and druggists to sell spirits in cases where other retail dealers may not, without the same obligations and duties, or the same taxation. Now, I know there are a great many people who have an immense amount of confidence in these apothecaries and druggists. But I tell you those are the places where all these hypocrites, all these men who desire to be considered on the sick list, go to drink under cover. They go and take their drams at these apothecary shops. They are men who never want to pay much. They are never willing to go to a place where liquor is sold in the regular way; but they sneak into the apothecary shops or drug stores, and there get a treat out of a friend without paying a cent.

Now, if there is any class that ought to pay the tax on what they sell it is these apothecaries who allow their friends to sponge their drinks out of them. I am decidedly in favor of taxing them to the highest degree. And I am confirmed in this opinion by my friend from Missouri, [Mr. ANDERSON,] who holds his seat here for a short time with us. And this, perhaps, is the last counsel he will give us. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What amendment is the gentleman opposing?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I am opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARY.] I knew my friend would rise on this occasion, for I suppose I have included him in the remarks I have made. [Laughter.] I am opposed to all this kind of discrimination. Let everybody who sells liquor pay according to the quantity he sells, whether he sells as apothecary to those men who will not drink at any other place, or whether he sells to that honest class of people who drink whenever they are dry at the first place they come to.

The amendment of Mr. CARY was rejected.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line fifty-eight, to the end of the paragraph. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Government can be robbed of hundreds of thousands, and perhaps millions, by these perambulating distributors of distilled spirits roving under a special tax. Now, if this provision is stricken out it will result in a large saving to the revenue. Invite the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to what extent the revenues can be defrauded under this provision. I shall leave it to the committee to propose a provision in the place of this one that shall more certainly protect the revenue. If you wish to collect the tax on distilled spirits you must confine the sale of it to known and permanent places of business.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, the committee might have provided, and did once draft, a bill providing that no peddler should sell.

Mr. INGERSOLL. That is just what ought to be now, if not by direct prohibition, it ought and could be done by imposing so heavy a tax upon such persons that it would amount to a prohibition. However, I only made the motion in order to call the attention of the committee to the subject and then leave it with them.

Mr. SCHENCK. But there is a little difficulty in the way. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that you cannot prohibit a man from doing a business in anything. But you can put a tax upon it. Therefore we fell back upon that decision, and provided if they do sell that they shall be charged like other wholesale and retail dealers, and that charge is, as has been indicated in reference to retail dealers, higher, and for wholesale dealers three per cent. on everything they sell.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I offered the amendment to hear what the chairman of the committee could offer. A very high tax will probably accomplish the object. I now withdraw the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. STEWART'S motion, to strike out the whole paragraph in relation to retail dealers, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I move to insert after the word "sales," in line forty-five, the words "of distilled spirits manufactured in the United States;" so that it will read:

Retail liquor dealers whose annual sales of distilled spirits manufactured in the United States do not exceed, &c.

It has been stated in this debate that this tax is intended to affect whisky distilled in this country. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means stated in his opening speech that that was the object of all these taxes. Now, the object being to increase the tax on distilled spirits manufactured here, why do you make these dealers pay on spirits which are imported into this country?

Mr. ALLISON. We cannot distinguish.

Mr. STEWART. Why do you make your provision so narrow as it is? It will be the means of wiping out of existence hundreds of thousands of small taverns throughout the country. I do not suppose it is the intention of the House to pass a prohibitory law. We are not here to legislate for temperance or for intemperance, but for the purpose of raising revenue.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the gentleman think we ought to discriminate in favor of foreign producers and against our own producers?

Mr. STEWART. The foreign production pays a tax by way of impost, yielding a very large revenue to the country. Brandy is now selling at ten and twenty dollars a gallon that used to sell at two, three, and four dollars a gallon. The object of my amendment is to carry out the intention avowed by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, to fix a tax upon distilled spirits manufactured here, and he referred to this very paragraph, as well as to the tax on wholesale dealers, as being for that purpose. I say you are inconsistent unless you adopt my amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not see the inconsistency that the gentleman speaks of. I did say that if you put one per cent. on sales or three per cent. on sales of wholesale dealers of liquor it would be that much added to the tax on domestic spirits, but I did not say that the same amount put on the sales of foreign spirits might not also be in the same proportion a tax on them.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to ask what proportion of distilled spirits is sold by retail dealers?

Mr. SCHENCK. We cannot tell.

Mr. STEWART. It is very small, indeed.

Mr. SCHENCK. Oh, no. Whatever it is there is a percentage upon it, and so of wholesale dealers. Whatever they sell there is a percentage upon it, and you can calculate the percentage whether on the foreign or domestic, for it is the same on both. Now, the law has never made a distinction in taxing dealers, trades, businesses, between dealing in that which is foreign and dealing in that which is domestic. For instance, in the present law a wholesale dealer is defined in this way:

Every person shall be regarded as a wholesale dealer whose business it is for himself or on commission to sell or offer to sell any goods, wares, or merchandise of foreign or domestic production, &c.

Here we charge it upon dealers in spirits and we do not make any distinction between foreign and domestic spirits, and if we should it would be a premium of so much in favor of the foreign. It is true that foreign liquors pay a duty. So do all foreign goods; and yet we charge a dealer in foreign goods the same as dealers in domestic goods. And another difficulty would be that if you put your tax upon your wholesale or retail dealer on the domestic production alone, and thus give a large premium to the foreign production, you would find that every one would be drinking foreign liquors.

Mr. STEWART. They have to pay a twenty-five dollar license tax besides.

The amendment of Mr. STEWART was not agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I now move to amend this paragraph so that it will read as follows:

Retail liquor dealers whose annual sales do not exceed $7,500 shall each pay twenty-five dollars; if exceeding $7,500 and not exceeding $10,000 shall each pay fifty dollars; if exceeding $10,000 and not exceeding $15,000 shall each pay $100; if exceeding $15,000 and not exceeding $25,000 shall each pay $200; and in addition shall pay twenty-five dollars per $1,000 of sales in excess of $25,000, &c.

I offer this amendment because I represent New York city in part. Probably the committee are not aware that so far as our local tax upon this kind of business is concerned it amounts to $250. That is the local tax for the city and county of New York, Kings county, and Richmond county. Now, if you impose this additional tax upon retail liquor dealers in the city of New York, the result will be, as I said before, to drive one half of them out of business. I do not stand here as the special advocate of these retail liquor dealers. I am neither a strict temperance man, nor am I a man in favor of the use of spirits as a beverage. But I think it is our duty here to pass a law under which they can live. I do not suppose it is the duty of this House, no matter how much members may be in favor of temperance, to pass a prohibitory liquor law. If the amendment I have proposed be adopted, you will be doing justly and fairly by this class of persons. I do not know a State in this Union where there is not a local tax on taverns.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to correct the gentleman; there is one State where there is no such local tax.

Mr. STEWART. What State?

Mr. PRICE. The State of Iowa.

Mr. STEWART. Well, there ought to be such a law there. A retail liquor dealer, under this provision, will have to pay a tax of twenty-five dollars if his annual sales are $2,500 or less; fifty dollars if they are more than $2,500 and less than $5,000; $100 if they are more than $5,000 and less than $10,000; $200 if more than $10,000 and less than $20,000; and $1,000 if more than $20,000. If a man sells $20,100 a year you impose a tax upon him of $1,000. Now, that is unjust and unfair. Under the present law the license tax of twenty-five dollars a year has realized a very large sum. If you adopt this provision you will not realize one half the amount that you now realize, because you will drive these men out of business. I do not stand here to uphold this business; that is not my object. But I am here to legislate for the purpose of securing as much revenue for the Government as possible.

Mr. SCHENCK. Do you get your $250 tax in New York?

Mr. STEWART. A great many of them have been driven out of the business. The same license tax is imposed upon the large hotels, such as the Metropolitan, the St. Nicholas, and the like, that is imposed upon the corner groceries.

Mr. SCHENCK. We discriminate.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; but you do not discriminate far enough. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK. The argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. STEWART] is, that because his State has been very hard on these retail liquor dealers therefore we should be very easy on them. I do not agree to that.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. STEWART, and it was not agreed to; there being, upon a division—ayes six, noes not counted.

Mr. GETZ. I move to insert after the paragraph relating to wholesale liquor dealers the following:

And any brewer who has paid his special tax as such, being the owner and occupant of the premises on which the vaults for the storage of lager beer of his own manufacture are constructed, may erect thereon and brew lager beer for his own wholesale sales without being required to pay an additional special tax upon the same.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a question of order. I submit that this amendment is not in order. It proposes to regulate the rights and privileges of brewers, a matter which is already provided for in the general law, and which is not connected with the pending provision. The brewer is only mentioned here in order to show that the special tax upon the liquor dealer is not intended to extend to him. We do not propose by this bill to regulate brewers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GETZ. I wish to say, in answer to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and points of order are not debatable. The Chair rules out the amendment.

Mr. GETZ. I wish to give the Chair my reasons for supposing this amendment to be in order. This section relates to brewers as well as to distillers. It relates to the special tax upon brewers as well as the special tax upon distillers.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will read the title of the bill he will see that the subjects which it embraces are extremely limited, and intentionally so.

Mr. GETZ. I am aware of that; but this section relates to brewers as well as distillers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend by adding after the word "dollars," in line sixty-five, the following:

Provided, That all sales of distilled spirits in bond for export shall not be included in the account of sales upon which the special tax shall be assessed.

So that the first clause of the paragraph will read as follows:

Wholesale liquor dealers shall each pay $100, and in addition, shall pay thirty dollars for every $1,000 of sales in excess of $2,000: Provided, That all sales of distilled spirits in bond for export shall not be included in the account of sales upon which the special tax shall be assessed.

Mr. Chairman, the wholesale liquor dealer may act at the same time as the commission merchant of the distiller. An alcohol distiller may be also a distiller of high wines, carrying on two distilleries and manufacturing both articles, with the ultimate view of exportation. The facilities for sale may be enjoyed to a greater degree by the wholesale dealer, who perhaps has his agents in foreign countries, and into whose hands the manufacturer of alcohol puts his alcohol for the purpose of negotiating foreign sales. Now, by my amendment I propose to provide that such sales shall not be taxed. By this bill it is proposed to tax them thirty dollars on every $1,000, no matter though the alcohol may be sold for export. That is a burden upon the export trade which it is not able to bear. It is not worth while, perhaps, to discuss this question at any great length, for there seems to be a determination here that no export trade shall be carried on from the United States.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to move an amendment somewhat similar to that which was proposed by my colleague, [Mr. STEWART.] I move to amend, so that in the paragraph commencing at line forty-five the amount of sales of liquor dealers upon which tax is imposed shall be doubled, so as to make the amount of tax upon sales one half that proposed in the paragraph. I was sorry that the amendment of my colleague was voted down with so much unanimity. The provisions of this bill, as he has remarked, amount almost to prohibition, and will result not in increasing our revenue from this service, but in reducing it. It seems to me from the manner in which taxes are piled upon the liquor traffic that it is to a certain extent an Ishmael, against whom every man's hand is raised, though I do not know whether it is considered as raising its hand against every man. It seems to me that we might almost as well adopt a provision that no man shall be concerned in the sale of liquor. I do not desire to occupy time, but I beg the House to lighten to some extent the burdens upon this trade. The object of the committee seems to be to tax it in every way. In addition to all other taxes the men engaged in this business have to pay their regular tax on their incomes. We have piled tax upon tax, precedent upon precedent, line upon line, and buried it under tax so deep it can never survive.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEWART. I move to strike out the following:

And any retail dealer or keeper of a hotel, inn, tavern, or eating-house, who sells tobacco, snuff, or cigars, shall pay, in addition to this special tax, the special tax as dealer in tobacco.

Mr. Chairman, the law now is that retail dealers, keepers of hotels, inns, and taverns selling tobacco, cigars, and snuff are exempted. When the first bill was reported I made the same motion I now make, to strike out these words. That amendment was reserved for a vote in the House. It fell, of course, with the bill. In this new bill they have added retail dealers. This will apply to every confectioner, every apothecary, every small store throughout the country where they may sell cigars, snuff, or tobacco. There is not one of them which will not have to pay this tax, although they may not sell more than twenty-five or thirty dollars' worth of cigars and tobacco. I think it is unjust and unfair to impose burdens upon this class of business. I presume, Mr. Chairman, it was overlooked by the committee, and I now call their attention to it. It applies to every little retail dealer throughout the country, places where they do not sell liquor, but where they keep cigars, tobacco, and snuff for the convenience of their customers. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 88.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOODWARD. I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That when the manufacturers of, or dealers in tobacco, snuff, or cigars shall have paid the taxes imposed by this act, they shall have the right to sell the same in parcels, by sample or otherwise, in all the States of the Union subject only to the payment of such State taxes or licenses as are imposed by the laws of the respective States upon their own citizens who are engaged in the same trade or business.

Mr. Chairman, if my amendment is understood by the ruling power in this House there will be no objection to it. The effect of that amendment will be to give the dealers in tobacco, snuff, and cigars in one State a right to sell them in another State subject to no other tax than that which the dealers in that State are subject to. The equity and justice of that provision will occur to every fair mind. I may say, for the information of gentlemen, if they do not know it now, in many States there is a sort of "fencing out" legislation practiced. Dealers from other States are forbidden to come there and sell their wares by the small. We have such laws in Pennsylvania. Dealers of one part of Pennsylvania are forbidden to come in other parts. Dealers from other States are excluded. This article of cigars and tobacco is easily transported; and, in point of fact, is often sold in another State from that in which it has been raised or manufactured. We produce some in our own State, and we want to go into other States to sell it subject to no other taxes than those which dealers in the other States may be subjected to. We wish to be able to go to any State in the Union and there have the same rights in disposing of this article as the citizens of that State. That is the object and purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MULLINS. I shall be glad to understand the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the way he represents it. It astonishes me, Mr. Chairman, that an argument of such a character should come from the quarter it does; for, sir, the Constitution lays down the doctrine that there shall be no restriction upon the trade between the States. That is the right guaranteed in the Constitution. Tobacco may go into any State without paying the tax, except as provided in the general law. I do not see why it should not be taxed just as any other tobacco or snuff or cigars, or in whatever shape they may manufacture it. That course of trade is laid down by laws a little higher than the one that it is proposed now to pass, and being a little higher how are you going to get over it? It is indirectly coming up and saying there is a constitutional barrier in the way. I have always understood that the Democratic party was the most strenuous in regard to constitutional powers. Now, I do not accuse them of trying to get around this in any way, but they seem to ignore it, and they cannot do it my presence without my holding them up to their own standard. Therefore I cannot see the propriety of the amendment, and I shall oppose it.

The amendment of Mr. WOODWARD was disagreed to.

Mr. CARY. I move to strike out the words "retail dealer or;" so that it will read:

And any keeper of a hotel, inn, tavern, or eating-house, who sells tobacco, snuff, or cigars, shall pay, in addition to his special tax, the special tax as a dealer in tobacco.

It seems to me that in little country places where we have small groceries and confectionery shops and they keep a little tobacco and snuff for sale they ought not to be required to pay this tobacco tax.

Mr. UPSON. Not five dollars?

Mr. CARY. No, sir; not anything. They only keep it for accommodation and not as matter of profit. I see a propriety in requiring keepers of taverns or eating-houses to pay the tax, because it is a legitimate part of their business. But these little groceries should not be required to pay a license for selling a little snuff and plug tobacco. It is an unnecessary tax upon them.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I have heard from the "Cross-roads" lately, and the answer was "Bascom is willing." [Laughter.] The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend in the first line of the paragraph by inserting after the word "sales" the words "exceed five hundred dollars and," so that it will read:

Dealers in tobacco, whose annual sales exceed $500 and do not exceed $1,000, shall each pay five dollars.

It seems to me there is great force in the argument suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARY,] that in these small communities where for the mere conveniences of their customers the shops keep a small amount of tobacco, cigars, and snuff, it is really a very great hardship to require them to pay a tax of five dollars. The effect of it will be to prevent in many communities where these articles are matters of almost absolute necessity the keeping of it on hand for sale at all. It seems to me the tax should not be imposed so as to work a petty annoyance to the whole community. I suggest therefore an exemption of $500 shall be made. It is well enough to impose the tax where the sales exceed $500 a year.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the gentleman had only read a few lines lower he would have found a definition of dealers in tobacco and snuff to be "every person whose business it is to sell or offer for sale manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars." I think every man whose business it is to sell these articles should pay five dollars. The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to insert after the words "eating-house" the words "who has paid a special tax as such shall not be required to pay additional tax for selling." The object of this is that the retail dealer or tavern keeper or keeper of an eating-house who, in addition to having paid the tax on any or all of these, as the law provides, shall not be required to pay this additional tax. The amendment would be nearly the same if we had proposed to insert one word in the clause, so that it will read "any retail dealer or keeper of a hotel, inn, tavern, or eating-house, who sells tobacco, snuff, or cigars, shall not pay, in addition to his special tax the special tax as a dealer in tobacco." Now, sir, there are a great many tavern and eating-house keepers where the profits on all the cigars sold during the year would not amount to the tax imposed by this section of the bill. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line seventy-five, on page 87, insert: But the payment of any special tax imposed by this act shall not be held or construed to exempt any person carrying on any trade, business, or profession from any penalty or punishment therefor provided by the laws of any State; nor to authorize the commencement or continuance of any such trade, business, or profession contrary to the laws of any State, or in places prohibited by municipal law; nor shall the payment of any such tax be held or construed to prohibit or prevent any State from placing a duty or tax on the same trade, business, or profession for State or other purposes.

Mr. PRICE. The only object of that amendment is to prevent a conflict between the act of Congress and the acts of the Legislatures of some of the States which have legislated on this question; and I offer it with the assent of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SCHENCK. Oh, no. I mean to raise a question of order on it.

Mr. PRICE. I supposed I offered it with the consent of the committee, but it appears that I do not. I will say, then, that it is just as the Committee of Ways and Means reported it in the original bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a question of order. The amendment is general legislation on the subject of special taxes, all of which is now provided for in section seventy-seven of the act of 1866, which is now in force and is not repealed by this bill. The only difference is that it is better expressed in the amendment of the gentleman, and he got it out of our general bill which he helped to lay aside.

Mr. PRICE. I give the gentleman credit for having put it in very good shape, and I want to adopt it here.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is general legislation, and is to be found now in section seventy-seven of the act of 1866.

Mr. PRICE. This will be an act passed subsequent to that, and it will be held in some States that this law repeals the other, and therefore I want this passed so as to "make assurance doubly sure."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order for two reasons: it is made too late, and the Chair regards the amendment as germane to the bill.

The question was put on the amendment; and there were—ayes 51, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire now to know whether it is in order to move any general sections?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will observe that, in the first place, he allowed the amendment to be offered and read at the Clerk's desk, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] to consume half of his five minutes in its defense, before the point of order was made; and, in the next place, that the amendment proposes merely to exclude a certain conclusion which might otherwise be derived from this act, and it must, therefore, be entirely pertinent and in order at this time.

Mr. COBURN. I move to insert after the word "sales," in line ninety-five, the words "whose annual sales exceed $100 and." The object of that amendment is to provide that all persons who may sell tobacco in amounts less than $100 a year shall not have to pay the five-dollar tax. There are many dealers throughout the country whose exclusive business is not to sell tobacco, but who keep and sell tobacco merely for the accommodation of their customers, and to compel a man who sells only a small amount to pay a tax of five dollars seems to me to be a very small business.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move on page 88, line one hundred and two, after the words "eating-house," insert the words "whose annual sales of tobacco, snuff, and cigars exceed $500." The amendment last adopted does not, in any way, conflict with this. This provides if these dealers are to be charged a special tax for dealing in tobacco that they shall make sales amounting to at least some considerable sum before they shall be accounted dealers in tobacco. I will modify my amendment so as to fix the amount of annual sales at $100.

Mr. PILE. This amendment is not necessary; it is provided for elsewhere in the bill.

Mr. MYERS. If that is the case, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend this section by striking out the first paragraph, which has been amended to read as follows:

Distillers producing fifty barrels or less of distilled spirits, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, within the year, shall each pay $200; and if producing more than fifty barrels shall pay in addition four dollars for each such barrel produced in excess of fifty barrels. And monthly returns of the number of barrels of spirits, as before described, distilled by him, shall be made by each distiller in the same manner as monthly returns of sales are made. Every person who produces distilled spirits or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who by any process of vaporization separates alcoholic spirit from any fermented substance, or who, making or keeping mash, wort, or wash, has also in his possession or use a still, shall be regarded as a distiller: Provided, That a like tax of four dollars on each barrel, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, shall be assessed and collected from the owner of any distilled spirits which may be in any bonded warehouse at the date of the taking effect of this act, to be paid whenever the same shall be withdrawn from such warehouse under the provisions of the sixty-second section of this act: And provided, That no tax shall be imposed for any still, stills, or other apparatus used by druggists and chemists for the recovery of alcohol for pharmaceutical and chemical or scientific purposes which has been used in those processes.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

Tobacco and snuff.

SEC. 66. And be it further enacted, That upon tobacco and snuff which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes:

On snuff, manufactured of tobacco or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, damp, pickled, scented, or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use, a tax of thirty-two cents per pound. And snuff-flour, when sold or removed for use or consumption, shall be taxed as snuff, and shall be put up in packages and stamped in the same manner as snuff.

On all chewing tobacco, fine-cut, plug, or twist; on all tobacco twisted by hand or reduced from leaf into a condition to be consumed or otherwise prepared, without the use of any machine or instrument and without being pressed or sweetened; and on all other kinds of manufactured tobacco, not herein otherwise provided for, a tax of thirty-two cents per pound.

On all smoking tobacco exclusively of stems or of leaf, with all the stems in and so sold, the leaf not having been previously stripped, butted, or rolled, and from which no part of the stems have been separated by sifting, stripping, dressing, or in any other manner, either before, during, or after the process of manufacturing; on all fine-cut shorts, the refuse of fine-cut chewing tobacco which has passed through a riddle of thirty-six meshes to the square inch by process of sifting; and on all refuse scraps and sweepings of tobacco, a tax of sixteen cents per pound.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend this section by inserting in the first paragraph the word "or" between the words "dry" and "damp;" so as to make the provision conform to the present law in that respect.

Mr. LOGAN. It is exactly right now.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have made the motion. That is the way it is in the present law.

The amendment of Mr. GARFIELD was not agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move to strike out the last two paragraphs, relating to chewing tobacco and smoking tobacco, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "on all chewing and all smoking tobacco, a tax of twenty-four cents per pound." The rates fixed by this bill on these two kinds of tobacco, and, if I may use the expression, on the different species of the same kind, are thirty-two cents and sixteen cents per pound; just as last year we had different rates of taxes for different kinds of cigars and cigars of different values. When I offered an amendment last year to tax all cigars at the rate of five dollars per thousand great objection was made to it, and a sliding scale was advocated. But the amendment was adopted, and now the whole country agrees that that plan is best. Now, if we fix the rate of tax at sixteen cents per pound on all fine-cut shorts or refuse tobacco, that will allow a large amount of tobacco such as killikinnick, Lynchburg, &c., to come in under this head. Cigars are now taxed five dollars per thousand. It takes twenty pounds of tobacco to make a thousand cigars, so that the tax is about twenty-five cents per pound. The material of which cigars are now made can avoid this tax of twenty-five cents per pound by being cut up into refuse smoking tobacco, which it is proposed to tax only sixteen cents per pound. Now, I think the tax on the higher grades of tobacco should be reduced, and the tax on the lower grades raised, so as to make the two alike.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the tax on smoking tobacco will not be raised eight cents per pound, as proposed by this amendment.

The amendment of Mr. MYERS was not agreed to.

Mr. GRAVELLY. I move to amend the clause imposing a tax on chewing tobacco by striking out "thirty-two cents" and inserting "ten cents." I think as great frauds are being practiced in the collection of the revenue from the tax on tobacco as on whisky. And the very reason for which the Committee of Ways and Means changed or reduced the tax on whisky from two dollars to fifty cents will, in my opinion, operate for the reduction of the tax on tobacco from its present rate of forty cents to the rate of ten cents, as proposed by my amendment. The tax on tobacco is higher in proportion to its actual value, previous to the imposition of the tax, than the tax on any other article upon which a revenue tax is now levied. I am, and have been, acquainted with the original value of tobacco; and I know that from five to ten cents per pound was all that it could be sold for in market. For the last two or three years the tax has been forty cents per pound, or five hundred per cent., at least, upon the original value of the article. In my opinion there are a great many frauds practiced in the southern States, especially in Virginia, in Maryland, in Kentucky, and, to some extent, in Missouri, in consequence of the enormous tax now imposed upon tobacco. The very same motive for practicing fraud which has been furnished by the whisky tax is afforded by the tax on tobacco. My humble opinion is that if the tax were fixed at ten cents per pound we should, with the present arrangements for the collection of the tax, derive from tobacco more than double the amount of revenue that will be collected if the tax be retained at thirty-two cents.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "sixteen" instead of "ten." Mr. Chairman, the attempt to discriminate between the various grades of chewing or smoking tobacco has been proved by experience to be impracticable. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GRAVELY] in the opinion that with the present high rate of tax on tobacco, we cannot prevent the frauds in the collection of the revenue. From the great facility with which tobacco can be grown almost every person in every State of the Union can be his own producer of this article, and to a great extent his own manufacturer. Hence the frauds upon the revenue with reference to this article cannot be successfully prevented without a material reduction in the amount of the tax heretofore levied. There is scarcely a State in this Union in which the article of tobacco cannot be raised. There is scarcely a farmer in the country, scarcely the owner of a lot in a city, who cannot, without great labor, raise enough of this article for the consumption of himself and his family. It is idle to attempt by any machinery, however complicated or elaborate, to prevent the frauds which must be practiced if we undertake to collect an inordinate and excessive tax upon this article. Because of the difficulty of distinguishing between the various grades of this article and because of the facility with which it can be raised, I have thought it proper to offer this amendment to the amendment.

On the amendment to the amendment there were—ayes 39, noes 64.

Mr. PHELPS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. GRAVELY, it was not agreed to.

Mr. CARY. I move to amend by striking out in the last line of the section the word "sixteen" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twelve." Mr. Chairman, we are all anxious that the Government shall derive as much revenue as possible from these luxuries, tobacco and whisky; but we must be careful lest by excessive taxation we defeat the purpose we have in view. Now, sir, you can buy a hoghead of tobacco, such as is used for the manufacture of smoking tobacco, for forty dollars; that is, at the rate of four cents a pound, a hoghead containing a thousand pounds. By this bill, as reported, the tax upon that forty dollars is $160, the profits of the manufacturer being ten dollars at most. What is the effect of this enormous taxation, a taxation so much disproportioned to the cost of production? A man who is in the habit of smoking his pipe, instead of buying a cheap manufactured article and paying twenty-one cents a pound for it will buy the best quality of leaf tobacco for ten cents a pound, and, rubbing it up in his hands, put it in his pipe and smoke it, thereby depriving the Government of the tax. This is now the practice to a very great extent in the West. Grocers in the country buy the leaf tobacco instead of the manufactured tobacco, thus getting a better article; which they can sell at one fourth of the price of the manufactured article. Thus the Government loses its revenue from this source altogether. Even if this tax be fixed at twelve cents, as proposed in my amendment, that would be $120 on tobacco costing forty dollars, which would be excessive. I think, however, the article can stand this, but no more. I hope the committee will consider this matter, and not adopt such legislation as must defeat the object we have in view, the raising of revenue from smoking tobacco.

For similar reasons I am in favor of making the tax on chewing tobacco twenty-four cents. By insisting upon too high a tax we shall only defeat its collection, as we have done in the case of whisky. My conviction is (and I will take this occasion to express it) that even a tax of fifty cents on whisky is excessive; that with a tax of twenty cents the Government would derive far more revenue.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, under the present law there are different classes of tobacco for the purpose of taxation, at forty cents, thirty cents, and fifteen cents. When the committee turned their attention to this subject they had before them, at various times, representatives from almost every city and town in the country where tobacco is manufactured, and the representatives of almost every house engaged in the manufacture of tobacco. When they first came before the committee they thought it was better to have two classes than three. They proposed originally the tax should be eight and sixteen cents; afterward, however, on consideration of the whole matter with the committee and with different tobacco interests, they settled down on sixteen and thirty-two, which the committee recommend in the bill reported to the House. The reason the committee recommend sixteen and thirty-two instead of ten, thirteen, and sixteen is that in small packages of from one ounce to sixteen ounces of smoking, fine-cut, and chewing tobacco there is convenience in having the multiple in figures. This division into ounces for the purpose of taxation meets with the general approval of the whole tobacco trade, inasmuch as we have agreed to the system of the collection of tax by stamps. On one ounce it is one cent, on two ounces two cents, and so on, thus showing the advantage of the multiple system making a correspondence between the number of ounces and the number of cents tax. This is the reason which controlled the committee. It is only lately, a great many tobacco men having settled down upon sixteen and thirty-two, have begun to cast around to see whether they could not get some one to move it down lower.

Mr. CARY's amendment was rejected.

No further amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 67. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act all manufactured tobacco shall be put up and prepared by the manufacturer for sale, or removal for sale or consumption, in packages of the following description, and in no other manner:

All snuff in packages of one, two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces, except yellow snuff, which may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in bladders not exceeding ten pounds each.

All fine-cut chewing tobacco, and all other kinds of tobacco not otherwise provided for, in packages of one half, one, two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces, except that fine-cut chewing tobacco may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in wooden packages of ten, twenty, forty, and sixty pounds each.

All smoking tobacco, all fine-cut shorts which can be passed through a riddle of thirty-six meshes to the square inch, and all refuse scraps and sweepings of tobacco, in packages of two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces each.

All cavendish, plug, and twist tobacco in wooden packages not exceeding two hundred pounds net weight.

And every such wooden package shall have printed or marked thereon the manufacturer's name and place of manufacture, and the registered number of the manufactory, and the gross weight, the tare, and the net weight of the tobacco in each package: Provided, That these limitations and descriptions of packages shall not apply to tobacco and snuff transported in bond for exportation and actually exported.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to strike out the following:

Except yellow snuff, which may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in bladders not exceeding ten pounds each.

Mr. Chairman, I do this because it is a radical change in the law. As I understand, Scotch or dried snuff is now packed in kegs. It has been packed in kegs for years beyond the memory of living man. Now, why the committee should seek to confine the manufacturers of snuff and tobacco to these small packages I cannot see. It cannot be for the benefit of the Government. It cannot increase the amount of taxes. It can do nothing but create great inconvenience to the manufacturers of snuff, and subjecting them to great expense and loss. I also understand, while you reduce the packages, you are increasing the price of snuff to consumers some four or five cents a pound, whereas if it is continued to be packed in kegs, as now, you have it in such shape as to make it cheaper. I speak from information I have received from gentlemen who represent a firm which has paid a tax of $80,000 in five months, or about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in one year. I wish to know why this firm, in whose behalf I speak, having been in business almost a century, following the business of their ancestors, reputable and honest, should not be permitted to pack snuff as they have always packed it? The gentleman asks me why they did not come before the committee. I do not know. I suppose they did not imagine the committee would recommend such a change as this. Why, sir, it will take days to stamp these small packages, and there will be unavoidable and endless mistakes, and the honest manufacturer may be branded as seeking to defraud the Government out of this tax without any intention of so doing. I do not see the necessity of this clause, and I hope it will be stricken out.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not think there will be the least inclination on the part of the committee to strike that clause out. We have had before us tobacco manufacturers, and, if we are not mistaken, this very firm that the gentleman represents.

Mr. O'NEILL. I did not say I represented this firm or any other. I spoke from information obtained from this firm as given me, and I believed them to be intelligent men who should be heard here.

Mr. SCHENCK. These persons can only be heard in the committee-room or through the gentleman, or some other member on this floor. Now, sir, the snuff manufacturers came before the committee, and they all represented the great convenience in preventing fraud if we would apply this rule of small packages of different sizes for snuff. We had the manufacturers of yellow snuff before us. I recollect particularly one from New Jersey. They agreed on all hands that while the other kinds might be put up in a different way the Scotch snuff should be put up in bladders. So a compromise was made in the committee, and this section was prepared according to the representations made by them of that which they could submit to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of replying to the chairman of the committee. I have in my hand a protest against this change in the law coming from these same people. Now, I cannot say that they are less intelligent than the manufacturers from New York referred to. They did not appear before the committee; that is very likely. I do not know why. Perhaps they did not dream of any such change in the law by the committee. But I do not care from what manufactories these gentlemen appeared before the committee. I speak for almost the first manufacturers of Scotch snuff in the country, who have always had their snuff packed in kegs or bladders, and to make this change would be very inconvenient. I hope the amendment will prevail. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to strike out the latter part of the paragraph, as follows:

Except that fine-cut chewing tobacco may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in wooden packages of ten, twenty, forty, and sixty pounds each.

Also, by inserting the word "only" after the word "ounces;" so that the paragraph will read:

All fine-cut chewing tobacco, and all other kinds of tobacco not otherwise provided for, in packages of one half, one, two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces only.

Mr. Chairman, during the week past a very intelligent committee of gentlemen connected with the manufacture of tobacco have been here, and they have drawn up a memorial or statement, a copy of which has been sent to each member, and one of which I hold in my hand. Now, sir, if you allow fine-cut chewing tobacco to be put up in packages of from ten to sixty pounds in the way here provided the wholesale dealer will send them to the retail dealer, the retail dealer will open them and put them up again, and you never will be able to tell what is paid and what is not paid. The consequence will be that never one pound that is mixed in the large package will pay a cent of tax. The representatives of three of the largest manufacturers in New York have been here and declared that if you pass this law containing the words which I propose now to strike out, you will not and cannot collect the tax on tobacco. They say that they are willing to comply with the law as you have provided it up to this time, making it up in packages of half an ounce, two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces, and they say that no dishonest tobacco under that law can well get into the market. These men say that while dishonest men have been making large amounts of money during the last year, they have not made a penny of profit on their entire business. They come here and beg that if you intend to collect a tax on these kinds of chewing tobacco you will strike out the words I have designated. I do not know how they got in there, or by what influence. No matter how wise the Committee of Ways and Means may be, they cannot fathom the designs of the men who come here and make these representations. And this clause was got in by some influence—if there was any used with the committee—intending to defraud the Government of the tax on this kind of tobacco.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York will not prevail. The whole subject was fully considered, not only by the Committee of Ways and Means, but by these tobacco manufacturers, when they were here before us two or three months ago; and the very gentlemen named by the gentleman from New York all at one time yielded their assent to this provision which we have in the bill. I know that they protest against it now; but I think that under no consideration should it be stricken out.

The question was taken on Mr. ROBINSON'S amendment; and it was disagreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the following amendment:

On line fifteen, page 92, after the word "each" insert "or in bundles or packages containing three and six dozen of the smaller packages herein provided for."

Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the attention of the House for five minutes. I have aided to perfect this bill as far as I could; but I do not believe that it is the best thing to hurry through the bill and put questions without scarcely hearing gentlemen through.

The proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] was a correct one, and, failing in that, this is the next best thing. Three of the largest manufacturers in the United States—who are entitled to a hearing because they pay one ninth of all the tax paid in the United States on this article—protest against this section; and if it cannot be amended as was proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] this is the next best thing. Let me state the proposition as briefly as I can.

Mr. Chairman, this section as it now stands provides that this chewing tobacco may be put up in packages of ten, twenty, forty, and sixty pounds each. Very well; you put up a package of sixty pounds and there is but one stamp upon it. You can take from that what you like and it goes into the market in small packages upon which nothing is paid, while these manufacturers who sell what is generally known as tin foil tobacco in packages of seven eighths of an ounce, two ounces and so on, have to put a stamp on each. The section as it now stands opens large avenues to fraud. In all this trade which has sprung up the tobacco which is so widely known throughout the United States as "century" and "solace" is put up in fractional parts of an ounce, and at least, if this wrong is to be perpetrated, do these manufacturers at least the justice of allowing them to put on stamps on a package of three dozen or six dozen as they are now allowed by law to do. I hope that this amendment will be agreed to, and that, if possible, the committee will return to their senses on this subject.

Mr. SCHENCK. The committee will try to return to their senses on this subject, and I begin by asking the gentleman whether he knows such manufacturers as Bucknor, McCamman & Co., McDowell, Dohan & Tait?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; but the gentleman may as well address his speech to the Chair, and I will answer him when I obtain the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well. These tobacco men by scores came here during the past winter. They wrangled and disagreed among themselves. At length we said to them: "Gentlemen, you differ so much in regard to what will affect your interests one way or the other, that you had better come to some compromise or common conclusion, and if we can agree with you we will adapt our legislation accordingly." They came to us afterward with "resolutions of the tobacco trade amendatory to the present internal revenue law, adopted in convention at Washington, January 29 and 30, 1868." They sat here two days. They signed all the resolutions, so that there might be no mistake about the matter. In these resolutions they distinctly agreed that packages of snuff, &c., should be put up separately, with a stamp on each package. They compromised among themselves, and afterward before the committee, by agreeing to some of these larger packages. I myself was in favor of small packages all round, although that arrangement was said to be against the western interests. But a compromise was finally arrived at between the representatives of the trade from all parts of the Union; and that compromise was assented to by the committee. I intend to stick to that compromise, and I intend to hold the gentleman's constituents to it. I have here the signatures of all those men, because, fortunately, they attached their signatures to their resolutions. These signatures embrace the names of delegates from all the different cities. The provision contained in this bill is precisely in accordance with that which was finally settled upon; and this idea of little packages with a wrapper outside to afford an opportunity for fraud, is a new thing that we never heard of until within the last two or three weeks.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to amend the amendment, so as to say "one quarter of an ounce." In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, I will say that, while what he states is correct, it is not the less true that all the small package manufacturers of tobacco desire what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] has proposed. There is an immense trade in this small package tobacco—tobacco in one half and one quarter ounce packages; and this bill is in point of fact destructive to that trade. It will root it out. It will destroy in many of our cities the business of a large number of manufacturers, who in good faith pay immense amounts of revenue to the Government on tobacco. While what the gentleman from Ohio has stated is true, it is also true that these persons thus interested, have appeared before the Committee of Ways and Means and represented their interests, and they are now here earnestly claiming from this House the protection of a large trade. The appeal which they make is the appeal of the small package men, to be permitted to live as well as the large package men; the appeal of the retailers or dealers in tin-foil packages to be permitted to exist along with the other manufacturers of tobacco.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say only one word in reference to this proposition. The small package men did complain that we were injuring their business, because they put up packages of a little less than an ounce, and yet more than a half ounce; and these small packages were sold at retail for ten cents a package, so that they were compelled to pay the tax upon a full ounce. Now, to accommodate these gentlemen, we have reduced the tax from forty cents a pound to thirty-two cents, so that they can certainly make more profit now by selling these little packages to the retail consumer at ten cents a package, than they could before when the tax was forty cents per pound. They can now put up these packages just as they please.

Mr. BROOKS. Why not serve them all alike? Why not give fair play to both the big packages and the little packages?

The amendment of Mr. MYERS was not agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. In order that I may say a word or two further, I move to amend by striking out the last word of the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, the names quoted by my friend, the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, are names of highly respectable firms in Philadelphia and elsewhere. But the gentleman did not read that to which they affixed their names. Of course he could not, in his five minutes, read this long paper. But I will thank him to show me where in their resolutions, these men ask for a provision that "fine-cut chewing tobacco may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in wooden packages of ten, twenty, forty, and sixty pounds each."

Mr. SCHENCK. I did not say there was any such thing in those resolutions.

Mr. MYERS. Very well; then the resolutions contain no such thing. Does the paper to which the gentleman has referred say anything about packages of forty pounds each?

Mr. SCHENCK. I did not say that any such thing was in the paper. I say that these men came before the Committee of Ways and Means, as every member of the committee will testify, and, after wrangling a day and a half before the committee, made a compromise.

Mr. MYERS. Then I understand the gentleman. Now, sir, those gentlemen, I take it, did not want to interfere with those who sell tobacco in smaller packages. They desired, if they chose, to sell in larger packages; but they did not wish to interfere with those who sell in smaller packages. Now, if these larger packages are permitted at once an avenue to fraud is opened; and while the honest man will pay his taxes honestly, the dishonest man will take advantage of this avenue to fraud by putting sixty pounds in a large barrel and selling it out without any stamps. If this is allowed then those men who sell in tin-foil packages should be put upon the same footing.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will refer the gentleman from Pennsylvania to one paragraph of the resolutions of these tobacco manufacturers.

They recommend, among other things, the following provision:

SEC. 6. All smoking tobacco shall be put up in two, four, eight, and sixteen ounce packages only. But fine-cut chewing tobacco shall be put up only in packages of one half, one, two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces; or of five, ten, twenty, forty, sixty, and eighty pounds each. All packages weighing ten pounds or more shall be of wood.

Then after they had made their compromise, and after they came before the committee, a question arose between these men and the western men about those packages. It resulted in the eastern men getting so far the better of western men that the latter yielded, and agreed to bring the wooden packages down to four pounds according to the provision of the present law.

Mr. MYERS. That is a sufficient explanation; but I say that the amendment ought to be agreed to in order to favor these other men, that they may put one stamp on their three dozen and six dozen packages as they formerly did, and not lose, as they will have to do under the provision of the bill, one eighth of an ounce on every package they sell. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by striking out in line fourteen the words "twenty, forty, and sixty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

All fine-cut chewing tobacco, and all other kinds of tobacco not otherwise provided for, in packages of one half, one, two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces, except that fine-cut chewing tobacco may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in wooden packages of ten pounds each.

I desire for a moment the attention of the committee, and particularly of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. I am well aware that when antagonistic interests are represented it is sometimes of great consequence to the Committee of Ways and Means to get the opposing interests to compromise and concede something for the sake of harmony. But this House ought to have something to say in reference to the safety of the revenue under any proposed bill. And I raise the question whether, in the opinion of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means and in the opinion of the House, it is possible to prevent a very large amount of fraud when we allow a barrel holding sixty pounds of tobacco to go out into trade with the revenue protected only by a paper stamp put somewhere on the head or staves. Suppose the barrel thus stamped is sent to the retailer's shop, and the manufacturer, being in collusion with the retailer, comes by night when the barrel is half exhausted and puts in thirty pounds, which has never paid the tax, may he not do this again and again and again? It seems to me there is no possibility of preventing this kind of fraud so long as a wooden package of the size of a barrel is allowed to be put into market with no other evidence of the payment of the tax than a paper stamp. Of course so large a package can be opened without the destruction of the stamp, and even if the stamp were canceled by tearing, the barrel could still be filled fraudulently in the manner I have already indicated. It should also be remembered that fine-cut chewing tobacco can be manufactured in garrets and out-of-the-way places, and the retail dealer would find many small manufacturers who could keep the barrel filled.

I am opposed, therefore, to these large wooden packages. It seems to me, whatever parties are concerned in this interest the House ought to be concerned in inquiring what doors the provision opens to fraud.

This bill requires snuff to be put up in packages of not more than ten pounds; why not have the same rule in regard to chewing tobacco? Why not put it up in packages of ten pounds with a stamp on each package? With such a provision there would be little opportunity for fraud. The stamp must necessarily be destroyed in opening the package; and the business of refilling such packages would be too small to warrant the risk incurred in practicing the fraud. But when you have a whole barrel of sixty pounds you afford as great facility for fraud as rascals could ask for, and in corresponding degree you increase the temptation.

I ask the chairman whether the point I have made is not a meritorious one which the House ought to carefully consider. I have therefore moved to strike out these three amounts, twenty, forty, and sixty, so that a stamp shall certainly cover the package and be destroyed in opening it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOGAN. I think I can explain to the gentleman's satisfaction. The gentleman has been on the Committee of Ways and Means for a couple of years, and has some knowledge of matters of this kind; but I do not think he has read the bill to a good purpose. He says after you have this package stamped you may open it and fill it up a dozen times with tobacco without breaking the stamp. I will be much obliged to him if he will tell me where he will get the tobacco not stamped with which to fill it?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think there is a time, indeed, from experience on the Committee of Ways and Means, I know there is a time, when the tobacco is not in the package.

Mr. LOGAN. A man in a little store would hardly go to the manufacturer to have his barrel filled without its being stamped. It is impossible to open it without breaking the stamp. It is stamped at the manufactory, and when it goes behind the counter it goes with a stamp. You cannot break the package without breaking the stamp. That is a simple proposition. The gentleman is representing about three establishments in the United States. There are three establishments in the United States which put up tobacco in tin-foil, and they desire to do so hereafter and to wipe out the western manufacturers who put it up in boxes. Here are the Messrs. Lorillard, who pay $1,000,000 taxes. They have the most extensive establishment in the United States. They agreed to the proposition, but they now come here and get some one to defeat it before the House so as to strike down the western manufacturer. I am astonished, therefore, to see a western man take their side. They wish to advance their interest to the destruction of the western tobacco manufacturers. Now, sir, we do not interfere with gentlemen putting up tobacco in tin-foil. Let them sell as much as they can of it, but do not let them interfere with those who cannot do it.

I will explain a little further. If the gentleman is anxious to have all tobacco put up in tin foil what is to be the result? Is it not as easy to take plug tobacco behind the counter, tear the package, and fill it up again? Is it not as easy to do that as to open a box of fine-cut chewing tobacco? He does not say a word about plug tobacco. They are all stamped alike. The question is that these three men wish to get the whole business of the country, and we propose they shall not do it; that they shall not wipe out the western manufacturers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. Then we shall have 'it all night, for I shall move another.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire the attention of the committee.

Mr. MULLINS. The gentleman has spoken once.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PILE. Has he the right to make another speech?

The CHAIRMAN. He has.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the last word:

Mr. Chairman, I rose to move an amendment which I believed to be meritorious, and the only answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] has given is this: that in order to refill a barrel bearing the United States revenue stamp, the manufacturer must break some other packages of tobacco also bearing a revenue stamp, and therefore there is no such opportunity for fraud I suggested. Now, it seems to me not a very great stretch of imagination to suppose that there is a time in the process of manufacturing tobacco where it has not yet been put into packages, and hence has not paid the tax; and at that time the manufacturer might, if he is a rascal, take some of it out of his shop by night and fill up the retailer's half empty barrel on which a stamp has been placed, and thus directly defraud the Treasury out of the tax on all the amount thus put in. This was the suggestion I made to the committee in support of my amendment. I have heard no remark from the gentleman nor anybody else which seems to me an adequate answer to that suggestion.

Now, another thing in regard to which I beg the indulgence of the committee for a moment. I most strenuously deprecate the practice of charging a man on this floor the moment he speaks on any subject, with representing somebody's special interest. I offered my amendment and made my remarks, I believe, in good temper—certainly with very good intentions—and with the kind attention of the committee. The gentleman immediately referred to me as representing some three houses in New York, which houses I have never before heard of. I desire to inform that gentleman that I represent no house in New York or elsewhere. This Committee of the Whole House ought to have something to say on the practical working of a proposed law, and when we express opinion, I, for one, do not intend to submit to be told that I am a partisan of some special interest in this country. That does not seem to me to be the way to argue a question before this House. Nor do I think it necessary to turn to gentlemen in the course of debate and say if they had read the bill they would have known something about it; or if they had read a little further, and come down to plug tobacco, then they would know something. I do not pretend to know a great deal. I do not know that I ever set myself up for being very wise. But I did declare before the committee, a few minutes ago, that I thought here was an opportunity for frauds being perpetrated upon the Government. I said so then, and I say so now, and to my dull capacity, no answer has been made thus far to the objection that I have indicated. If any gentleman will answer it I shall be glad to listen. If the chairman of the committee will answer it I will gladly hear him. If, however, he does not desire to answer it I have nothing more to say. But I take it we are here as gentlemen and friends, each working for the same purpose, and if any member offers a proposition nothing but that proposition ought to be spoken to in this House. The very essence of honorable debate is that it shall be impersonal. For my part, I do not intend to engage in any personalities here. I think the point I made in my amendment was well taken, and has not been answered. I hope the committee will strike out the three words "twenty," "forty," and "sixty."

Mr. LOGAN. I am certainly very much astonished at the manner and tone of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio. If there is anything in the world that I am incapable of it would be an intended offense toward a gentleman. I certainly did not accuse him of being the attorney of anybody. I certainly said nothing that ought to have caused him to be so sensitive. I said there were about three firms manufacturing this kind of tobacco. I did not mean that the gentleman was identified with them, and he did not, or could not have so understood it, unless he was desirous of misunderstanding what I said. Now, so far as dull comprehension is concerned I am not responsible for that. If the gentleman could not understand what I said, it certainly is not my misfortune. I intended no offense to the gentleman, nor did I expect to see him become so heated and exasperated. There is no necessity for that. I have the kindest feeling toward him, I am sure, and always have had. But occasionally he gets a little hot toward me for some reason or other; but I never inquire the reason. So far as regards the gentleman's not intending to submit to such things, I never have made any remark to him that would have offended the most sensitive person in this House, unless he desired to become offended. This is all I have to say in reference to that matter.

Then, sir, I repeat what I said before; without intending to say that the gentleman represents anybody—if he prefers that term I will say he represents nobody—there are only about three houses that are represented. But then I will take it he represents nobody. If I can understand myself, my intention is to try and do what is best for the whole country, and when there are hundreds and hundreds of manufacturers who would be injured by adopting the gentleman's amendment, and but three firms in the United States who would be benefited by it, I think there is something in what I have said. Now, so far as frauds are concerned, frauds may be committed no matter how we fix the law, but frauds are as easily committed in plug tobacco put up in boxes as in this kind of tobacco, and it does seem to me that the objection should be taken in reference to plug as well as to fine-cut. And when I saw an objection taken in regard to fine-cut, which affects the interests of the manufacturers of the whole West, I thought I was justified in saying that the advocacy of this proposition was only the advocacy of the interests of these three firms, and that was all I meant by it, and that is all I have got to say on the subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I renew it. I do not propose to differ at all from the decision arrived at by the Committee of Ways and Means; but I cannot consent to have the idea put forward that the interest intended to be reached and protected by the amendment offered by my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is utterly unworthy of consideration. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] if he does not know that the parties claiming this protection, claiming that large packages should be applicable to both, or that small packages should be applicable to both, are not as insignificant as he would represent?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not say they are insignificant. I know they are large manufacturers.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I simply desire to say that these three firms whose interests are affected by this discrimination between different classes or sections of manufacturers pay one tenth of the whole amount of revenue that is collected from tobacco in this country. I maintain that it is perfectly right and proper for some one upon this floor to represent so large an interest as that; and if I had not been a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and had not agreed with the committee in its decision, I myself would have offered the very amendment which the gentleman from Ohio has offered and spoken in behalf of these men who come here and simply ask this House to put them upon the same footing as others, either give them the right to use large packages, or else take that right from those who have it.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words upon this question, and I do not see any occasion for any particular heat or excitement. It is exceedingly natural that any dealers which have a particular mode of business by which they make a large amount of money, and the effect of which if the law were arranged as they desire would give them a monopoly of the trade, should seek to have the tax bill framed in accordance with their interests. I do not complain of those gentlemen for seeking this benefit or advantage, but I should complain, and I think with justice, if this House should assent to any such wishes at the cost of destroying the business of all other manufacturers who do their business in a different mode. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] says that these gentlemen only want the same privileges that other manufacturers have. Why, Mr. Chairman, all manufacturers are by this bill placed upon exactly the same footing. They have, precisely the same privileges under this bill. They can put their tobacco up in two, four, eight, or sixteen ounce packages, or they can put it up in ten, twenty, forty, or sixty pound kegs. All stand on an equality.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Has it ever occurred to the gentleman how many more stamps it takes on these small packages than on a ten-pound package?

Mr. JUDD. Yes, sir, it has; and the man who puts his tobacco up in these small packages and goes to the additional expense of these small packages intends to make his profit by such proceeding. He does not do it for the benefit of the Government. The revenue to the Government, the amount paid upon the tobacco, is precisely the same whether it is put up in small or large packages, and when a manufacturer selects the small package mode of doing business he intends to make his profit by it. If he did not he could put it into forty-pound kegs and use but one stamp. It is not for the benefit of the Government, but for the interest of his own trade. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] says how easy it is to refill large packages. Sir, I know that. How easy it is to refill whisky barrels. If a man is desirous of defrauding the Government of revenue, how easy it is to refill any large package. The same objection applies to every other kind of goods, wares, and merchandise that are contained in large packages; it is not particularly incident to tobacco any more than it is to any other large parcel or thing that the Government desires to impose an excise upon.

The question then arises, what is best for the business of the country, and what will protect best in every direction the revenues of the Government, and at the same time conform to all the various interests of business in the different parts of the country and not any particular class alone? Suppose that tobacco manufacturers in Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and all over the West have a particular mode of packing their merchandise. Now, is it right that because tobaccoists in the city of New York have a different mode of doing their business, therefore the tax laws of these United States shall be made so as to fit the business of the city of New York at the expense of all the western States? Is there any right principle involved in that? It seems to me there is not.

I now ask the Clerk to read, as a part of my remarks, a letter which I received from some of my constituents. I will indorse the character of the gentleman who writes it, and who is engaged in this business. I ask to have it read simply because I want this committee to understand this conflict of interest, so far as the business is concerned, and there is in reality nothing that to any extent involves the interest of the Government in the collection of its revenue. And I ask to have this letter read as presenting this conflict of interest better than I can do it, and I ask the attention of the House to the letter. There is another reason why I feel authorized to ask the attention of the House to this letter. There has been placed upon my desk, and upon the desk of every other member here, a printed circular urging the views of these eastern manufacturers and attacking the mode of doing business in the West.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, June 15, 1868.

HON. N. B. JUDD, M. C.

DEAR SIR: We have just learned of an effort now being made by New York capitalists to secure an amendment to the new tax bill for tobacco, which we believe and can prove would work to the destruction of our interests and our business, and we hasten to ask your attention and influence in opposition to their efforts.

We refer to the attempt to have the proposed bill altered to preclude the packing of fine-cut tobacco in kegs of ten, twenty, and thirty pounds each, and necessitate its putting up in one ounce foil packages only. And first, we will say that this provision was argued before the Committee of Ways and Means by these parties while we were in convention at Washington in January last, at which time our arguments prevailed, as is shown by the bill as reported by the committee. To rename these arguments briefly, we will say:

First. The present system of packing fine-cut in bulk has grown from experience, and as the trade increases so fast does the sale of foil packages decrease.

Second. Tobacco is fresher, is more easily kept sweet, can be moistened by the retailer, and can be sold cheaper, as less labor is expended in its manufacture.

Third. The present high esteem in which western fine-cut is held is the result of these advantages.

Against the proposed amendment we urge, First. It requires an immense and unnecessary change in our manufacturing facilities.

Second. Our fine-cut tobacco is by a peculiar process of cultivation and curing deprived of certain vegetable and chemical constituents, which are able to preserve it from "musting" in warm weather. It was first introduced by western manufacturers in the bright-colored and delicate-flavored cut which in a fair business competition has driven out all the old, dark, rank cuts of the eastern manufacturers.

To illustrate its advantage we would speak of the superiority of Havana tobacco, containing only two per cent. of nicotine—the poisonous and deleterious principle of tobacco—over the western growth of seed-leaf, containing over fourteen per cent. of nicotine; so our western fine-cuts, containing so much less of this deleterious principle, are in greater favor than the heavy, fat, dark cuts of the East. And it was in those same eastern cuts that tobacco earned its reputation of harmfulness and unhealthiness.

The absence of these makes our fine-cuts more perishable, and our experience—and we assert the same of all our neighbors—has shown us that we cannot put up these tobaccos in foil, except in the cold months, without its spoiling, unless we soak the tobacco with unpleasant and deleterious drugs. A careful comparison of figures at our convention indicated that less than an hundredth part of our western fine-cut was put in foil during the last year, a very sure indication, prima facie that such a style is unadapted to our goods.

Third. We see no reason why the Government cannot be protected without this feature.

By the proposed law a check is put upon those entering our business with the purpose of defrauding by larger bonds.

So, also, by the small-package system in smoking tobaccos, which can be made without skill, and which form the chief work of the dishonest, this opportunity is denied them. But fine-cut manufacture requires peculiar skill, and cannot be taken up by every one; hence needs no more especial protection than does the plug manufacture, which is allowed in bulk boxes.

Fourth. The proposed change would necessitate immense purchases of tin-foil, which is handled by only one or two houses in New York, and whose stock could be bought up entirely by New York capitalists to prevent our supplies coming until their goods should flood our country and, by necessity, supplant our trade.

We believe this move is being urged by a New York ring for their own profit and aggrandizement, under the specious claim of giving increased protection to the revenue.

We learn that they have sent a Government agent over the country, who, on his return, asserts that he has the assent of Chicago, Detroit, Toledo, and other western cities to the amendment. Yet we have never seen him, nor has any of our neighbors, and we are a unit in asking protection against this attempt to drive us out of our trade. Concerning the general provisions of the proposed law, we can only express our approbation. We have already asked a reduction of tax on the leaf smoking tobacco—the poor man's only harmless luxury—and trust our petition, already presented and referred, will be answered.

In conclusion, we ask your assistance in this measure, and trust the passage of the bill will, while it favors none, prove the protection of the honest manufacturer and the destruction of the hopes of all dishonest cutters.

Accept our warm wishes for your health; and believe us, yours, very respectfully.

Mr. JUDD. After the various manufacturers have assembled in convention, and by compromise agreed upon the form and mode of doing business under the revenue laws, and when that mode has met the views of the Committee of Ways and Means so that they have reported their bill in accordance with such arrangement, is it good faith for a portion of those same manufacturers so agreeing to come to this House and ask to have that agreement violated, the work of the committee overruled, all for the special benefit of their trade and not in the interest of the Government? I cannot believe for one moment that this House will sanction such an attempt.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PILE. I renew it, for the purpose of saying that the adoption of the proposition to strike out that portion of this provision which relates to twenty, forty, and sixty-pound packages will have the effect, until new factories are established and until the process of manufacture can be changed in the West, to transfer this manufacture from the West and Southwest, where tobacco is raised, to those cities where these establishments are now located which put up tobacco exclusively in small packages. I repeat, what has already been well said, that there is no more danger of fraud in connection with these small packages of fine-cut chewing tobacco than there is in plug tobacco. And barrels of whisky that have been stamped and branded can be as easily refilled or supplied as barrels of smoking tobacco. I hope there will not be such an unjust provision put in the law as will wipe out all manufactories of tobacco in the West, for the present at least, and transfer all that business to these large cities of the East.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PILE. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understood the gentleman to say that there is no difference in the opportunities for fraud between fine-cut tobacco and plug tobacco. I would ask him if there is not this difference: plug tobacco is manufactured in large screw presses, by the use of costly processes, while fine-cut tobacco is manufactured in a small way. In the one case, where such large establishments are concerned, a fraud can easily be detected; in the other it cannot. I think there is a difference.

Mr. PILE. It is easy for the manufacturer of plug tobacco to enter into collusion with the dealer. The manufacturer can send small quantities of plug tobacco to the retail dealer to fill up and replenish a half-empty box as easily as a barrel of fine-cut tobacco can be filled and replenished. I can see no difference between the two, so far as the opportunities for fraud are concerned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to ask consent that the debate on this section be closed. But before doing so, as I have been so specially referred to by my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I desire to make a remark in reply. I thought that our fury had been exhausted upon whisky; it generally rises upon that; but it seems that smoke and fire can come from tobacco as well. I see no necessity at all for any feeling in this matter. I will content myself with stating what the facts are; I have before stated them in part. All the different interests of tobacco in the United States, being well represented from the different establishments large and small, and the different cities, met together in January. Among the questions about which they were very much divided was this of putting up tobacco in small packages or in large wooden packages. The western interest generally, and I believe I may say universally, with the exception of a firm in Detroit, preferred to be allowed to go on and use the large packages. The eastern interest desired that the law should be so changed as to require the use of small packages. I myself believed then, and I believe yet, that there would be somewhat greater security to the Government in the production and collection of its revenue, if the packages were all small. And I believe the time will come when we shall come to the use of the small packages, and when they will be as anxious for that rule in the West as in the East. This matter has been carried to such a point abroad, in other countries, that they have got to the production of very small packages, much smaller than in this country.

But the trade in this country does not seem to be generally prepared for that plan; they have different modes of putting up tobacco. I have thought it expedient and wise legislation to do the best we could to secure the revenue of the country, and at the same time, as far as practicable, to do it without shocking the trade too much by changing the modes of doing the business. Therefore, after consideration and examination, I yielded my preferences to the opinions of the committee, and came to the conclusion that at this time it would be well to make a few large packages permissible in order to satisfy the trade in that direction, while in the general we required the use of small packages. Now, there is a new scheme set up of which we have heard nothing until the last few days. It is now said that the eastern men will be injured unless they are allowed to put up a great number of small packages inside of an exterior wrapper, and have a single stamp put upon the outside wrapper instead of having a stamp upon each separate package.

Now, as I said before, I think there would be more opportunities for fraud in connection with the large wooden packages than in connection with the small packages. But I think the plan proposed by this other proposition would be capable of still greater abuse. All things considered, therefore, trying to accommodate my views to what seems to be a generally fair conclusion, embracing a concordance of the greatest number of opinions, I have come to the conclusion to stand by this bill just as it is upon this subject, and just as it was agreed upon by general consent all around at the time it was made. I now ask that all debate upon this section and the amendments thereto be closed.

No objection was made; and debate was accordingly closed.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. GARFIELD, and it was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 68. And be it further enacted, That every person before commencing, or, if already commenced, before continuing the manufacture of tobacco or snuff, shall, in addition to a compliance with all other provisions of law, furnish, without previous demand therefor, to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the manufacture is to be carried on, a statement, in duplicate, subscribed under oath or affirmation, accurately setting forth the place, and if in a city, the street and number of the street where the manufacture is to be carried on; the number of cutting-machines, presses, snuff-mills, hand-mills, or other machines; the name, kind, and quality of the article manufactured or proposed to be manufactured; and if the same shall be manufactured for, or to be sold and delivered to, any other person, as agent, or under a special contract, the name and residence and business or occupation of the person for whom the said article is to be manufactured, or to whom it is to be delivered; and shall give a bond in conformity with the provisions of this act, to be approved by the collector of the district, in the sum of $2,000, with an addition to said sum of $3,000 for each cutting-machine kept for use, of $1,000 for each screw-press kept for use in making plug or pressed tobacco, of $5,000 for each hydraulic press kept for use, of $1,000 for each snuff-mill kept for use, and of $1,000 for each hand-mill, or other mill or machine, kept for the grinding, cutting, or crushing of tobacco; that he will not engage in any attempt, by himself or by collusion with others, to defraud the Government of any tax on his manufactures; that he will render truly and correctly all the returns, statements, and inventories prescribed by law or regulations; that whenever he shall add to the number of cutting-machines, presses, snuff-mills, hand-mills, or other mills or machines, as aforesaid, he will immediately give notice thereof to the collector of the district; that he will stamp, in accordance with law, all tobacco and snuff manufactured by him before he offers the same or any part thereof for sale, and before he removes any part thereof from the place of manufacture; that he will not knowingly sell, purchase, expose, or receive for sale any manufactured tobacco or snuff which has not been stamped as required by law; and that he will comply with all the requirements of law relating to the manufacture of tobacco or snuff. And the sum of the said bond may be increased from time to time, and additional sureties required by the collector, under the instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And every manufacturer shall obtain a certificate from the collector of the district, who is hereby authorized and directed to issue the same, setting forth the kind and number of machines, presses, snuff-mills, hand-mills, or other mills and machines, as aforesaid, for which the bond has been given; which certificate shall be posted in a conspicuous place within the manufactory. And any tobacco manufacturer who shall neglect or refuse to obtain such certificate, or to keep the same posted as hereinbefore provided, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500. And any person manufacturing tobacco or snuff of any description without first giving bond as herein required, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than one year nor more than five years. And the working or preparation of any leaf tobacco or tobacco stems, scraps, clippings, or waste, by sifting, twisting, screening, tying, or any other process shall be deemed manufacturing.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to strike out the following:

That he will stamp, in accordance with law, all tobacco and snuff manufactured by him before he offers the same or any part thereof for sale, and before he removes any part thereof from the place of manufacture.

Mr. Chairman, I do not offer this amendment with any view of permitting anybody to manufacture goods and not to stamp them. I know one manufacturer whose manufactory is miles away from his store-house. I know that he pays a large amount to the collector of internal revenue in a neighboring State, while his snuff is brought in barrels to his store in Philadelphia. Now, sir, I will repeat that I have no idea of permitting any goods to go unstamped; but for the convenience of the manufacturers in any part of the country, situated as this one is, I ask why we should oblige them to stamp their goods in the State or other locality where they are made, thus paying a tax, and then to have them brought to their warehouses to be broken up to be put into these smaller packages and restamped? I also would like the chairman of the committee [Mr. SCHENCK] to inform me how it will be possible to put upon these small packages of two, four, six, and eight ounces the Government stamp and then the name of the manufacturer and other labels required by the provisions of this bill. It seems to me they would be literally covered with stamps and all kinds of devices.

Mr. SCHENCK. There did not seem to be any difficulty with the manufacturers when they were here. Stamps can be engraved small enough for the smaller packages. The great difficulty is to prevent the tobacco being carried about unstamped. When it is so carried we make it prima facie evidence it has not paid any tax. I do not think we ought to change the general rule for a single case.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move to strike out "offers the same or any part thereof for sale."

This does not call upon him to pay the tax until he sells the tobacco.

Mr. SCHENCK. This is put upon the same ground as the tax on whisky.

The amendment was disagreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 69. And be it further enacted, That within thirty days after the passage of this act every manufacturer of tobacco and snuff shall place and keep on the side or end of the building within which his business is carried on, so that it can be distinctly seen, a sign with letters thereon, not less than three inches in length, painted in oil colors or gilded, giving his full name and business. Any person neglecting to comply with the requirements of this section shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 70. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every assistant assessor to keep a record, in a book or books to be provided for the purpose, to be open to the inspection of any person, of the name and residence of every person engaged in the manufacture of tobacco or snuff in his division, the place where such manufacture is carried on, and the number of the manufactory; and the assistant assessor shall enter in said record, under the name of each manufacturer, a copy of every inventory required by this act to be made by such manufacturer, and an abstract of his monthly returns; and each assessor shall keep a similar record for the district, and shall cause the several manufactories of tobacco or snuff in his district to be numbered consecutively, which numbers shall not thereafter be changed.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 71. And be it further enacted, That every person, now or hereafter engaged in the manufacture of tobacco or snuff, shall make and deliver to the assistant assessor of the division a true inventory, in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of the quantity of each of the different kinds of tobacco, snuff, flour, snuff, stems, scraps, clippings, waste, tin-foil, licorice, sugar, gum, and other materials held or owned by him on the 1st day of January of each year, setting forth what portion of said goods and materials, and what kinds, were manufactured or produced by him, and what was purchased from others; which inventory shall be verified by his oath or affirmation; and the assistant assessor shall make personal examination of the stock sufficient to satisfy himself as to the correctness of the inventory, and shall verify the fact of such examination by oath or affirmation taken before the assessor, to be indorsed on or affixed to the inventory; and every such person shall keep a book or books, the forms of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and enter therein daily an accurate account of all the articles aforesaid purchased by him, the quantity of tobacco, snuff, and snuff-flour, stems, scraps, clippings, waste, tin-foil, licorice, sugar, gum, and other materials, of whatever description, whether manufactured, (and if plug tobacco the number of net pounds of lumps made in the lump-room, and the number of packages and pounds produced in the press-room each day,) sold, consumed, or removed for consumption or sale, or removed from the place of manufacture in bond, and to what district; and shall, on or before the tenth day of each and every month, furnish to the assistant assessor of the division a true and accurate abstract from such book of all such purchases, sales, and removals, made during the month next preceding, which abstract shall be verified by his oath or affirmation; and in case of refusal or willful neglect to deliver the inventory, or keep the account, or furnish the abstract aforesaid, he shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. And it shall be the duty of any dealer in leaf tobacco, or in any material used in manufacturing tobacco or snuff, on demand of any officer of internal revenue to render a true and correct statement, verified by oath or affirmation, of the quantity and amount of such leaf tobacco or materials sold or delivered to any person named in such demand; and in case of refusal or neglect to render such statement, or if there is cause to believe such statement to be incorrect or fraudulent, the assessor shall make an examination of persons, books, and papers, in the same manner as provided in this act in relation to frauds and evasions.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 72. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared suitable and special revenue stamps for payment of the tax on tobacco and snuff, which stamps shall indicate the weight and class of the article on which payment is to be made, and stamps when used on any wooden package shall be canceled by sinking a portion of the same into the wood with a steel die; also, such warehouse stamps as are required by this act, which stamps shall be furnished to the collectors of internal revenue requiring the same, who shall each keep at all times a supply equal in amount to three months' sales thereof, and shall sell the same only to the manufacturers of tobacco and snuff in their respective districts who have given bonds as required by law, to owners or consignees of tobacco or snuff, upon the requisition of the proper customs-house officer having the custody of such tobacco or snuff, and to persons required by law to affix the same to tobacco or snuff on hand on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1869; and every collector shall keep an account of the number, amount, and denominate values of stamps sold by him to each manufacturer, and to other persons above described.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 73. And be it further enacted, That every manufacturer of tobacco or snuff shall, in addition to all other requirements of this act relating to tobacco, securely affix, by pasting on each package containing tobacco or snuff manufactured by or for him, a label on which shall be printed, together with the manufacturer's name and the number of his manufactory, and the district and State in which it is situated, these words:

"Notice.—The manufacturer of this tobacco has complied with all requirements of law. Every person is cautioned, under the penalties of law, not to use this package for tobacco again."

Any manufacturer of tobacco who shall neglect to affix such label to any package containing tobacco made by or for him, or sold or offered for sale by or for him; or any person who shall remove any such label so affixed from any such package, shall, on conviction, be fined fifty dollars for each package in respect to which such offense shall be committed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move before the words "securely affix" to insert "print on each package or."

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 74. And be it further enacted, That any manufacturer of tobacco or snuff who shall remove otherwise than as provided by law, or sell any tobacco or snuff without the proper stamps denoting the tax thereon, or without having paid the special tax, or given bond as required by law, or who shall make false or fraudulent entries of manufactures or sales of tobacco or snuff, or who shall make false or fraudulent entries of the purchase or sales of leaf tobacco, tobacco stems, or other material, or who shall affix any false, forged, fraudulent, spurious, or counterfeit stamp, or imitation of any stamp required by this act, to any box or package containing any tobacco or snuff, shall, in addition to the penalties elsewhere provided in this act for such offenses, forfeit to the United States all the raw material and manufactured or partly manufactured tobacco and snuff, and all machinery, tools, implements, apparatus, fixtures, boxes, and barrels, and all other materials which shall be found in the possession of such person, in the manufactory of such person, or elsewhere.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 75. And be it further enacted, That the absence of the proper stamp on any package of manufactured tobacco or snuff shall be evidence to all persons that the tax has not been paid thereon, and shall be prima facie evidence of the non payment thereof. And such tobacco or snuff shall be forfeited to the United States.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 76. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall remove from any manufactory, or from any place where tobacco or snuff is made, any manufactured tobacco or snuff without the same being put up in proper packages, or without the proper stamp for the amount of tax thereon being affixed and canceled, as required by law; or, if intended for export, without the proper warehouse stamp being affixed; or shall use, sell, or offer for sale, or have in possession, except in the manufactory or in a bonded warehouse, any manufactured tobacco or snuff, without proper stamps being affixed and canceled; or shall sell, or offer for sale, for consumption in the United States, or use, or have in possession, except in the manufactory or in a bonded warehouse, any manufactured tobacco or snuff on which only the warehouse stamp marking the same for export has been affixed, shall, on conviction thereof, for each such offense, respectively, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years. And any person who shall affix to any package containing tobacco or snuff any false, forged, fraudulent, spurious, or counterfeit stamp, or a stamp which has been before used, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than two years nor more than five years.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 77. And be it further enacted, That whenever any stamped box, bag, vessel, wrapper, or envelope of any kind, containing tobacco or snuff, shall be emptied, the stamped portion thereof shall be destroyed by the person in whose hands the same may be. And any person who shall willfully neglect or refuse so to do shall, for each such offense, on conviction, be fined fifty dollars, and imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than six months. And any person who shall sell or give away, or who shall buy or accept from another, any such empty stamped box, bag, vessel, wrapper, or envelope of any kind, or the stamped portion thereof, shall, for each such offense, on conviction, be fined $100 and imprisoned for not less than twenty days and not more than one year. And any manufacturer or other person who shall put tobacco or snuff into any such box, bag, vessel, wrapper, or envelope, the same having been either emptied or partially emptied, shall, for each such offense, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and imprisoned for not less than one nor more than three years.

Mr. MYERS. I would like to know whether class B warehouses are abolished in this bill?

Mr. SCHENCK. Entirely.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Committee of Ways and Means that in all these cases the language is, shall be fined so much for a small offense and imprisoned. It does not seem to me right. I think it should be "fined or imprisoned." I make this suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. It is that way now.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 78. And be it further enacted, That every manufacturer of plug tobacco shall provide at his own expense a warehouse suitable for the storage of plug tobacco of his own manufacture only; or he may provide a secure room in a suitable building, to be used as such warehouse; but no dwelling-house shall be used for such purpose, and no door, window, or other opening shall be made or permitted in the walls thereof leading into any other room or building used for any other purpose, or into the manufactory where such tobacco is manufactured; and after a bond has been given, as hereinafter provided, such warehouse or room, when approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on report of the collector, is hereby declared to be a bonded warehouse of the United States, and shall be under the control of the collector of the district and in the custody of an internal revenue storekeeper designated for that purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall be kept locked at all times except when such officer shall be present; and the stamps required by law on the plug tobacco stored in such warehouse shall be affixed, and such of said stamps as are for the payment of taxes shall be duly canceled before removal from such warehouse. And the owner of such warehouse shall execute a bond to the United States, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the collector and assessor, which bond shall be in such form and contain such conditions as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the penal sum of such bond shall not be less than $5,000, nor less than double the amount of tax on the tobacco stored therein; and said bond may be increased or renewed from time to time in regard either to the amount thereof or the sureties as the collector, assessor, or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require; and such bonded warehouse shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

Mr. CARY. I move to strike out the word "shall," in the second line, and insert "may." It does seem to me a hardship to require every little manufacturer of tobacco in the country to provide a bonded warehouse and pay for a storekeeper.

Mr. MAYNARD. He does not pay for a storekeeper.

Mr. CARY. Yes, sir; he does. He has to have one. He has to give a bond of $5,000.

Mr. SCHENCK. That objection was made to us, and after hearing it was considered that there was some reason in it, so we agreed with the gentlemen who came before us to alter the phraseology so as to make it "or he may provide a secure room in a suitable building to be used as such warehouse." That seemed to be satisfactory.

Mr. CARY. There are a great many small manufacturers who are not worth $5,000 who have $5,000 worth of tobacco on hand or more, and yet you require them all to have a bonded warehouse or a store room, and to give a bond. It seems to me this will have the effect to break up all the small manufacturers of tobacco and throw the business into the hands of monopolists. I do not see the necessity for bonded warehouses for tobacco at all except for export. They cannot move it from the factory until a stamp is put on it. They are under bond not to do it. Any man is liable to the penitentiary who takes it out of the factory before it is stamped. Where is the necessity of taking tobacco to a bonded warehouse to-day, and then after putting on the tax taking it right out again, perhaps in an hour, upon an order for it? And yet they must go through that farce of putting it into the warehouse and taking it out again. Every man is under fear of the penitentiary if he takes it from the factory before the tax is paid. I do not see that it can be guarded any further. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment, and move to strike out the whole section.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 79. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, upon the execution of such bonds as he may prescribe, may designate and establish, at any port of entry in the United States, bonded warehouses for the storage of manufactured tobacco and snuff, in bond, intended for exportation, selecting suitable buildings for such purpose, to be recommended by the collector in charge of exports at such port, to be known as export bonded warehouses, and used exclusively for the storage of manufactured tobacco and snuff in bond. Every such warehouse shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue in charge of exports at the port where such warehouse is located, and shall be in charge of the internal revenue storekeeper assigned there by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No manufactured tobacco or snuff shall be withdrawn or removed from any bonded warehouse without an order or permit from the collector in charge of exports at such port, which shall be issued only for the immediate transfer to a vessel by which such tobacco or snuff is to be exported to a foreign country, as hereinafter provided, or after the tax has been paid thereon. And such warehouse shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 80. And be it further enacted, That manufactured tobacco and snuff may be removed in bond from the warehouse of the manufactory, without payment of the tax, to be transported directly to an export bonded warehouse for the storage of manufactured tobacco or snuff established at a port of entry as hereinafter provided; and the deposit in and withdrawal from any bonded warehouse, the transportation and the exportation of manufactured tobacco and snuff shall be made under such rules and regulations and after making such entries and executing such bonds and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which shall in all respects, so far as applicable, conform to the provisions of law and regulations relating to distilled spirits to be deposited in or withdrawn from bonded warehouse or transported or exported. All tobacco and snuff intended for export, before being removed from the manufacturer's warehouse, shall have affixed to each package an engraved stamp indicative of such intention, to be provided and furnished to the several collectors, as in the case of other stamps, and to be charged to them and accounted for in the same manner; and for the expense attending the providing and affixing such stamps, twenty-five cents for each package so stamped shall be paid to the collector on making the entry for such transportation; but the provisions of this section shall not limit the time for tobacco or snuff to remain in bond.

No amendment was offered, and the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 81. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where tobacco or snuff of any description is manufactured, in whole or in part, upon commission or shares, or where the material from which any such articles are made, or are to be made, is furnished by one person and made or manufactured by another, or where the material is furnished or sold by one person with an understanding or agreement with another that the manufactured article is to be received in payment therefor, or for any part thereof, the stamps required by law shall be fixed by the actual maker or manufacturer before the article passes from the place of making or manufacturing. And in case of fraud on the part of either of said persons in respect to said manufacture, or of any collusion on their part with intent to defraud the revenue, such material and manufactured articles shall be forfeited to the United States; and each person to such fraud or collusion shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than three years.

No amendment being offered, the next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 82. And be it further enacted, That every dealer in leaf tobacco shall enter daily, in a book kept for that purpose, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, the number of hogsheds, cases, and pounds of leaf tobacco purchased by him, and of whom purchased, and the number of hogsheds, cases, or pounds sold by him, with the name and residence, in each instance, of the person to whom sold, and if shipped, to whom shipped and to what district. Such book shall be kept at his place of business, and shall be open at all hours to the inspection of any assessor, collector, or other revenue officer; and any dealer in leaf tobacco who shall neglect or refuse to keep such book shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $500, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 83. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, and until the 1st day of October, 1868, all manufactured tobacco and snuff (not including cigars) imported from foreign countries, shall be placed by the owner, importer, or consignee thereof in a bonded warehouse of the United States at the place of importation, in the same manner and under rules as provided for warehousing goods imported into the United States, and shall not be withdrawn from such warehouse, nor be entered for consumption or transportation in the United States prior to the said 1st day of October, 1868. All manufactured tobacco and snuff (not including cigars) imported from foreign countries, after the passage of this act, shall, in addition to the import duties imposed on the same, pay the tax prescribed in this act for like kinds of tobacco and snuff manufactured in the United States, and have the same stamps respectively affixed. Such stamps shall be affixed and canceled on all such articles so imported by the owner or importer thereof, while such articles are in the custody of the proper custom-house officers, and such articles shall not pass out of the custody of such officers until the stamps have been affixed and canceled. Such tobacco and snuff shall be put up in packages, as prescribed in this act for like articles manufactured in the United States before such stamps are affixed; and the owner or importer of such tobacco and snuff shall be liable to all the penal provisions of this act, prescribed for manufacturers of tobacco and snuff manufactured in the United States. Where it shall be necessary to take any of such articles, so imported, to any place for the purpose of repacking, affixing, and canceling such stamps, other than the public stores of the United States, the collector of customs of the port where such articles shall be entered shall designate a bonded warehouse to which such articles shall be taken, under the control of such customs officer as such collector may direct. And any officer of customs who shall permit any such articles to pass out of his custody or control without compliance by the owner or importer thereof with the provisions of this section relating thereto, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $1,000, nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

No amendment was offered, and the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 84. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of every dealer in manufactured tobacco, having on hand more than twenty pounds, and every dealer in snuff having on hand more than ten pounds, to immediately make a true and correct inventory of the amount of such tobacco and snuff respectively, under oath or affirmation, and to deposit such inventory with the assistant assessor of the proper division, who shall immediately return the same to the assessor of the district, who shall immediately thereafter make an abstract of the several inventories filed in his office, and transmit such abstract to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and a like inventory and return shall be made on the first day of every month thereafter, and a like abstract of inventories shall be transmitted while any such dealer has tobacco or snuff remaining on hand manufactured in the United States, or imported prior to the passage of this act, and not stamped. After the 1st day of January, 1869, all smoking, fine-cut chewing tobacco, or snuff, and after the 1st day of July, 1869, all other manufactured tobacco of every description, shall be taken and deemed as having been manufactured after the passage of this act, and shall not be sold or offered for sale unless put up in packages and stamped as prescribed by this act; and any person who shall sell or offer for sale after the 1st day of January, 1869, any smoking, fine-cut chewing tobacco, or snuff, and after the 1st day of July, 1869, any other manufactured tobacco not so put up in packages and stamped, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

No amendment was offered, and the next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 85. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall, after the passage of this act, sell, or offer for sale, any manufactured tobacco or snuff, representing the same to have been manufactured and the tax paid thereon prior to the passage of this act, when the same was not so manufactured, and the tax not so paid, shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each offense, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and shall be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

No amendment was offered, and the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 86. And be it further enacted, That all manufactured tobacco and snuff, manufactured prior to the passage of this act, and held in bond at the time of its passage, may be sold for consumption in the original packages, with the proper stamps for the amount of tax thereon affixed and canceled as required by law; and any person who shall, after the passage of this act, offer for sale any tobacco or snuff, in packages of a different size from those limited and prescribed by this act, representing the same to have been held in bond at the time of the passage of this act, when the same was not so held in bond, shall, on conviction, be fined fifty dollars for each package in respect to which such offense shall be committed: Provided, That after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1869, no such tobacco or snuff shall be sold or removed for sale or consumption from any bonded warehouse unless put up in packages and stamped as provided by this act.

No amendment was offered, and the next section was read, as follows:

Cigars.

SEC. 87. And be it further enacted, That upon cigars which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, five dollars per thousand. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe such regulations for the inspection of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the collection of the tax thereon, as shall, in his judgment, be most effective for the prevention of frauds in the payment of such tax.

No amendment was offered, and the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 88. And be it further enacted, That every person before commencing, or, if already commenced, before continuing, the manufacture of cigars, shall furnish, without previous demand therefor, to the assistant assessor of the division a statement in duplicate, subscribed under oath or affirmation, accurately setting forth the place, and, if in a city, the street and number of the street, where the manufacture is to be carried on; and if the same shall be manufactured for, or to be sold and delivered to, any other person, the name and residence and business or occupation of the person for whom the cigars are to be manufactured or to whom they are to be delivered; and shall give a bond in conformity with the provisions of this act, in such penal sum as the assessor of the district may require, not less than $1,000, with an addition of $100 for each person proposed to be employed by him in making cigars, conditioned that he will not employ any person to manufacture cigars who has not been duly registered as a cigar-maker; that he will not engage in any attempt to defraud the Government of any tax on his manufactures; that he will render truly and correctly all the returns, statements, and inventories prescribed; that whenever he shall add to the number of cigar-makers employed by him he will immediately give notice thereof to the collector of the district; that he will stamp, in accordance with law, all cigars manufactured by him before he offers the same or any part thereof for sale, and before he removes any part thereof from the place of manufacture; that he will not knowingly sell, purchase, expose, or receive for sale any cigars which have not been stamped as required by law; and that he will comply with all the requirements of law relating to the manufacture of cigars. The sum of said bond may be increased from time to time, and additional sureties required, at the discretion of the assessor, or under the instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Every cigar manufacturer shall obtain from the collector of the district, who is hereby required to issue the same, a certificate setting forth the number of cigar-makers for which the bond has been given, which certificate shall be posted in a conspicuous place within the manufactory; and any cigar manufacturer who shall neglect or refuse to obtain such certificate, or to keep the same posted as hereinbefore provided, shall, on conviction, be fined $100. Any person manufacturing cigars of any description without first giving bond as herein required shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than five years. Cigarettes and cheroots shall be held to be cigars under the meaning of this act.

Mr. MYERS. On page 112, lines fourteen and fifteen, I move to strike out " $1,000" and insert " $200;" so that the clause will read:

And shall give a bond in conformity with the provisions of this act in such penal sum as the assessor of the district may require, not less than $200, with an addition of $100 for each person proposed to be employed by him, &c.

I will detain the committee but a moment. This refers to cigar manufacturers, and there are a large number of such manufacturers throughout the country, and a large number in my own district, who are poor men. They can scarcely give the bond now required by law of $100 for themselves and $100 for each employed; and if you increase it in this manner, instead of increasing the revenue you will only open up avenues to fraud; they will make cigars in out-of-the-way places, and will not give bonds at all. You call them "manufacturers," and suppose they are rich men, but many of them are poor men, and cannot give such a bond as this. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out " $1,000" and insert " $500." I will only say that for very small manufacturers the amount named in the section is certainly too large.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will agree that that amendment may be adopted, to be voted on in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 89. And be it further enacted, That within thirty days after the passage of this act every cigar manufacturer shall place and keep on the side or end of the building within which his business is carried on, so that it can be distinctly seen, a sign, with letters thereon not less than three inches in length, painted in oil colors or gilded, giving his full name and business. Any person neglecting to comply with the requirements of this section shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100, nor more than $500.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 90. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every assistant assessor to keep a record, in a book to be provided for the purpose, to be open to the inspection of any person, of the name and residence of every person engaged in the manufacture of cigars in his division, the place where such manufacture is carried on, and the number of the manufactory, together with the names and residences of every cigar-maker employed in his division; and the assistant assessor shall enter in said record, under the name of each manufacturer, an abstract of his inventories and monthly returns; and each assessor shall keep a similar record for the district, and shall cause the several manufactories of cigars in the district to be numbered consecutively, which number shall not thereafter be changed.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 91. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act all cigars shall be packed in boxes, not before used for that purpose, containing not more, respectively, than twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, two hundred and fifty, or five hundred cigars each; and any person who shall sell or offer for sale, or deliver or offer to deliver, any cigars in any other form than in new boxes as above described, or who shall pack in any box any cigars in excess of the number provided by law to be put in each box respectively, or who shall falsely brand any box, or who shall affix a stamp on any box denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall, upon conviction for any of the above described offenses, be fined for each such offense respectively not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire. I move to amend this section by inserting after the words "from and after the passage of this act all cigars shall be packed" the words "by the manufacturer." This section provides that all cigars shall be packed up in certain numbers in boxes not before used for that purpose. It also provides that no person shall sell or offer for sale, or shall deliver or offer to deliver, any cigars in any other form than in new boxes. I am at a loss how, under that provision, the selling of cigars by retail, by the single cigar, can be carried on. And I would move to further amend the section by inserting the words "cigar manufacturer" in lieu of the word "person" before the words "who shall sell or offer for sale." I think my amendment will obviate a difficulty that may arise under this section as it now stands.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no objection to those amendments.

The amendments of Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire, were then agreed to.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I move to further amend this section by inserting after the words "all cigars shall be packed by the manufacturer in boxes" the words "or bundles;" also to strike out the words "not before used for that purpose."

Mr. SCHENCK. That will destroy our whole system of stamps.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. It is asserted by cigar-makers that bundles can be stamped just as well as boxes. I think it will be an unnecessary burden to require all cigars to be put in boxes. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

The amendment of Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, was not agreed to.

Mr. HIGBY. I would suggest to the Committee of Ways and Means that the amendment which has been adopted on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEVENS] will open a wide door to frauds. His amendment forbids any cigar manufacturer to offer any cigars for sale except they are put up in boxes, as required by this section. But this provision can be evaded by permitting any other person than a manufacturer to do so; the manufacturer could employ a person to do so and thus evade the intention of the law. It seems to me that this change is a very bad one. I think the section as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means was better than it is now as amended.

Mr. ROBINSON. We can vote down the amendment in the House.

Mr. HIGBY. I desired to call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to the effect of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Any gentleman can call for a separate vote on that amendment when this bill comes up in the House.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I hope the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. SCHENCK] will consent that the committee now rise, so that we may have an opportunity to examine this section more thoroughly between this time and to-morrow, when the bill is taken up again.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will consent that this section shall be considered still open to amendment to-morrow, when there is a fuller attendance in the committee.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. That will do, if that consent can be given.

The CHAIRMAN. If no objection is made, this section will be regarded as open to amendment hereafter.

No objection was made.

No further amendment was offered to the section.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 92. And be it further enacted, That every person now or hereafter engaged in the manufacture of cigars, shall make and deliver to the assistant assessor of the division a true inventory, in form prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of the quantity of leaf tobacco, cigars, stems, scraps, clippings, and waste, and the number of cigar boxes and the capacity of each box, held or owned by him on the 1st day of January of each year, or at the time of commencing and at the time of concluding business, if before or after the 1st of January, setting forth what portion of said goods, and what kinds, were manufactured or produced by him, and what were purchased from others, which inventory shall be verified by his oath or affirmation indorsed on said inventory; and the assistant assessor shall make personal examination of the stock sufficient to satisfy himself as to the correctness of the inventory, and shall verify the fact of such examination by oath or affirmation taken before the assessor, also to be indorsed on the inventory; and every such person shall enter daily in a book, the form of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, an accurate account of all the articles aforesaid purchased by him, the quantity of leaf tobacco, cigars, stems, or cigar boxes, of whatever description, manufactured, sold, consumed, or removed for consumption or sale, or removed from the place of manufacture; and shall, on or before the tenth day of each and every month, furnish to the assistant assessor of the division a true and accurate abstract from such book of all such purchases, sales, and removals made during the month next preceding, which abstract shall be verified by his oath or affirmation; and in case of refusal or willful neglect to deliver the inventory, or keep the account, or furnish the abstract aforesaid, he shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. It shall be the duty of any dealer in leaf tobacco or material used in manufacturing cigars, on demand of any officer of internal revenue authorized by law, to render to such officer a true and correct statement, verified by oath or affirmation, of the quantity and amount of such leaf tobacco or materials sold or delivered to any person or persons named in such demand; and in case of refusal or neglect to render such statement, or if there is cause to believe such statement to be incorrect or fraudulent, the assessor shall make an examination of persons, books, and papers in the same manner as provided in this act in relation to frauds and evasions.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 93. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared, for payment of the tax upon cigars, suitable stamps denoting the tax thereon; and all cigars shall be packed in quantities of twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, two hundred and fifty, and five hundred, and all such stamps shall be furnished to collectors requiring the same, who shall, if there be any cigar manufacturers within their respective districts, keep on hand at all times a supply equal in amount to two months' sales thereof, and shall sell the same only to the cigar manufacturers who have given bonds and paid the special tax, as required by law, in their districts respectively, and to importers of cigars who are required to affix the same to imported cigars in the custody of customs officers and to persons required by law to affix the same to cigars on hand on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1899; and every collector shall keep an account of the number, amount, and denominations of the stamps sold by him to each cigar manufacturer, and to other persons above described: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act, the duty on cigars imported into the United States from foreign countries shall be two dollars per pound, and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MYERS. I will not interrupt the committee now, if this section can be reserved for amendment hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] will have the privilege of moving hereafter an amendment to this section.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYNARD. I want to reserve a question of order upon the proviso at the end of the section just read.

The CHAIRMAN. On what ground?

Mr. MAYNARD. That the proviso is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will see at once that as the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole without any point of order being reserved, and as it is now being read for amendment, it is too late to raise any point of that kind.

Mr. MAYNARD. The bill has never been read through.

The CHAIRMAN. But the first reading was waived in consequence of the length of the bill, it having been printed and every gentleman being presumed to have read it.

Mr. STEWART. The bill was on our desks only a few hours before we went into Committee of the Whole upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. But the first reading, on which points of order could have been raised upon anything in the bill, was dispensed with, and the right to raise points of order was not reserved.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 94. And be it further enacted, That every manufacturer of cigars shall securely affix, by pasting on each box containing cigars manufactured by or for him, a label on which shall be printed, together with the manufacturer's name, the number of his manufactory, and the district and State in which it is situated, these words:

NOTICE.—The manufacturer of the cigars herein contained has complied with all the requirements of law. Every person is cautioned under the penalties of law not to use this box for cigars again.

Any manufacturer of cigars who shall neglect to affix such label to any box containing cigars made by or for him, or sold or offered for sale by or for him, or any person who shall remove any such label so affixed from any such box, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined fifty dollars for each box in respect to which such offense shall be committed.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 95. And be it further enacted, That all cigars which shall be removed from any manufactory or place where cigars are made without the same being packed in boxes, as required by this act, or without the proper stamp thereon denoting the tax, or without burning into each box with a branding iron the number of the cigars contained therein, and the name of the manufacturer, and the number of the district and the State, or without the stamp denoting the tax thereon being properly affixed and canceled, or which shall be sold or offered for sale not properly boxed and stamped, shall be forfeited to the United States. And any person who shall commit any of the above-described offenses shall, on conviction, be fined for each such offense, respectively, not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years. And any person who shall pack cigars in any box bearing a false or fraudulent or counterfeit stamp, or who shall remove, or cause to be removed, any stamp denoting the tax on cigars from any box, with intent to use the same, or who shall use, or permit any other person to use, any stamp so removed, or who shall receive, buy, sell, give away, or have in his possession any stamp so removed, or who shall make any other fraudulent use of any stamp or stamped box intended for cigars, or who shall remove from the place of manufacture any cigars not properly taxed and stamped as required by law, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read as follows:

SEC. 96. And be it further enacted, That the absence of the proper revenue stamp on any box of cigars sold or offered for sale, or kept for sale, shall be notice to all persons that the tax has not been paid thereon, and shall be conclusive evidence of the non-payment thereof; and such cigars shall be forfeited to the United States.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 97. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where cigars of any description are manufactured, in whole or in part, upon commission or shares, or where the material is furnished by one party and manufactured by another, or where the material is furnished or sold by one party with an understanding or agreement with another that the cigars are to be received in payment therefor, or for any part thereof, the stamps required by law shall be affixed by the actual maker before the cigars are removed from the place of manufacturing. And in case of fraud on the part of either of said parties in respect to said manufacture, or of any collusion on their part with intent to defraud the revenue, such material and cigars shall be forfeited to the United States, and every person engaged in such fraud or collusion shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than three years.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 98. And be it further enacted, That any manufacturer of cigars, who shall remove or sell any cigars without payment of the special tax as a cigar manufacturer, or without having given bond as such, or without the proper stamps denoting the tax thereon, or who shall make false or fraudulent entries of manufactures or sales of any cigars, or who shall make false or fraudulent entries of the purchase or sales of leaf tobacco, tobacco stems, or other material used in the manufacture of cigars, or who shall affix any false, forged, spurious, fraudulent, or counterfeit stamp, or imitation of any stamp, required by law to any box containing any cigars, shall, in addition to the penalties elsewhere provided in this act for such offenses, forfeit to the United States all raw material and manufactured or partly manufactured tobacco and cigars, and all machinery, tools, implements, apparatus, fixtures, boxes, barrels, and all other materials, which shall be found in the possession of such person, or in his manufactory, and used in his business as such manufacturer, together with his estate or interest in the building or factory and the lot or tract of ground on which such building or factory is located, and all appurtenances thereunto belonging.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 99. And be it further enacted, That all cigars imported from foreign countries after the passage of this act shall, in addition to the import duties imposed on the same, pay the tax prescribed in this act for cigars manufactured in the United States, and have the same stamps affixed. Such stamps shall be affixed and canceled by the owner or importer of cigars while they are in the custody of the proper custom-house officers; and such cigars shall not pass out of the custody of such officers until the stamps have been so affixed and canceled; but shall be put up in boxes containing quantities as prescribed in this act for cigars manufactured in the United States before such stamps are affixed. And the owner or importer of such cigars shall be liable to all the penal provisions of this act prescribed for manufacturers of cigars manufactured in the United States. Where it shall be necessary to take any of such cigars, so imported, to any place for the purpose of affixing and canceling such stamps, other than the public stores of the United States, the collector of customs of the port where such cigars shall be entered shall designate a bonded warehouse to which they shall be taken, under the control of such customs officer as such collector may direct. And any officer of customs who shall permit any such cigars to pass out of his custody or control without compliance by the owner or importer thereof with the provisions of this section relating thereto shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 100. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of every dealer in cigars, either of foreign or domestic manufacture, having on hand more than five thousand thereof, imported or manufactured, or purporting or claimed to have been imported or manufactured, prior to the passage of this act, to immediately make a true and correct inventory of the quantity of such cigars in his possession, under oath or affirmation, and to deposit such inventory with the assistant assessor of the proper division, who shall immediately return the same to the assessor of the district, who shall immediately thereafter make an abstract of the several such inventories filed in his office, and transmit the same to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and a like inventory and return shall be made on the first day of every month thereafter, and a like abstract of inventories shall be transmitted, while any such dealer has any such cigars remaining on hand, until the 1st day of January, 1869. After the 1st day of January, 1869, all cigars of every description shall be taken to have been either manufactured or imported after the passage of this act, and shall be stamped accordingly; and any person who shall sell, or offer for sale, after the 1st day of January, 1869, any imported cigars, or cigars purporting or claimed to have been imported, not so put up in packages and stamped by this act, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to move an amendment to this section, but I will not press it now if I can have the privilege of offering it to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the gentleman will have the right to offer to-morrow an amendment to this section.

Mr. SCHENCK. Let it be offered now.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend as follows:

Strike out in section one hundred the following clause:

After the 1st day of January, 1869, all cigars of every description shall be taken to have been either manufactured or imported after the passage of this act, and shall be stamped accordingly.

Strike out in line twenty-five the word "so."

Insert after the words "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" the following:

And upon such inventory and return the inspector shall at once make examination to ascertain and shall report to the collector whether such return and inventory are correct, and if found to be so shall thereupon affix to the packages provided for in section ninety-three of this act, in which such imported or manufactured cigars shall be placed, a special stamp.

This amendment is designed to prevent the collection of tax twice upon the same cigars. The section provides that there shall be an account taken of the cigars which are on hand, and under the clause which I propose to strike out, they will be required after January 1, 1869, to pay tax when they have already paid it once. The amendment is designed to avoid that.

Mr. MULLINS. If the cigars are kept on hand that long they ought to be taxed again. The amendment was not agreed to.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 101. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall, after the passage of this act, sell, or offer for sale, any cigars, representing the same to have been manufactured and the tax paid thereon prior to the passage of this act, when the same was not so manufactured and the tax not so paid, shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each offense, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and shall be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 102. And be it further enacted, That if any distiller, rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, compounder of liquors, or manufacturer of tobacco or cigars, shall knowingly and willfully omit, neglect, or refuse to do or cause to be done any of the things required by law in the carrying on or conducting of his business, or shall do anything by this act prohibited, if there be no specific penalty or punishment imposed by any other section of this act for the neglecting, omitting, or refusing to do, or for the doing or causing to be done the thing required or prohibited, he shall pay a penalty of $1,000; and if the person so offending be a distiller, rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, or compounder of liquors, all distilled spirits or liquors owned by him, or in which he has any interest as owner, and if he be a manufacturer of tobacco or cigars, all tobacco or cigars found in his manufactory shall be forfeited to the United States.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read as follows:

SEC. 103. And be it further enacted, That any internal revenue officer who shall be or become interested, directly, or indirectly, in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or in the production, rectification, or redistillation of distilled spirits, shall be dismissed from office; and any such officer who shall become so interested in any such manufacture or production, rectification, or redistillation, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 104. And be it further enacted, That if any officer or agent appointed and acting under the authority of any revenue law of the United States shall be guilty of any extortion or willful oppression, under color of law; or shall knowingly demand other or greater sums than shall be authorized by law; or shall receive any fee, compensation, or reward, for the performance of any duty except as by law prescribed; or shall willfully neglect to perform any of the duties enjoined on him by law; or shall conspire or collude with any other person to defraud the United States; or shall make opportunity for any person to defraud the United States; or shall do, or omit to do, any act with intent to enable any other person to defraud the United States; or shall negligently or designedly permit any violation of the law by any other person; or shall make or sign any false entry in any book, or make or sign any false certificate or return in any case where he is by law or regulation required to make any entry, certificate, or return; or having knowledge or information of the violation of any revenue law by any person, or of fraud committed by any person against the United States under any revenue law of the United States, shall fail to report, in writing, such knowledge or information to his next superior officer, and to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; or shall demand or accept or attempt to collect, directly or indirectly, as payment or gift or otherwise, any sum of money or other thing of value for the compromise, adjustment, or settlement of any charge or complaint for any violation or alleged violation of law, except as expressly authorized by law so to do, he shall be dismissed from office, and shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. And one half of the fine so imposed shall be for the use of the United States, and the other half for the use of the informer, who shall be ascertained by the judgment of the court; and the said court shall also render judgment against the said assessor or assistant assessor for the amount of damages sustained in favor of the party injured, to be collected by execution.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 105. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall simulate or falsely or fraudulently execute or sign any bond, permit, entry, or other document, required by the provisions of this act, or by any regulation made in pursuance thereof, or who shall procure the same to be falsely or fraudulently executed; or who shall advise, aid in, or connive at the execution thereof, shall, on conviction, be imprisoned for a term not less than one year nor more than five years; and the property to which such false or fraudulent instrument relates shall be forfeited.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 106. And be it further enacted, That every collector having charge of any warehouse in which distilled spirits, tobacco, or other articles, are stored in bond, shall render a monthly account of all such articles to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which account shall be examined and adjusted, monthly, by him, so as to exhibit a true statement of the liability and responsibility of every such collector on such account. In adjusting such account the collector shall be charged with all the articles which may have been deposited or received under the provisions of law in any warehouse in his district and under his control, and shall be credited with all such articles shown to have been removed therefrom according to law, including transfers to other collectors and to his successor in office, and also whatever allowances may have been made in accordance with law to any owner of such goods or articles for leakage or other losses.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 107. And be it further enacted, That in all cases arising under the internal revenue laws where, instead of commencing or proceeding with a suit in court, it may appear to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be for the interest of the United States to compromise the same, he is empowered and authorized to make such compromise, with the advice and consent of the solicitor of internal revenue, whose opinion in the case, with the reasons therefor, shall be given in writing and delivered to the Commissioner; and in every case where a compromise is made, there shall be placed on file in the office of the Commissioner, the opinion of the solicitor, together with a statement of the amount of tax assessed, the amount of additional tax or penalty imposed by law in consequence of the neglect or delinquency of the person against whom the tax is assessed, and the amount actually paid in accordance with the terms of the compromise; but no such compromise shall be made of any case after a suit or proceeding in court has been commenced, without the recommendation also of the district attorney for the judicial district in which the suit or proceeding is pending, or of such other counsel as may be employed to conduct or prosecute the same on the part of the United States: Provided, That it shall be lawful for the court, at any stage of such suit or criminal proceedings, to continue the same for good cause shown on motion of the district attorney.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have an additional section I want to move to come in after the one hundred and seventh.

Mr. SCHENCK. I want to get past the provision on tobacco and cigars, and will consent the gentleman shall offer that to-morrow.

Mr. PIKE. I move the following:

And be it further enacted, That upon all interest arising from bonds of the United States there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of ten per cent. on the amount of said interest, and the Treasurer of the United States and such subordinate officers as shall be charged with the payment of interest shall assess and collect the duty hereby levied.

Mr. SCHENCK. I make the point of order that is not germane.

Mr. PIKE. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PIKE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ARCHER asked and obtained leave of absence until the 30th instant.

Mr. HIGBY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Dr. Robert Lebby, of Charleston, South Carolina, for relief from disabilities, indorsed by General R. R. Scott, General Canby, Collector Mackey, &c.

By Mr. HALSEY: The petition of Bedell & Co. and others, asking Congress to relieve refined petroleum from taxation.

By Mr. JULIAN: The petition of Anthony Bowen, praying increase of compensation for services rendered the Government, as set forth in petition and accompanying papers.

By Mr. ROBINSON: The petition of citizens of Brooklyn, New York, and others, for an appropriation to remove obstructions at Hell Gate, in the harbor of New York.

By Mr. STIGREAVES: The petition of P. F. Cole, of Warren county, New Jersey, asking the pay and allowance of a second lieutenant of infantry, &c.

By Mr. TROWBRIDGE: The application of Moses F. Carlton, late lieutenant of the fourth Michigan infantry, for pay as a lieutenant from the time of his appointment as such.

By Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts: A remonstrance of 1,600 legal voters of New England, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, against the extension of Howe's sewing-machine patent, and they wish to be heard before the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives on the subject.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 26, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

ELECTION IN ARKANSAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the General of the Army, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of May 29, 1868, further information regarding the late election in Arkansas; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following report of the commissioners appointed under the act of June 27, 1866, to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of the United States; which was read:

The undersigned, commissioners appointed under the act of June 27, 1866, "to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of the United States," respectfully report to the Senate:

That they began their labors by an examination of the methods adopted in revisions of a similar character, and afterward framed a provisional scheme for the work in hand. They arranged the contents of the Statutes-at-Large, so far as it could be done provisionally, under titles, and proceeded to revise these titles separately. It became apparent that they were so connected that very few of them could be considered safely ascertained and completed until the body of connected titles should be revised. They have, therefore, pursued the necessary course, and have prepared a considerable amount of material upon the various connected titles.

In doing this work they have found it indispensable to recast every statute from which they take any provision. Where several statutes relating to the same subject modify each other it has been impossible to state their united effect without writing a new statute. To retain the language of the fragments in force would commonly be to misstate the intention of the whole. The care necessary in this process requires greater time than a revision after the method of compilation would have done.

The few specimens which they have printed have been offered merely as examples of the method adopted by them, and not as indicating the amount of work done. They have hoped that by means of a reference of these to appropriate committees they might ascertain whether that method was deemed by Congress to be in accordance with the act by which they are authorized.

The commissioners have been obliged to expend a considerable part of their labor in learning the art; and they believe that their experience must enable them, as it already does, to work with increasing rapidity. But they are still unable to answer the second inquiry put to them in the resolution of the Senate with definiteness. They do not believe, however, that with any amount of industry and ability the revision of the permanent and general statutes of the United States can be correctly done within the period limited by the act of June 27. They can only say that they are giving their best endeavors to accomplish the work without delay and with strict correctness.

WILLIAM JOHNSTON,
CHARLES P. JAMES.

The commissioners herewith submit three reports:

1. The laws relating to patents.
2. The laws relating to the Army.
3. The laws relating to public printing.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that that report be printed, and that the accompanying communications, which are specimens of the work, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. They all ought to go to one committee to see as to the mode of doing this work.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of mechanics, citizens of Salem, praying relief for the African export trade of distilled spirits; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN presented the memorial of James Travers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DRAKE presented a memorial of W. R. Laughlin and Solomon Markham, delegates appointed by the settlers on the Osage and Cherokee lands, remonstrating against the ratification of the Osage treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CATTELL. I present a resolution of the mayor and common council of Jersey City, New Jersey, asking the passage of the bill now pending before Congress to promote the efficiency of the American commercial marine, to establish a national marine school for the orphans of soldiers and sailors killed in battle or deceased in the service of the United States, and others, and to make additional provision for disabled veterans of the naval service. I move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

It was so referred.

Mr. CATTELL presented a memorial of producers, dealers in, and consumers of articles required in dyeing and tanning, praying for the imposition of a specific duty on sumac imported from foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VICKERS presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VAN WINKLE presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONNESS. I present an extended petition sent by telegraph from California, and signed by a great number of the most prominent citizens of that State, connected with its industries, which reads thus:

"We, the undersigned, representatives of the interests of California and of the leading vineyards, do respectfully petition you to use every effort in your official capacity to have the duty on grape brandy reduced in proportion to the reduction on other spirits, or if possible entirely removed. We believe the life of this great and growing vineyard interest demands such action on the part of Congress."

I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance, to whom the bill will go when it comes from the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1035) authorizing the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to change its location, reported adversely thereon, and moved that it be indefinitely postponed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1282) authorizing certain banks named therein to change their names, reported adversely thereon, and moved that it be indefinitely postponed; which was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 9) in favor of A. W. Walker, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee to whom was referred the petition of Henry Newell, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Clara Moore, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1205) to further amend the postal laws, reported it with amendments.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 5th of April, 1867, information in relation to the employment of Louis V. Bogy in the Department of the Interior, submitted a report, accompanied by the following resolution:

Resolved, That the appointment by the Secretary of the Interior of Louis V. Bogy as special agent, under the circumstances and for the purposes stated in his communication to the Senate of the 8th of April, 1867, and as explained in the letter to the Committee on the Judiciary of the 18th of April, 1867, was improper and unauthorized.

The report and resolution were ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 379) for the relief of Thomas Wolfe, of Macoupin county, Illinois, reported adversely, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. J. M. Hockaday, praying compensation for property destroyed by the Mormons in 1856, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

LOIS CLARK.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Lois Clark, daughter of Abraham Lawrence, deceased, a soldier of the revolutionary war, praying to be allowed the pension due her father, to report a bill granting her relief. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time. It was accidentally laid aside in the committee-room, and has lost its place. It was presented very early.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 569) granting relief to Lois Clark was read three times, and passed. It provides for the payment to Lois Clark, of Milton, Vermont, of the sum of $757 due to her father, Abraham Lawrence, a soldier of the Revolution, being his pension from the 4th of March, 1831, to the day of his death, June 18, 1837.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 570) for a grant of land and granting the right of way over the public lands to the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. YATES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 571) to provide for the more economical administration of the government of the several Territories of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRAGUE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 572) to incorporate the Island City Harbor Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 573) to provide for a life-boat to be stationed on Narragansett beach, Rhode Island; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask leave to present an amendment for the purpose of having it printed, which I propose to offer to House bill No. 768 when it is considered. It is a bill concerning the rights of American citizens in foreign States. I move that the amendment be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 478.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 478) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of the Sisseton, Waupeton, Medawakonton, and Waupukute bands of Sioux or Dakota Indians, and for the disposition of their lands in Minnesota and Dakota," approved March 3, 1863, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the first section of the act of March 3, 1863, so as to read:

That the President is authorized, and hereby directed, to assign to and set apart for the Sisseton, Waupeton, Medawakonton, and Waupukute bands of Sioux Indians, a tract or tracts of unoccupied lands, outside of the limits of any State, sufficient in extent to enable him to assign to each member of said bands, or either of them who are willing to adopt the pursuit of agriculture, eighty acres of good agricultural lands, the same to be well adapted to agricultural purposes.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota where these Indians now are.

Mr. RAMSEY. This is a very simple matter, which can readily be explained. The bill makes no appropriation of money or of lands. After the Sioux massacre of 1862, the reservation belonging to the Sioux Indians in Minnesota and their annuities were confiscated by the Government; but the Government, considering that there was still some care to be bestowed upon them, authorized the sale of the reservation, and the distribution of the proceeds of that sale from time to time among these Indians. If it is desired, I can read the various sections of the law of 1863, but I presume that is not necessary. It provided that the President should locate these Indians upon a tract, using the word "tract" in the singular, outside of the borders of any State. In pursuance of that authority, the most mischievous of these people, those who were kept in prison for some time at Davenport, a thousand or so of them, those who had been convicted by a court-martial of violence upon the white settlers in Minnesota, were removed to a reservation at the mouth of the Niobrara. The proceeds of the sale of their old reservation, under the construction which the Indian department gives to this law, are distributed entirely among those Indians; and yet they are but a small fraction and the least deserving fraction of the Indians who formerly were entitled to the reservation in Minnesota and to its proceeds. There were four bands, the Waupetons, Medawakontons, Waupekutes, and Sissetons. The Waupekutes and Medawakontons were the mischief makers, the bloody Indians who were sent down to the mouth of the Niobrara; the others are up in the Territory of Dakota, and by a treaty which the Government made with those Indians in the spring of 1867 they were entitled to a reservation, and to some other advantages to be provided for them by the Government. But not one cent from that time to this has ever been given to them; they are without the least help; and the Indian department is unable to give them any assistance whatever. The Indian department hold that their power for the benefit of these bands is exhausted by the distribution which they make to the Indians at the mouth of the Niobrara; but there are only one thousand there, and there are four thousand Sissetons and Waupetons in Dakota, and recognizing the fact that they are entitled in equity to an equal participation this bill is introduced. There is an accumulation of about fifty thousand dollars, probably, realized from the sale of their old reservation, and with the assistance of one half or two thirds of that, to which they would be properly entitled, the Government can do them a benefit and help to open their farms on the reservation. The Senate will recollect that some time ago it agreed to an appropriation of $20,000 for the relief of these Indians, in consideration of their great necessity and destitution; but that has not been heard from since it went to the House of Representatives, some two months since, and these Indians are entirely without help, and the Indian Bureau is without the ability to help them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does this bill come before the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs unanimously.

Mr. THAYER. The Senator from Minnesota has failed to answer my question.

Mr. RAMSEY. What was the question?

Mr. THAYER. I will put it in this shape: does the bill relate to those Indians who are now located at the mouth of the Niobrara, in Nebraska?

Mr. RAMSEY. Certainly it relates to them; and it relates to those in Dakota.

Mr. THAYER. I ask to have the bill read again.

The bill was read.

Mr. RAMSEY. The only modification is that it introduces the words "tract or tracts" instead of the singular "tract." The first section of the act of 1863 provides that the President shall locate these Indians on a tract of land outside of the borders of any State. The whole object of this bill is to reproduce that first section with this change, using "tract or tracts," so as to justify the Indian Bureau in relieving the Indians who are located upon the reservation in the Territory of Dakota. There is no other way of relieving them.

Mr. THAYER. It does not result in removing the Indians from Nebraska?

Mr. RAMSEY. Not at all. You can have them, and more of them if you desire them there.

Mr. THAYER. I want to say to my friend from Minnesota, who represents that these Indians were the worst of those who removed from Minnesota, that since they have come into our jurisdiction they are peaceable, quiet Indians, and we have no disposition to have them removed.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am glad to know that you are so pleased with them. We can send you another installment. [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. We treat them kindly and civilize them.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN G. MONTANO.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 553.

Mr. CONNESS. What is it about?

Mr. SUMNER. It is entitled "A bill to pay Stephen G. Montano, a citizen of Peru, an unpaid balance of money awarded to him by the mixed commission authorized by the convention of January 12, 1863, between the United States and Peru." It grows out of a judgment of a California court.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not to pay for a British ship?

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no; you are not against this.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Stephen G. Montano, a citizen of Peru, or his legal representatives, the sum of $27,800 43 in coin, with interest in coin from the 11th of July, 1864, to the time of payment, the same being an unpaid balance of money due to him from the United States under a decree of the mixed commission authorized by the convention of January 12, 1863, between the United States and Peru, for the settlement of pending claims of citizens of either country against the other.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTAGE LAKE SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 398.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 398) to establish the right of way of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior ship-canal, and to provide for the extension and completion of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Public Lands have reported the bill with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The amendment only will be read, unless the reading of the original bill is called for by some Senator.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and to insert the following in lieu thereof:

That the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-Canal Company, a company organized under the laws of the State of Michigan, be, and hereby is, authorized to construct a breakwater in Keweenaw bay, Lake Superior, not exceeding two thousand feet in width, on the bank of said bay, and a ship-canal from the most eligible point in said bay to Portage lake, which canal shall be at least one hundred feet in width, and not less than thirteen feet in depth: Provided, The said canal company shall also remove the rocks in Portage lake, so as to secure free and unobstructed navigation, with thirteen feet water in the channel of said lake, through to the head thereof, and the right of way through said lake is hereby granted to said company, not exceeding six hundred feet in width. And the Secretary of War shall designate an engineer of the Army who shall examine the obstructions in said lake, and report the same to said Secretary, with maps thereof, and shall report to said Secretary when the work contemplated in this section shall be completed in a permanent manner. And said engineer shall also ascertain whether any money has been expended to aid the navigation into Portage lake, in the route of said ship-canal; by whom expended, if any has been expended, the amount expended; and after deducting the reimbursements received, if any, by persons so expending said money for the purpose aforesaid, shall report the balance to the said Secretary of War, if any balance is found, and shall establish the time in which the sum so found shall be paid; and the grants contained in this act shall be subject to the payment of said money so actually expended.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there is hereby granted to the State of Michigan for the use and benefit of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-Canal Company, to aid in the construction of the work provided for in the first section of this act, in accordance with the act of the Legislature of the State of Michigan in relation thereto, two hundred thousand acres of public land, to be selected from the odd-numbered sections in the Marquette land district, in the upper peninsula of Michigan, subject to sale or preemption, and which have been surveyed, but to which no preemption or homestead rights have attached, and which have not been reserved in any grant heretofore made by Congress nor otherwise disposed of. Said lands may be selected by said company at any time, and patents to issue therefor as hereinafter provided: And provided further, That said canal shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or charge upon the vessels of said Government, or upon vessels employed by said Government in the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid company shall forthwith establish the route of said canal and the plan of said breakwater, and file plans or a plat thereof in the office of the War Department, and shall obtain the approval of the same by the Secretary of War, and all the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be borne by said company.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if said breakwater and ship-canal shall not be completed according to the plans so approved by the Secretary of War, and said obstructions removed within five years from the passage of this act, the lands hereby granted shall revert to the United States: Provided, That whenever said breakwater and ship-canal shall be completed according to the provisions of this act, and said obstructions shall be removed, and said Secretary of War shall certify to the same patents for the lands herein granted shall be issued to the said company.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the amendment in section two, line thirteen, by inserting after the words "disposed of," the words "and which are not known upon the maps or reports of the public surveys as mineral."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill extending the Portage Lake and Lake Superior ship-canal to Keweenaw bay, providing for the right of way, and making a grant of land to aid in the continuance of said extension."

WAGON-ROADS IN DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 650, reported by me yesterday from the Committee on Territories and then laid over for examination.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 650) to amend act of 3d March, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FERRY. I move to amend the bill so as to limit the amount appropriated to the sum of $6,500, which is the estimate for the expense of the bridge now made by the Department of the Interior in a letter which I have from that Department in my hand. The amendment is in line three, after the word "that," to insert "so much of;" and in line six, to strike out the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary" and insert "as shall not exceed the sum of $6,500;" so as to make the bill read:

That so much of the unexpended balance of an appropriation made March 3, 1865, for the construction of certain wagon roads in the Territory of Dakota, as shall not exceed the sum of $6,500, be, and the same is hereby, applied to the completion of the bridge over the Dakota river, on the line of the Government road leading from Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, to the mouth of the Cheyenne river, in Dakota Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MAQUOKETA RIVER.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to take up for consideration Senate resolution No. 107.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) in relation to the Maquoketa river, in the State of Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to give the assent of Congress to the construction of bridges across the Maquoketa river, in the State of Iowa, with or without draws, as may be provided by the laws of the State of Iowa.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senator from Iowa whether that is a navigable river?

Mr. HARLAN. It is not a navigable stream; it is a small mill stream.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to take up the bill reported by me the other day from the Committee on the Judiciary for the removal of causes in certain cases from the State courts to the United States courts.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That bill ought not to be taken up now. It is a bill that will attract a good deal of attention and a good deal of discussion. I think it ought to be discussed, and it is impossible for me to discuss it to-day, for I am scarcely able to be here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will be absolutely impossible to discuss the bill properly until it is taken up; but do I understand my friend to say that he is unwell to-day?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion if my friend is not able to discuss the bill now.

CENTER MARKET.

Mr. CORBETT. I move to take up Senate bill No. 394, which was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia in February last. It is a bill which provides for the removal of Center market upon Pennsylvania avenue.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 394) to provide for the removal of the Center market, in the city of Washington, and for the erection of a market building in a more suitable locality, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioner of Public Buildings to cause to be removed within twelve months all the buildings, sheds, and tenements of every description now located on the Government reservation on Pennsylvania avenue, between Seventh and Ninth streets west, and occupied as a city market, or for other purposes, and to cause the reservation to be inclosed and preserved in the same manner as other reservations now under his charge. The materials of the present market building are to be turned over to the mayor of the city of Washington for such public purposes as may be deemed proper under the direction of the corporate authorities of the city; and they are to enter upon and occupy, as a permanent site for a market-house, all of that portion of the public reservation, or so much thereof as may be necessary, bounded as follows: commencing one hundred feet south of the southeast corner of block three hundred and fifty, as marked on the plat of the city of Washington; thence west five hundred and eleven feet and four inches to a point one hundred feet south of the southwest corner of block three hundred and twenty-four; thence south one hundred and seventy feet along the east side of Twelfth street west; thence east five hundred and eleven feet four inches to a point on the west side of Tenth street west; thence north one hundred and seventy feet to the place of beginning. For the purpose of erecting such market-house it is to be lawful for the said corporation to create a debt, in such form as may be found most expedient, not exceeding the sum of $200,000, at a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, notwithstanding any restriction in the charter of the city or existing laws to the contrary; but the Government of the United States in no event whatever is to be liable for the principal or interest upon any such loan; and the entire revenue of the building after paying contingent expenses and interest on the loan is to be appropriated to the payment of the money borrowed for that purpose. No more than $220,000 are to be expended in building the market-house, nor are any contracts to be entered into which involve a larger expenditure for its completion. The corporation are to have the right to hold and use the property so long as the building to be erected thereon shall be maintained as a market-house, and no longer.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate take up the unfinished business of yesterday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the joint Committee on the Library to offer two or three amendments. The first is on page 11, line two hundred and fifty-four, to increase the appropriation "for the Botanical Garden, grading, draining, for procuring manure, tools, fuel, and repairs, and purchasing trees and shrubs, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress," from $3,300 to $5,400. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the same committee to offer another amendment on the same page, in lines two hundred and fifty-seven and two hundred and fifty-eight to strike out $7,374 96 and insert $11,296 as the appropriation "for pay of superintendent and assistants in the Botanic Garden and Green-house, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I am also instructed to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line two hundred and fifty-eight, on page 11:

For the expenses of exchanging public documents for the publications of foreign Governments, as provided for by resolution approved March 2, 1867, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I now offer the following amendment, to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That no statuary, paintings, or other articles, the property of private individuals, shall hereafter be allowed to be exhibited in the Rotunda or any other portion of the Capitol building.

Mr. SUMNER. That is a very good amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to strike out the proviso on page 12, lines two hundred and sixty-nine, two hundred and seventy, and two hundred and seventy-one, as follows:

Provided, That no judgment of said court for any sum exceeding $5,000, shall be paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. President, it will be seen that by this proviso the judgments of the Court of Claims for which an appropriation is made are not to be paid in case they exceed $5,000. The effect of that, of course, would be to bring all those cases to Congress, and we might as well dispense with the Court of Claims altogether. There is no reason why a judgment for $6,000 should not be paid as well as one for $5,000. An appeal lies to the Supreme Court in every case over three thousand dollars at any rate.

It seems to me that such a provision as this would destroy the value of the court, and it would hardly be worth while to continue the court if such a limitation were put upon the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not agree with the views of the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois whether, if that proviso is stricken out, the amount of the appropriation is not totally inadequate?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is; and I intend to make a suggestion about that in a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I agree with the Senator entirely. It is in regard to these other claims that we want the judgment of the Court of Claims; but no claimant will commence a suit in that court if his claim is for more than $5,000, if he cannot get a judgment paid. It seems to me it would be ridiculous to keep up the Court of Claims merely to decide on claims less than $5,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Of course it would. It would be better to repeal the law creating the court, if this proviso is to prevail.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I now call attention to the amount appropriated by this bill for the Court of Claims:

For payment of judgments which may be rendered by the court in favor of claimants, $100,000.

There was appropriated last year $700,000. I understand that only about five hundred thousand of that $700,000 have been used. The judgments of the court which have been paid only amounted to about five hundred thousand dollars. There are, however, a number of cases pending in the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal from the Court of Claims, and I am informed that if one half of them should be sustained by the court it would exhaust the past appropriation, so that there would be left only this appropriation of $100,000 to meet the judgments of the next fiscal year. The estimate made by the court as necessary to meet its judgments was $500,000. That estimate, I understand, on inquiry, is made up by an examination of the cases pending in the court and their character, and as to what might probably be recovered in those cases. Their estimate is $500,000. I think that amount should be put in the bill, and I will move that the word "one," in line two hundred and sixty-eight, be stricken out and "five" inserted. It would seem to me a very expensive thing to keep up a Court of Claims which costs, I suppose, $50,000 annually to adjudicate on claims only to the amount of $100,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to inquire of my friend from Illinois if it is not dangerous to appropriate so much money and leave it to the discretion of the Court of Claims; whether we ought not to specify what particular cases they shall decide? It looks to me to be a little dangerous to leave so great a discretion. Is there not danger of great fraud and abuse? The Senator proposes to leave $500,000 to the discretion of this Court of Claims without specifying how it is to be applied, and in what particular cases!

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Maine undoubtedly would like to compare the proceedings of the Court of Claims, where cases are tried and counsel employed, where the Government employs attorneys to defend it, and where the judgments are rendered after an investigation and the examination of witnesses, with the placing of $500,000 in the hands of some officer of the Government alone to distribute as he thought proper. The court only gives judgment on cases that are brought before it, and has no discretion. I believe, to give the money to favorites or distribute it in any particular way to increase the salary of anybody. However, I have no interest in it more than anybody else.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I merely wished to suggest to my friend, in his care, these matters for his consideration. Of course I do not want to interfere with any business which comes from the Committee on the Judiciary. They have probably looked into this matter; but yet, as no money can be drawn from the Treasury except in pursuance of law to meet particular subjects appropriated for, I did not know but that my friend might consider it dangerous. I thought, therefore, I would suggest it to him, in order that he might perceive and carefully consider the danger of leaving $500,000 to the Court of Claims—the danger of favoritism. No one knows how that court may decide in a particular case.

Mr. TRUMBULL. An appeal can be taken to the Supreme Court in all cases now, I believe.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If my friend is satisfied I am. I do not wish to raise a question about it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This is a proposition to increase the appropriation; and I do not understand the Senator to make it from any committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; and if there is any objection to it I do not propose to make it at all. I suggest it for the consideration of the committee. I should think it was one of those things which ought to be corrected.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It cannot properly be moved unless it comes from a committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have some other amendments to offer if the Senator objects to this.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think I shall raise the question under the rule on this proposition. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand the Senator from Maine to object to it as not coming within the rule. It is based on an estimate; but having offered the amendment to-day, and the Senator having received notice of it, I may, perhaps, renew it if the bill should be continued until to-morrow. I now move to amend the bill by inserting on page 29, after line six hundred and ninety-six, the following:

For services of the clerk of the district court of the northern district of Mississippi, as keeper of the records and files of the land office at Pontotoc, Mississippi, from June 4, 1867, to June 4, 1868, $500; and it is hereby made the duty of said clerk, on the passage of this act, to transfer the records and files aforesaid to the register of the land office at Jackson, Mississippi; and the nineteenth section of the act of March 3, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," be, and the same is hereby, repeated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I offer another amendment, to insert on page 9, after line two hundred and three, the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to purchase, for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives, ten thousand copies of Paschal's Annotated Constitution of the United States, $15,000.

Mr. President, I will state to the Senate, what perhaps everybody knows already, that Mr. Paschal has prepared a publication of the Constitution of the United States with annotations, referring to all the decisions which have been made construing the different provisions of the Constitution. It is prepared with a great deal of care and contains a vast deal of material. The only objection that I know of to the work—I presume the book has been placed in the hands of most Senators—is that it is published in very fine type, too small. If it were published in type of the same size as that used in the publication of our statutes it would make a volume as large as the volume of Statutes which I hold in my hand. That was one objection which some members of the Judiciary Committee had to purchasing any copies of it. The copies of Hickey's Constitution, which is a very valuable work, are becoming exhausted; and there is no book of more value to members of Congress and the public than the Constitution of the United States with these notes and references to every decision that has ever been made involving a construction of the Constitution. I shall take up no time in speaking of the work. It is very highly commended by those who have examined it, and on consultation with Mr. Paschal it is found that we can purchase ten thousand copies of it, to be placed in the hands of members of the Senate and members of the House of Representatives, and purchased through the Secretary and Clerk of the two Houses, for the sum of $15,000. That is $1 50 a volume; and the committee instructed me to recommend the purchase of it.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois whether this is recommended by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir; and notice was served long ago on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I remember that. Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary recommend that this appropriation be made.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I do not wish to throw any unnecessary obstacle in the way of this amendment, if it be a proper one; but I cannot myself see the propriety of appropriating $15,000 to purchase ten thousand copies of Mr. Paschal's work. I have looked at the book myself, rather cursorily, to be sure, and I am satisfied that the author has bestowed great labor upon it; but whether it is worth while for Congress to patronize to that extent the book enterprise of a private individual is another question entirely. I would not refuse my aid to furnish any necessary law book to members of the Senate or members of the House of Representatives; but I cannot see the propriety of Congress embarking in such an enterprise as this. I do not think it will pay in the end. I differ in this, perhaps, from the view taken of it by my honorable friend from Illinois. I should like to have some further explanation on the subject. I do not need Mr. Paschal's book myself particularly, although it may be a convenient manual on the Constitution. I can get along without it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If we do need it, it is just such a book as each Senator and Representative may very well put his hand in his pocket and pay for. I trust we shall pass no appropriation for books of this kind or any other kind at this session of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should, of course, defer to the judgment of the Judiciary Committee upon any question of law; but this appears to be a question involving an appropriation of money for the purchase of a certain book. I think that complaints are justly made against Congress for appropriations of this description. I know that if I need a book of this kind I can purchase one for my own use; and I presume that is true as to every other member of Congress; and all the information that may be derived from this book can be obtained from books to which all the members of Congress have access in the law library; and so far as information is concerned that we need here for the transaction of our official duties we have an ample opportunity to consult the libraries that are placed our disposal.

I should be glad to some extent to patronize this enterprise. I have looked at the book, and regard it as a valuable contribution to the law literature of the day; but I do not think that Congress ought, for the mere convenience of its own members, to appropriate $15,000 for the purchase of this book. It is simply, as it seems to me, taking so much money and putting it into our pockets; for there is not, in my humble opinion, any necessity that each member should be furnished with this book. It consists, as I understand, of a compilation of the decisions that have been made by the different courts in construing the Constitution of the United States, very valuable, no doubt, for reference; but it will, of course, be found in the libraries of Congress, and that ought to be sufficient, it seems to me, for our use.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suppose we should all agree with the conclusion arrived at by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Oregon if the view presented by them was the true view of the subject. If this was a proposition to appropriate $15,000 for our own accommodation, convenience, and profit, I trust that every Senator would vote against this amendment. But that is not the way the subject strikes my mind. We certainly do not want ten thousand copies for our own accommodation. One copy for each Senator would be all that is necessary in that point of view. The object of this amendment is to furnish the Senators and Representatives with a limited number of this valuable book, in order that they may place it in societies and in the hands of here and there an individual perhaps among their constituents, so that the people of this country may become better informed not only with the Constitution, but with that vast amount of law which has accumulated explanatory of the Constitution. That is the great object of the amendment, and I think that it would be of incalculable value at this time in the southern States as well as in the other States that there should be a limited number of these books distributed. This is a Government resting on the Constitution, and nothing can be more important than that the people should understand its principles.

Another view and object of this amendment, doubtless, is to encourage and measurably, perhaps, compensate for the arduous labor which has been bestowed upon the work; but that is a subordinate view of the subject; the main object of this amendment is to place this book in the hands of clubs and societies, so that the people may be informed as to the Constitution.

As to the book itself, from what examination I have given to it it seems to me to be of the highest order; and the very fact that it is in such a compact form, the print so fine that it can be afforded cheap, was made an objection in the committee, but it is not a book which you want to read through continuously from beginning to end. It is principally wanted for reference, and its very compact form is an advantage that it possesses.

This is no new proposition. I am informed that Congress has from time to time voted fifty thousand copies of Hickey's Constitution, and I really think that this is a great deal better thing than that, inasmuch as it contains the decisions of the Supreme Court, and is much more elaborate. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I should be sorry to see this appropriation made. My estimate of the value of the book, I think, is not below that of the Senator from New Jersey; but I think the Senator from New Jersey will agree with me that its value consists mainly in its adaptability to the wants of the legal profession and to members of legislative bodies. The annotations are very concise; they suggest to a lawyer, to a professional mind, where the interpretations and adjudications upon particular points may be found; but I think the Senator from New Jersey told the truth when he said it was not intended for general reading. I think it is a book which you would scarcely expect a man to take up and read, any more than you would expect him to take up and read a dictionary. It is valuable to the lawyer; it is valuable to the statesman; it is convenient for reference, I think. I thought so, and I bought it, and I think I got the worth of my money; and I think any other lawyer, or any other statesman, who will buy it will be satisfied with his bargain; but I think if the Legislature were to appropriate the money to buy ten thousand copies, and distribute them, it would make a bad investment. We could apply the money in a great many ways to better advantage than that.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, I have two objections to this amendment. One is that the price to be paid for these books, if the amendment should be adopted, is a very exorbitant one. I am satisfied that the price to be paid is three times the cost of the manufacture of the book. The result of the amendment, if it is adopted, is to put some ten thousand dollars of clear profit into the pockets of the proprietors of the work, whether the annotator or some book firm that has engaged in the publication of it.

The second objection I have to it is to any such thing being done at the expense of the Government of the United States. I think that such enterprises should stand upon their own footing and upon their own merit, and not be ckd out this way from the Treasury of the nation; and I call upon those Senators who have been so accustomed to talk about the condition of the public Treasury and about economy to look here and say what public good is to come from the expenditure of $15,000 to buy ten thousand copies of this book. We should, under that arrangement, probably be entitled to forty or fifty copies apiece, and what should we do with them? Send them to that number of individuals in our respective States. Where is the public benefit that is derived from a transaction of that kind? I do not see it; and least of all do I see any necessity for paying $1 50 a copy for a book that does not cost fifty cents a copy to manufacture.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, this proposed appropriation comes, it seems, from the Committee on the Judiciary. I was not aware that such an amendment had been recommended by that committee. I was present in the committee on two or three occasions when the proposition was considered, and when various amendments with regard to it were submitted, none of which commanded the approval of a majority of the committee; and I was not aware that it had been brought up afterward, and a recommendation made; it must have been when I was absent. Being a member of the committee from which it comes, I wish to express my dissent to the amendment.

I should be very glad to see the gentleman who has compiled this book, evidently with a great deal of labor, receive from some source a recompense and a profit for his work; but I see no principle upon which he ought to receive it from us. If the book is to be bought upon the theory that it is valuable to the members of the two Houses, then it is a discrimination, I submit, wholly arbitrary between this book and many others more indispensable, which we are compelled to resort to the public library to look at, or else to buy, unless we do without them altogether. During my service in Congress I have purchased a great many books which I found indispensable. I have done so this winter. I could enumerate them if it were worth while, and Senators would see that they are much more useful and much more indispensable than this book. Therefore I say, if the idea is to furnish to each Senator and member of the House of Representatives facilities for information, it would be better to appropriate a sum of money and allow each member from that sum to help himself to the books which his convenience and exigencies most require.

But if the idea suggested by the honorable Senator from New Jersey is the true one, that it is to be purchased for popular distribution, then I submit that this proposition is indefensible. Why? Because although the book may be excellent there are a great many other most excellent books which it would be well to distribute, but which nobody proposes to buy at public expense. For example, we have never distributed the Scriptures, and yet we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that large portions of this country are greatly in need of the Scriptures, the Old Testament and the New, and possibly portions of the country which have representatives here to speak for them. I do not venture to speak for them, as I have no personal knowledge of any region so benighted. There are many other books which would be very useful, but we do not buy them. We confine our book distribution to books made here and the departmental books, and I have long thought that there was a fair field for criticism and discussion there. Suffice it to say, however, that we have not gone beyond that. Here is a proposition to accept the work of a gentleman who makes what is considered a valuable work, a law book, and purchase it in considerable quantities for distribution. The compilation of the Constitution and of matters cognate to the Constitution, referred to by the Senator from New Jersey, made by Hickey, is a peculiar case. It is not like this. We know something of the history of that. I think that is an excellent book, and I wish very much we could have a reprint of it. I found with great difficulty this winter one copy of it in an odd store, and I paid an odd price to get it. It is out of print, I understand. That, however, was a peculiar case.

But now, Mr. President, I wish to make this suggestion to the Senate, which I consider, beyond the mere expenditure of the money, the unwholesome feature of this case: once establish that applications of this sort are to be entertained and to succeed on account of the merits or the pertinacity of the person or the sympathy which may be enlisted for him, and every sort of book-maker comes here. It is not only Lanman's Dictionary of Congress, which has eventually been dispensed with, I believe, but the author of every sort of book, however remote it may be, if it relates to any subject commanding the respect of Congress, comes here asking that he be assisted; and if authors are to be assisted, why not artists? Why not men excellent in the fine arts as well as in law or in literature?

I submit, sir, that the whole thing is beyond any province which we can fairly assume; and therefore, without criticising this book at all, without denying that it would be valuable to members of Congress and to others, I shall vote against this appropriation, and I hope it will not prevail either for its own sake or for the example it will set.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, if this were a new question I suppose I should oppose the buying of any books; but this is a matter too well settled now for any member of Congress to raise a question about it. A number of years ago a large number of copies of a Digest of the Constitution was purchased by Congress for distribution—Hickey's Constitution, I think it was called—and a few years since Lanman's Dictionary of Congress was bought, being a book giving the biographies of members. Then we publish at the Government Printing Office matter by the ton, and by the hundreds of tons, I suppose. This is a good book; a very valuable work. It is a very limited view of the case to suggest that members want it for their own use. I suppose no Senator really thinks anything of that sort when he makes the suggestion. There is no such purpose as that, of course. It is for the same purpose that we order tons of worthless matter to be printed and published and sent out among the people. Here is in a succinct form a great deal of information. Ten thousand copies will cost $15,000, while we print books costing much more which are really not worth the space they occupy in our libraries, which are never opened after they go away. This is a useful book, and I prefer in buying or publishing books to take care, so far as possible, that they shall be useful. This book presents in a succinct form, well arranged, all the authorities on the Constitution of the United States. When there is so much controversy in Congress and elsewhere in regard to the proper construction of the Constitution it seems to me it is well enough to throw out among the people in such a form as this some information of it. It is very much better than to be printing reports of explorations and reports of boundary surveys containing exhibitions of birds and insects and creeping things that cost enormous sums of money, and that are only useful to amuse the children of the people at their homes. Here is a useful book, and I think it is proper that we should aid in its publication and distribution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As one member of the Judiciary Committee, I wish to oppose, as far as my vote and influence, if I have any, go, this amendment. I do not think this is the time when we can indulge in luxuries, or, if you please to call them so, useful necessities of this description. The book is a good book, and there are a thousand other good books, and it would be a very fine thing if everybody had it; but I feel very sure that my constituents do not want to pay taxes for the purpose of having another copy of the Constitution sent into Vermont. We have a good many copies of it there already, and have had for a great many years; and also of the decisions that have been made upon it. When the whole country is groaning under taxation, and when every additional dollar in an appropriation bill is an additional burden upon the people, whom my friend from Indiana loves so well, I think it is high time that we should pause in this matter of book-making, and endeavor to bring up the balances of arrearages that now exist in the revenue before we enter upon schemes of this kind. The fact that we have, unwisely or otherwise, hitherto indulged in the luxury of printing and publishing and buying books for the people, such as have been named, is no argument in favor of this proposition. Undoubtedly there have been great abuses of that kind, and this will be another, under existing circumstances, in my opinion. I am very sorry, indeed, that my friend from Illinois has offered the proposition.

Mr. FESSENDEN. When I first came to the Senate it was the fashion to publish everything that originated under any action of Congress in the way of exploring expeditions, boundary surveys, Pacific railroad surveys, and all such matters, and the expense was very enormous, and the benefit, in my judgment, comparatively slight. It was also the fashion occasionally to purchase other books manufactured out of Congress and not under the direction of any officer of the Government, but that was not carried to any very great extent. Hickey's Constitution is the only instance I recollect of a book purchased by Congress in large numbers, and that was stopped soon after I came to the Senate; it was thought that that had gone far enough. I am not aware of any instance of the kind since that time, except in the case of Lanman's Dictionary, and I suppose the peculiar reason for purchasing that was that it contained something about ourselves that it was thought important to communicate to everybody, as far as possible. I cannot give any other reason for it. But, sir, I was not in favor of any of those propositions; and the effort has been of late years, instead of buying other people's books, because we published too many of our own, as suggested by the honorable Senator from Indiana, to see if we could not cut down the number. His argument seems to be that because we waste a great deal of money publishing books that we get up ourselves, and which are of no value, therefore we should spend an additional sum in buying books got up by other people. The argument does not strike me as a sound one. If we publish so many useless books ourselves, as we unquestionably do, I think it is rather an argument why we should attempt in some way to reform that abuse instead of adding another abuse to it. The publication of large books of surveys with plates was stopped some time ago; and we have been endeavoring to reduce our expenses in that way, but there is still room for improvement in other particulars.

I belong to that illiberal class of persons who think that the matter of the education of people is not a subject that comes exactly within the regulation of the General Government; that the subject of education had better be left to the States; that it would be better taken care of there; that when we take it into our own hands the result will be a slackening somewhat of the efforts made on the part of the States to educate their people, and we shall be imposing upon the Government a great additional burden rather to the injury of education than for its benefit. The proposition to have an educational bureau with a Commissioner of Education at its head did not commend itself to my mind, and did not meet my approval or my support. Congress, however, decided upon it, and it is done. I hope the experiment will prove beneficial in its results; but I doubt very much whether it will do any good. I think it will be more likely to produce evil than good. That is my opinion about it.

Now, sir, I really hope we shall not again begin the system of buying books. This may or may not be a good book; I know nothing about it. From what I know of the author I should think it probably was a good book, because I regard him as an able man. But, sir, that is no reason in my judgment why Congress should again begin this business of buying books that are compiled by individuals to be distributed among the people. What will ten or fifteen thousand dollars spent in this way for books to be distributed by Congress do toward the education of the people? We shall send them perhaps to a few libraries that are perfectly able to buy one apiece themselves, or to individuals, or school districts that are able to purchase them for a dollar and a half or two dollars. It will go a very short distance, and produce comparatively but very little good. I have seen very little good arising from the distribution of books by Congress; and even if good might arise from it I dislike entirely the system. It is a bad plan to spend public money for the purchase of books to be distributed by members of Congress. It only leads to expense, creates an additional burden on the Treasury, and I do not think the good derived from it is at all adequate to compensate for the evil that arises from establishing or encouraging any such system.

We had before the Committee on the Library a similar application for the purchase of a book compiled for the use of schools principally, something in the nature of a law book, by a gentleman in New York. He wanted Congress to purchase one copy for every school district in the United States, and offered them at a very low rate, hardly exceeding, if it was up to the cost of the manufacture of the book itself. I was opposed to the proposition, however, and so were the committee. I do not know that they reported upon it; but it met with no favor; and it met with no favor for the reason I have stated, that we thought the system was a bad one, and Congress ought not again to begin in a course of action which had once been abandoned as not only useless comparatively in itself, but as a bad practice. In this case, then, however well I may think of the author, I really hope the Senate will not begin again to purchase books for distribution.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I suppose that enough has been said on this subject. There appears to be a majority of opinion, I should judge by what I have heard, against the purchase of this book. I am glad that that is the case. I am not in favor of the investment, nor have I been in favor of the purchase of other books that have been authorized by Congress. The Senator from Maine tells us that he supported the purchase of Lanman's Dictionary because it told the country something about him.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe the Senator misrepresents me. I said I could not see any other reason for buying it; but I was not in favor of it.

Mr. CONNESS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was referring probably to the Senator himself and others who supported it.

Mr. CONNESS. It happened to be my part also to oppose that publication, for I really did not believe it could say anything about me that would be of any service to anybody, and least of all perhaps to myself. [Laughter.] I am sorry that I misunderstood the Senator, but I am glad to find that we agreed on that proposition. I hope, sir, that we shall not invest in the purchase of this book, however useful it may be, that we may simply add it to our libraries and have a few to distribute. I think that while we are cutting down needed appropriations of public money for many branches of the public service we ought not to make this investment. I disagree a little with the Senator from Maine in one respect; and that is this: where the Congress of the United States order work to be done, investigations to be made, contributions, if you please, of knowledge for public purposes, I think an investment of public money for the publication of the ascertained facts is a part of the work and necessary to be done and a good expenditure or investment of public money.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This seems to be treated as if it was a new principle and embarking in the purchase of books. If it would suit the Senators from California and Maine and New York any better we could change this amendment so as to direct ten thousand copies of this work to be printed, as we do every day here on the motion of any member, almost of anything that is sent here.

Mr. CONKLING. You cannot do that without buying the copyright.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We could buy the copyright; that would cost but little; and that was one of the propositions suggested in the Judiciary Committee. There were two members of the Judiciary Committee opposed to this amendment; I was aware of that; but a majority of the committee were always in favor of procuring in some form for the use of Congress a republication of the Constitution. Those two members of the committee expressed their dissatisfaction there, and have done it here today. If the Senate do not think it proper to have a republication of the Constitution of course they will vote down this amendment and they would vote down the proposition in the other form. The committee have carefully considered the matter, a majority of them knowing that Hickey's Constitution was out of the market, difficult to obtain. They regard that as a very valuable book; I find it so; and regarding this as still more so with its references and annotations, a useful book to all public men, and it being supposed that to republish it would be more expensive than to purchase copies of the book already published, the committee recommended the proposition in this form. I care nothing about it more than any other Senator. I thought it was a proper purchase to make, and a useful book for the benefit of the Senate.

Mr. YATES. Mr. President, I am considering how I shall vote on this matter. I have heard so many speeches that I think it not improper to submit my own views to the Senate. I think there is a medium view to be taken of this subject of printing books. I think that the Congress of the United States should not become a publishing house to publish all good books for circulation and for the benefit of the people. On the other hand, I think that Congress should use a wise discretion, and should be, to some extent, a patron of authors, and, if the Senator from New York pleases, of the fine arts. I do not see why a republican Government should not patronize authors and the fine arts as much as a monarchy or any other Government, especially if there is as much ability with Congress as there is with crowned heads and aristocracies.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have made appropriations for the fine arts; to Vinnie Ream, for instance.

Mr. YATES. Yes, sir; and very properly, I think. I hope the Senator himself will be satisfied in the course of time that that was a judicious appropriation, and I believe he will be if he does not prejudice the case before a fair experiment has been made. If he is as liberal and generous to the young, the aspiring, and the deserving as he ought to be, and as I believe the real merit of that artist justifies, I think he will not regret that appropriation.

But, sir, I was about to say that I believe Congress should exercise a wise discretion in the matter. I have never heard of complaints on the part of the people that Congress published too much and expended too much for information circulated among the people. So far as I am concerned, I know of nothing that gives the people so much gratification as to receive public documents from members of Congress upon important questions which affect their interests and their welfare. The discretion which ought to be used is this, I think: it should be to patronize authors and the arts. For instance, if a valuable work will not sustain itself, if it will not pay for itself, and the country must lose the benefit of that work unless some aid is given to it by Government, whether it be a monarchy or a republic, in that case it is the duty of Government to lend its aid in order to secure to the people the benefit of a good production.

I very well remember that Hickey's Constitution was received throughout the country as a valuable book, and was so prized, not only by professional men, but by the people. It was a good book to circulate. It conveyed to the firesides of the people a knowledge of the Constitution upon which the Government is based. This book, as I understand it, is to some extent to supersede Hickey's Digest of the Constitution. I am not very much inclined to vote for the publication of this book, because I see it is a small book, and it might have been laid upon the desk of every Senator, so that he could have examined it and investigated it, and seen whether it was proper for publication or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Judiciary Committee only received copies.

Mr. YATES. I am told they were confined entirely to the members of the Judiciary Committee, and we must take their word that the book is a good one. But, sir, the subject-matter is a proper one. I presume the book is one which will not sustain itself to be sold in the market. It is of that character, and contains that kind of information which is useful to professional men; and whatever is useful to professional men is useful to the public.

Mr. CONNESS. Oh, no.

Mr. YATES. As a general rule, every book that is useful to the professional man is also useful to the people, whether they understand it or not. It is necessary that those classes should have the information, and thus impart the benefit of it to the community.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not circulate Chitty or Blackstone for the same reason?

Mr. YATES. I do not propose to circulate Chitty's Pleadings or Blackstone or Story's Commentaries on the Constitution; but I repeat, I am in favor of a liberal publication by Congress of all important works, and I say to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] that I am willing to make publications of explorations and surveys; for I think if my friend from Vermont would read a little more of the great West—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not find that in the Constitution.

Mr. YATES. I mean the other Senator from Vermont—he would not oppose the admission of Colorado into the Union. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that he divide this work, and have half of it for geography. I am sure that we need as much information on the subject of geography—certainly I do—as in respect to the Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. YATES. I was about to say that whatever information is important to the country should be published by Congress with a liberal hand. But, sir, I do not propose to continue the debate. I think that this work is a proper subject of publication. We need such a work throughout the country, and I shall vote for this amendment with great pleasure.

Mr. MORTON. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that there is a very broad distinction between the publication of documents by Congress, reports of scientific explorations made in pursuance of laws of Congress in regard to our own Territories and minerals, explorations made by our Navy, and other information which would not be given to the world except through the action of Congress, and the purchase of a work of this character. I believe the general character of our documents is such as I have stated. Some of these documents perhaps are not valuable, are not published perhaps with very much discretion; but still there is a very broad distinction between the publication of documents of that character at the public expense and the purchase of books of a general character applicable as well to a State Legislature as to Congress, to the lawyer in his office and the private student as to a Senator.

Such is the character of this book. It is a good book, and could be studied with profit by everybody, but it does not pertain peculiarly to Congress. It contains information that everybody ought to have; that members of the Senate ought to possess in order to enable them to discharge their duties well. But, sir, there are thousands of books, as was suggested by the Senator from Vermont, works on geography, works of science of various kinds, that it would be important for us to possess and to understand; but should we purchase at public expense books of that kind because we need them and because we ought to know what they contain? If so, we should be furnished with libraries at the public expense. In my opinion the purchase of books of this kind cannot be justified.

The Senator from Illinois says that this book will not sustain itself if Congress does not help it. Then, like other books, it will go out of print. There are thousands of good books that fail; but books of real value, as a general thing, sustain themselves in this country; they are profitable. So many copies of them are sold that it is wholly unnecessary for the Government to come in and aid the publisher or author. If we need this book we ought to buy it at our own expense, just as we would buy a work on geography or geology or mineralogy.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] says that we ought to republish the Constitution. Sir, there is another book that the members of this Senate need about as badly as they do the Constitution, and that is the New Testament. I have seen a recent publication of Commentaries on the New Testament, said to be in a very compact and excellent form, and novel in its character. We, individually, need that book as much as we do this, and there would be just as much propriety in buying it at the expense of the Government as there would be in buying this book, especially at this time; but who would think of doing that?

Mr. President, let us set the example of retrenchment in every reasonable form. I do not mean to retrench expenses where they are necessary, to adopt the penny-wise and pound-foolish system of economy; but where there are expenses that are not legitimate in their character, and can be well and properly dispensed with, we ought to dispense with them. This is only $15,000; but we have no right to expend it in this direction.

Something was said about supporting the fine arts. Well, sir, there are two ways of doing that. The appropriation that we have made of $10,000 for a work of art may turn out to be valuable hereafter. At the present time, I believe, it is generally the subject of ridicule.

Mr. President, I am utterly opposed to this amendment. If we need this book let us buy it, as we would any other book that is important to us; and let the people buy it, as probably a great many of them will do; but the idea of our purchasing ten thousand copies of a new work on the Constitution containing commentaries, notes, and references to authorities on that subject, it seems to me, is entirely improper.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] induce me to suggest some reasons, which, if he will reflect upon, I think he will agree to, why this appropriation should pass. He says there is no more reason for buying this work than for buying the New Testament; and he tries to show us that is out of our line altogether. Now, I recollect that we passed a bill a year or two ago for the codification of the statutes, which is a precisely analogous work to this, and we received a communication from the codifiers this morning. Suppose some private individual had codified the statutes thoroughly, just as we find the decisions on the Constitution codified and arranged in this work, and offered it to us at fifty per cent. or ten per cent. less than the usual cost, would it not be legitimate for us to buy it? It is just as important to us to have the practice of the Government under the Constitution, and the decisions upon the Constitution before us in a convenient shape as it is to have the statutes codified.

This work has been done, well done, better done than a commission would have done it; and the question now is, after it has been done, a work which we ourselves would have ordered, whether we shall purchase some copies of it.

If it were an original question, after Hickey's Constitution and Digest had gone out of print, and much new matter of construction of the Constitution had come up and needed arrangement, and there had been a proposition to appoint three gentlemen to codify and arrange the authorities and decisions, I think it would meet with the approbation of the Senate. I think it is quite as important as the codification of the laws. It is just as important for us to know what have been the decisions of the different departments on the Constitution as it is to have the statutes codified and arranged. It is a work of great labor; and it has been admirably done by a gentleman of great ability, better than a commission would have done it; and the question now is whether we shall give this work some encouragement by purchasing a few copies. It is a work that will not obtain the circulation that it ought to obtain without some appropriation from Congress. It is more useful for members of Congress than for any one else. It ought to be circulated in the libraries. It is of great importance that the people should know what the Constitution is and how it has been regarded by different departments of the Government, and how its provisions have been construed. Inasmuch as this work, which we would have authorized in the beginning, has been accomplished by the private enterprise of an eminent man, it seems to me it does not fall under the same head as ordinary publications. That was my opinion when the subject was before the Committee on the Judiciary, and I think so still. I think there is a distinction between it and other published works which do not relate so materially to the carrying on of the Government. To understand the construction of the Constitution every department of the Government must have some knowledge. Let us have some means of obtaining knowledge in carrying on these different departments. We need it for practical use as much as we do the statutes, and it is quite as important. If we had made this codification it would have cost us ten times as much as it will to get it in the way that is now proposed.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Until the gentleman from Nevada made his remarks on this amendment, I could not understand why it was brought here from the Judiciary Committee, and I am not able to see now why they should have selected this particular book rather than half a dozen other books. We have a small epitome or digest of Story's Commentaries on the Constitution. Then there is Sheppard's small work upon the Constitution, and Wilson's, and some half a dozen other books just like this.

Mr. STEWART. None of those books are like this.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Perhaps the covers are of a different color.

Mr. STEWART. No; the contents are not alike.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. They are on the same subject, and the only question is as to which is the best on the same subject. A majority of the committee have decided that this was the proper book for us to select and publish at the expense of the Government. It looks to me as though it was a matter of injustice to others who have written on this subject, for it gives a sort of monopoly to this particular book. It gives an advantage certainly to this author which those who have charge of the publication of Story's Work or Sheppard's Work or Wilson's Work will not have, because it comes with the approbation of the Government.

Then, again, I see no reason why this book should be published and sent abroad at the expense of the Government any more than the statutes should be. Why should not Congress on the same principle publish the entire body of our statutes and send them out into every school district of the country?

Mr. MORTON. Or Helper's Book.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Or Helper's Book. I am inclined to think that would be more help to the country than this will be. I am surprised that my friend from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] should urge this matter, because about a year and a half ago I believe the Constitution was left in almost every village of the West in a famous tour that was made, and Indiana was especially favored in that circulation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And the flag.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Yes, sir; and the flag also, and I am not aware that there is even a picture of the flag in this book. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does the Senator indorse that view of the Constitution?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. No; I think it is a spurious edition; but many of the people of the West have been indoctrinated in that view of the Constitution, and it might be better, perhaps, to give them a better edition of the work.

Mr. President, the principle upon which we have published the agricultural reports and the reports of our exploring expeditions is a very different one. The material which enters into the agricultural report is collected by the Government itself, and cannot be collected by any individual or society, and that material is digested and put into the form of a book, and then sent all over the country for the advantage of the agricultural interests of the country. So these great exploring expeditions are always accompanied by men of science who collect the materials of science; those materials are taken and digested and put into form by some men of science; and then circulated at the public expense, simply because no individual, and no number of individuals, could collect that material or circulate it at their own expense. Every interest of science is advanced by that circulation, and the whole country is benefited. But there is no earthly reason why this book should be sent abroad at the public expense any more than fifty others. Why should not the United States Senate pass an amendment to this bill that the Government should publish some of the editions of the spelling-book, Webster's, for instance, or Worcester's edition of the spelling book, because it is better than any other spelling-book which has ever been published, and, therefore, send it forth at the public expense? I am entirely opposed to this thing. We publish too many books at the public expense.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not feel very strongly about this matter any way, and I hardly know that I should feel called upon to say anything in regard to it, if it were not moved as it is by the Senator from Illinois, who admonished me yesterday that I was in danger of appearing neglectful, to say the least, to the Senate and to my duties to this bill by allowing amendments to be made without an attempt to resist them.

But I do not rise in that spirit even now to resist this, simply because the Senator from Illinois has offered it, or because it is an amendment to the appropriation bill; for I do not conceive it to be my duty to stand here with a bludgeon to strike at every thing because it is proposed upon an appropriation bill. But, sir, I doubt somewhat whether this proposition fulfills any of the conditions that have been required in the purchasing of books, or making publications of books for distribution. The Senator from Illinois puts it upon the only ground which could address itself to the Senate; and that is that this work is useful for us in the discharge of our duties. I am aware that copies of books have sometimes been purchased by both branches for the use of individual members; but I believe not to this extent. Here it is proposed to purchase ten thousand copies, and that would imply a distribution of the work. Certainly if it is to be limited to the uses of individual members, this number is much too large. I hardly think it will be found, on careful examination, that this book, although one of decided merit, commends itself so strongly that we can say that it is absolutely a matter of necessity to us, the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, to enable us properly to discharge the duties of our offices. It does not strike me that even that argument is particularly forcible.

The ground upon which the other Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] puts it, I hardly think is tenable. Certainly we have never heretofore established any precedent of that sort, that it is proper for the Congress of the United States to purchase books published outside of Congress for popular distribution. That, I think, would be establishing a precedent not to be favored by Congress, and certainly I think it would not be tolerated by the people. Then I suggest to my honorable friend that, valuable as this book may be, it addresses itself not to the popular heart, not to the popular judgment. It furnishes a kind of information most useful to certain classes, and not to the people at large. It is most useful to professional men, lawyers particularly, and statesmen in a general way. The idea of publishing such a book as that to meet a popular demand, as stated by the Senator from Illinois, would not be precisely what I think the people would expect. But, sir, I am opposed entirely to the idea of purchasing the books of any author for popular distribution. I do not believe it is warranted by any precedent; nor can I understand how it can be warranted in the nature of our Government on principle.

The only other ground upon which we distributed publications to the people in the shape of books is, that they are either official or officially connected with us, or officially or politically connected with the transactions of the Government; such as exploring expeditions. We have published many books on the explorations of the country; but those stand upon entirely different grounds. They are connected with the transactions of the Government, and it may very well be supposed that the people take a deep interest in the transactions of the Government; but it must be remembered that all those publications have been on a very limited scale. So, I repeat, to say all that I design to say, that I do not believe this proposition fulfills any of the three conditions upon which it is possible to conceive that under any circumstances it is proper to publish books for distribution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 13, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cole, Frelighuysen, Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, Nye, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, and Yates—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Cattell, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Doxittle, Drake, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Howard, Howe, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Ross, Tipton, Vickers, and Williams—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cameron, Chandler, Conness, Corbett, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, McDonald, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Thayer, and Wilson—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask leave to lay on the table an amendment which I propose to offer, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have another amendment to offer. Before doing so, I wish to state that I received from the Attorney General ad interim, a communication so late last evening that I have not had time to give notice to the Committee on Appropriations of the amendments which he asks to have made to this bill in reference to the Attorney General's office; and if the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, considers it his duty to object to them, of course they cannot be considered. I will state what they are. The Senator from Maine, it will be observed, has taken pains in the other Departments of the Government, particularly in the Treasury Department, to correct the bill which he says was framed upon the basis of the business in those Departments before the war, by putting in the number of clerks that now exist there; but in the Attorney General's office he has omitted to do that. The number of clerks has been reduced, and the amount of money appropriated for the contingent expenses of the Department, for wood, fuel, labor, &c., has also been reduced. I have a communication from the Attorney General ad interim, stating that the office cannot get along with the force which is allowed to it by the bill, and that there will be a necessity for employing special counsel, and that the $5,000 for fuel and other expenses will be insufficient, and recommending that those appropriations be increased; and I will offer those amendments unless the Senator from Maine, having the bill in charge, objects for the want of notice. If he does, they cannot be offered. One proposition would be—I will make it in form so that the Senator from Maine can understand it—to add two clerks of class one; and another would be to increase the sum of $5,000 for fuel, labor, furniture, stationery, and miscellaneous items to $9,000. This is recommended by the Attorney General. I will make that motion if the Senator does not raise the question of order. If he does, the amendment cannot be offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to say a word about that. All the clerks in that Department that were estimated for but two are in the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes; and the Attorney General says that those two which are omitted are necessary; and he also says that this $5,000 appropriation is insufficient.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee had but one rule, of course, about it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems that they dropped these clerks out, and have also reduced the estimate. I have no interest in it, I wish to say, at all. This letter was addressed to me, I suppose, because I was chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, stating these facts. Perhaps I had better have it read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Where does the Senator find the sum for contingent expenses reduced?

Mr. TRUMBULL. The sum recommended, as is stated in this communication from the Attorney General, was $9,000, and it is $5,000 in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the Senate committee did not reduce it. The Senate committee took it as it came from the House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senate committee took upon itself to correct the House bill in reference to the other Departments, but has not done so in reference to this Department.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senate committee acted upon this principle: Where there was a discretion, and the House had exercised it, the Senate committee did not undertake to exercise a discretion against the House committee, unless upon evidence furnished by the Department which satisfied them that the House had not exercised a sound discretion. Our attention was not called to this item to which the Senator now addresses my attention. I do not think we had any information on that subject. If the Attorney General had communicated to the Committee on Appropriations what he has communicated to the Judiciary Committee I do not doubt that we should have entertained the proposition and considered it. Under these circumstances, whether I ought to enforce the rule as against the Senator I hardly know. It is not a rule for my personal privilege. Any Senator can object who thinks that the case requires objection. To show that the committee did not act without proper information on the subject, I hold in my hand a communication from the Attorney General's office on this subject, in which may be found these words:

"The clerical force allowed for the next fiscal year is sufficient for the ordinary routine work of the Department, but would be insufficient should any calls be made upon it similar to the calls for pardon reports by Congress during the present year."

This is the information we had from that Department under date of March 16, 1868.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But the Senator will see that the bill does not allow the force that has existed; it strikes out two clerks.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This communication has special reference to this bill; it says "the clerical force allowed."

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not allowed by the bill, but by law, I suppose, is what is meant.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir, allowed by the bill as it passed the House; and it further says in regard to the Attorney General's office:

"The sum allowed for contingent expenses, namely, for fuel, labor, &c., $5,000, may suffice with the most rigid economy."

That is what the committee ought to enforce, I submit. I think we are right, and therefore I feel obliged to invoke the rule on this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment cannot be received except by unanimous consent, without notice being given.

Mr. CATTELL. I move to amend the bill on page 44, line one thousand and eighty-one, as per memorandum that I send to the Clerk.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was on page 44, line one thousand and eighty-one, to strike out the word "six" before "thousand," and after "thousand" to strike out the words "five hundred," and at the end of the clause to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1868, the annual compensation of the weighing clerk shall be $2,500, and the compensation of the calculating, accounting, and warrant clerks shall be $2,000 each.

So that the clause will read:

Mint at Philadelphia:

For salaries of the Director, treasurer, assayer, melter and refiner, chief coiner and engraver, assistant assayer, and seven clerks, $59,000: Provided, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1868, the annual compensation of the weighing clerk shall be $2,500, and the compensation of the calculating, accounting, and warrant clerks shall be $2,000 each.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will take the opportunity, while that amendment is under consideration, to say a word about the amendment which I proposed and which the Senator from Maine considered it his duty to object to. On looking at the paper which he read, I find it purports to be a letter from the chief clerk, Mr. Pleasants, to the Attorney General. The letter to which I referred is from the Attorney General; and it will be seen, if the Senator will look a little more carefully at the letter which he himself had, that it refers to the Assistant Attorney General for information upon the subject; so that there is no contradiction at all between the letter of the Attorney General and any other letter that the Attorney General has written, as there is but the one letter, and that is simply a letter from a clerk. I do not know that I properly discharge my duty in the matter without having the Attorney General's letter read, because he goes at some length in this communication into the facts to show the absolute necessity to the Government of increasing these appropriations. He states that he is there ad interim merely, and that a new officer will soon come in, and that it will involve a very large expense to the Government in the employment of special counsel to carry on its business unless some appropriation is made. I wish the Senate, and the Senator from Maine, who objects to my amendments being considered, to understand the facts in case we should hereafter have any controversy about it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will state another fact for the information of the Senator from Illinois. I understand that letter to be from the chief clerk, but the chief clerk represents the office, and that communication was sent to us by the Attorney General himself, and I have the letter in my hand, in which he communicates that letter as stating the needs of his office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois being objected to, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. CATTELL.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have it explained, so that we may know precisely what it means.

Mr. CATTELL. The amendment which I offer is an advance in the salary of some of the clerks holding responsible positions in the Mint at Philadelphia. The salaries of these clerks have not been advanced since the year 1854. They are there on precisely the same salaries that they were at that time, while in almost all the governmental departments, as is well known, the salaries have been increased. The salaries of these clerks now are $1,500 per annum, and they are obliged to give bond and hold very responsible positions, the weigh clerk having sometimes from five to eight million dollars of bullion in his charge, and passing through his hands in a single year $69,000,000 of bullion. The compensation paid to these gentlemen, who are under bond and who have such responsible positions, is less than that of a third-class clerk in any of the Departments in Washington. The advance in these salaries is recommended by the assistant treasurer of the Mint at Philadelphia, Mr. McKibbin, indorsed by the Director of the Mint, Mr. Linderman, in a letter which I hold in my hand, and warmly indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury himself, Mr. McCulloch. These letters may be read, if any Senator desires to hear them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Are you instructed to move the amendment by a committee?

Mr. CATTELL. No, sir. My attention was called to this subject too late to have it included in the Finance Committee's report. It was spoken of in the Committee on Finance, and met with no objection there, but was too late to be included in their report. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will remember that I called his attention to the subject. I gave him the notification required.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes; that was all right.

Mr. CATTELL. I exhibited the papers to him, and we talked the subject over, and my belief at that time was that I had made an impression on his generosity.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Decidedly, as a matter of generosity, I have no doubt you established the case; but if you have not the recommendation of a committee, I submit whether you are not out of order. You can move it at some other stage, having obtained their consent. I hope the Senator will allow it to pass over now.

Mr. CATTELL. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that matter is dropped for the present, I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line five hundred and fifty-five, on page 23:

But the Special Commissioner of the Revenue shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, act as superintendent of the division in the office of said Secretary created by the thirteenth section of the act approved July 27, 1863, entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes," and called the Bureau of Statistics; and the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint one division clerk, at the same salary as a head of division, in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall act as deputy to the said Special Commissioner of the Revenue in respect to the said bureau, and exercise in his absence all powers belonging to him as such superintendent, except the franking privilege; and the office of director of the Bureau of Statistics is hereby abolished.

I will make a brief explanation, at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. This amendment proposes to abolish the office of the Bureau of Statistics and to transfer the duties of that bureau to the Special Commissioner of Revenue, and it provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may designate one clerk with the salary of a head of a division to act as chief clerk of this bureau, under the direction of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue. Some time ago this subject was referred to the Committee on Retrenchment and examined by that committee, and they instructed me as a member of the committee to report this measure as a bill to the Senate. Afterward it was referred to the Committee on Finance, and I am also instructed by that committee to report it as an amendment to the appropriation bill, and recommend that it be passed. According to the judgment of both of those committees it will save expense to the Government and tend to facilitate the transaction of that business in a more satisfactory manner to the country.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to offer an amendment in addition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] yesterday, and which was adopted. I move to insert after the word "Treasury," in the sixth line of that amendment, the words "and the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is not now in order, I take it.

Mr. STEWART. This is the amendment that was spoken of last night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair.) The amendment is not in order at present. It will be in order after the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to know on what ground the proposition is ruled out. I had a similar amendment to offer.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. You can move it in the Senate. That amendment has been acted upon in committee.

Mr. HARLAN. It is an amendment to an amendment, which amendment has been acted on heretofore.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio having been adopted in committee, it can only be amended in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be in order when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether I am in order now in moving to increase the salary of the Assistant Postmasters General from $3,500 to $4,500, making it equal to that of the Comptrollers of the Treasury? It would come in properly on page 41, line nine hundred and eighty-four.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That can be offered in the Senate perhaps. Let the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. RAMSEY. Now I move to amend the bill on page 41, line nine hundred and eighty-four, by striking out "three" and inserting "four," and in the same line striking out "ten" before "thousand" and inserting "fourteen;" so that it will read, "Three Assistant Postmasters General at $4,500 each, $14,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question will be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Shall they be taken in gross or separately?

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to have a separate vote on the amendment of the Committee on Finance relating to the increase of the salaries of the Comptrollers and Auditors of the Treasury, in order that I may move to amend it hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be excepted. If no other amendment be excepted the question is on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the excepted amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have that amendment read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert as an additional section the following:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th day of June, 1868, the annual salaries of the Comptrollers of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Customs shall be $4,500 each; of the Solicitor, the Auditors, the Register, and the supervising architect of the Treasury, $4,000 each, and the additional amount necessary to pay the increase of salaries provided for by this section be, and the same is hereby, appropriated.

Mr. STEWART. I now move to amend that amendment by inserting after the word "Treasury," in the sixth line, the words "and the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. How much does that give him?

Mr. STEWART. Four thousand dollars.

Mr. HARLAN. The salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is now $3,000, and if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada should be adopted it will put it on the same basis with the salaries of the Auditors of the Treasury. They are now, as I understand, $3,000 each. Formerly the General Land Office was a part of the Treasury Department, was a bureau in the Treasury Department, and when the salary of the Auditors was fixed the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was fixed, many years ago; I suppose more than half a century since. If it is proper to increase the salary of the Auditors on account of the increased business and the change in the value of money, it certainly is equally proper to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to add that if the salary of any officer is to be increased the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office ought to be. In my judgment there is no department of this Government managed with greater efficiency and greater thoroughness, and none in which the business is discharged more satisfactorily than the Land Office. I think the Commissioner is one of the most thorough, efficient, and accomplished officers under the Government.

Mr. RAMSEY. I say ditto to all that the Senator from Nebraska has said; but in addition to that, I think at the same time when the salaries of the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury are raised the salaries of the three Assistant Postmasters General ought also to be raised. They are gentlemen of high character, and their duties are laborious and constantly increasing. No other Department of the Government is so steadily growing as the Post Office Department. Then, again, it is a Department that brings into the Treasury all that it costs to the Government, and therefore there is no impropriety whatever in giving to these officers the same compensation that is granted to officers of similar grade in other Departments.

Mr. THAYER. I agree with the Senator, and will cheerfully vote for that proposition.

Mr. CONNESS. The question of adding to the salaries of the Assistant Postmasters General is not now before the Senate. When that comes before the Senate of course we shall consider it. I do not understand the propriety of an argument on that which may convince the Senate that they ought not to vote for the amendment now proposed. I wish each to stand upon its own merits.

Now, sir, I desire to say in addition to what has been said in regard to the Land Office, a few words, not to put the proposed increase of salary to the Commissioner upon the efficient manner merely in which that officer performs his duties, but the many hours required to perform them in. It is a fact that the Commissioner of the Land Office is employed an average of from twelve to fifteen hours every day of his life in performing his public duties. The business of that office has so increased that it is impossible to perform it in the hours ordinarily allotted to business. I happen to live in the vicinity of that gentleman, and I have often tried to communicate with him from my house in the morning shortly after eight o'clock; but I have never yet been able to do so; he had gone to the office, and was engaged in his arduous duties. He remains there until a late hour in the evening, and then carries to his house work belonging to his public duties, which he performs in the hours of the night. Whatever indisposition there may be—and I now address myself to my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] with whom I generally agree, and do agree upon the main proposition that he has in view, that is, against the increase of salaries—whatever indisposition there may be, it is a matter of the slightest possible justice to concede this increase to the officer in question. I hope that there will be no opposition to it. If there be an increase due or rightfully belonging to any officer in this Government, it ought to be conceded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. If another officer shall succeed the present gentleman he cannot in any way perform the public duties without giving an equal amount of his time to their performance. I speak of what I know when I speak on this subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is a very valuable officer and has a very important office; and I have no doubt either that his salary ought to be increased.

Mr. CONNESS. Then the Senator will vote for it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Perhaps so; perhaps not. The Senator will hear what more I have to say on this subject. There are also other officers in the several Departments whose salaries ought to be increased if you increase these.

Although I was decidedly of opinion that the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Ohio with regard to the Comptrollers and Auditors in the Treasury Department ought to be adopted, yet I saw at the time it was offered that it would lead to motions to put on a great many other officers whose salaries ought also to be increased. There is no doubt that those salaries are too low. But I wish to call the attention of Senators to the question whether this mode of doing a thing by halves or by quarters or by tenth parts is a wise one. If the Committee on Finance thought that this matter in the Treasury Department ought to be rearranged, I think they should have reported their bill, or else let the whole subject alone. A great deal has been said about the twenty per cent. extra compensation. Now you see what is coming. The honorable Senator from Nevada very justly moves to amend by inserting the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Why not on the same principle insert also the Commissioner of Pensions. He works as hard, as long, and has as important an office.

Mr. CONNESS. I think it ought to be done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well. Why not, then, raise the officer who is over them all and who works as much as any of them, the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, who is a valuable, accomplished, and very laborious officer. His office is of higher grade than those of the heads of bureaus; and why should he be left at $3,000 when you raise the salaries of the heads of bureaus to $4,000? My opinion always has been that the Assistant Secretaries should certainly have one half of what is paid to the Secretaries. A few years ago we raised the salaries of two or three of the Assistant Secretaries to $4,000; but there was so much trouble about it that after a good deal of difficulty a committee of conference fixed all of them, I think—I do not know that I am right about that, but my impression is all of them—at $3,500. They certainly did some of them.

Mr. SPRAGUE. That is right.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All of them, I believe, at $3,500. I think that was it. There was a compromise by which they were fixed at $3,500. Now, if you raise the salaries of the Comptrollers in the Treasury Department to $4,500 and of the Auditors to $4,000, why not put the Assistant Secretaries in the Treasury Department at $4,500 also? They are certainly of a higher rank. But if you do that, the other Assistant Secretaries in the other Departments will say, "Why not put our salaries at $4,500?" Then, perhaps, it will be as well to fix them at $4,000 and submit to the apparent anomaly of having the two Comptrollers, who are very important officers, to be sure, at $4,500. But you see you have got to go through. Then come the Assistant Postmasters General, who are very valuable officers. One of them told me some time ago, when the other matter was under discussion, that so long as others were left at $3,000 they were content to have theirs left at $3,000, although it was rather hard to get along on it; but if you meant to raise the others in the other Departments they would not be content unless you raised theirs also. I suppose they have $3,500 now, and the same rule would apply to them.

Then again, look at it still further. After you have done this with reference to these heads of bureaus and Assistant Secretaries, come in their order all the clerks in the Departments clear down to the lowest, and the messengers, and especially those in the lower grades. They turn around and say to you, "Is this just? Here you have taken the men who have the highest salaries;" for that is all they look at; they do not look at the comparative nature of the services or the positions; and I think really it is getting to be pretty strongly argued by members of Congress; I think I have heard it intimated in this Chamber that it was very unjust that you should give a Secretary, the head of a Department, $8,000, and not give a clerk $8,000, just as much. Why? Because he works just as many hours and as hard. That is getting to be the idea, the leveling principle that every man in our Government should stand on exactly the same basis. But whether that would be the case or not, if you raise these heads of bureaus and Assistant Secretaries, which ought to be done, from $3,000 or $3,500, as the case may be, up to $4,000 and $4,500, what will you do with the argument that here are numerous clerks in the Departments serving for $1,200, who have families to support, and cannot live on it; and so all the way up and down. All these things you have got to meet when you once begin with any particular officers to raise their salaries, however necessary it may be.

Therefore, looking at that matter, I came to the conclusion some time ago that you must do one of two things in order to avoid the difficulties arising from these hard times; you must either in all the Departments put a fund into the hands of the head of the Department to apply it, according to his best discretion, to the clerks who deserve it, who ought to have more, and who could not live on their salaries, in order to retain the services of those men, and trust to that for a few years to tide over this time of paper money until things get back to somewhere near their original position, or else you must go to work at once and reform and reorganize the several Departments and put them on a proper basis. We tried the first plan in the Treasury Department, and it gave so much dissatisfaction and created so much talk and so much denunciation of one kind and another that it became very unpopular, although in the Treasury Department I know that the fund was applied on the principles on which it was given, because I recommended it myself, and I recommended it for the purpose of applying it to keep valuable clerks that could not be kept in any other way; but at once it raised the cry in Congress, "Here you are raising these men who receive the higher salaries, and you ought to raise all." That plan has now gone out of date. Gentlemen do not like that. Very well; then the other thing to be done was to reorganize all of these Departments, and put them on a proper basis and fix the salaries accordingly. That has this difficulty about it: that when you have once fixed them, if we should return to specie payments, and they should be found too high, it will be pretty difficult to reduce them; and that was the reason why the other system was adopted as a temporary expedient.

Now, I wish to warn gentlemen that they have got to carry this thing through if they begin it in this way. I voted for the motion of the honorable Senator from Ohio. Why? I voted for it because the Comptrollers and Auditors ought to have more pay. They have been receiving more pay in the Treasury Department, because up to this year the Secretary of the Treasury had a fund in his hands by which he was enabled to increase their pay; and I know that was the only thing that enabled Mr. Taylor, who is spoken of, to stay. He said he would leave the Department once or twice because of the inadequacy of his salary, and his inability to support his family on the amount that he received; and I agree perfectly with what has been said by gentlemen, that unless we are very lucky we shall lose a great deal of money when he goes out of that particular bureau. But this increase being begun with these gentlemen, you have got, in common justice, to carry it through. You must increase the salaries of your Assistant Secretaries accordingly, and you must increase the salaries of the men who hold the same relative positions, and whom it costs just as much to live, in the other Departments as you do in the Treasury Department. It is no more than right. Perhaps they should not all receive exactly the same; but an increase should be made relatively.

Therefore I cannot, in common justice, after this vote has been passed with reference to the Comptrollers and Auditors—they hold very important offices, to be sure, and are very valuable officers—refuse to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Nevada, and I shall make a similar proposition myself, if nobody else does. I should not have made it if this proposition had not come from the Committee on Finance, to increase the salary of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury Department. If nobody else makes that motion I shall make it, because I think it no more than justice. If we increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, we ought to increase at the same time the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions and of the Assistant Secretary in the Department of the Interior. They are just as valuable and laborious officers as he is, and you cannot make that improper distinction between them. Therefore, sir, having begun it, let us carry it through.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it is economy to starve men holding these very important offices, or pay them less than will secure good services. Now, as to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whether we have the present incumbent or another we never should have a man there that could not earn at least $4,000 a year. It is really one of the most important bureaus in the whole Government, and it affects the interests of the people at large quite as materially as any other. The Commissioner must be a good land lawyer, and in our system, as we are extending it over the mining regions, it involves the necessity for continued investigation of that new subject of law, and requires a man who is not only a good lawyer, but is willing to work constantly; and $4,000 is the least possible figure that ought to be offered to a competent person.

The present incumbent is competent. When he shall go out you certainly cannot get a competent person to take the office at $3,000 with its additional labors. The labors are now more complicated and much increased over what they were formerly. That office being a striking example of this insufficiency of pay, and knowing something about the duties of the office, I have offered this amendment.

I concur with the Senator from Maine that other officers who are equally meritorious, if there are such, and I presume there are several of them, ought to be relieved. I think it should be done in every case where it is manifestly just; but we ought not to put this off on that account. They can be put on some other bill, and let this bill go through with this amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is just as much justice in putting them on here as there is for putting on this case.

Mr. STEWART. There may be.

Mr. HARLAN. I do not wish to be misapprehended here. I advocate the Senator's amendment; but I gave notice last evening that I would move to-day to amend the bill so as to put the Commissioner of Pensions and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the same basis. There is, as the Senator from Maine has justly observed, the same reason for it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not include the Assistant Secretary also?

Mr. HARLAN. I have an amendment to increase his salary to the same as is here allowed to the Comptrollers, $4,500. Mr. President, the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions (although that is not now strictly in order) was fixed, I suppose, at the same time that the salary of the Comptrollers was fixed, when the disbursements from that bureau amounted to but a few thousand dollars a year. They now amount to more than thirty millions annually. The office has increased from a dozen or so of clerks to three or four hundred clerks. If there is any propriety in increasing the pay of any of these officers there is a propriety in increasing the pay of the Commissioner of Pensions; and I intend to make that motion, if this amendment should carry, and I think it ought to carry, if the amendment of the committee is to prevail.

The Senator from Maine said he was not in favor of doing things by piece-meal. That is the reason, I suppose, that the Senator from Nevada has offered his amendment. It will be my reason for offering the amendment that I propose to offer. If the pay of the heads of bureaus in any one of the Departments is to be increased because the present salary is insufficient, then the pay of the heads of bureaus in other Departments, where the labor is equally great, and where the salary is insufficient, ought to be increased. I am of the opinion personally that this is the better way to add the twenty per cent., to give to those whose labors justify the increase. I have no doubt that the pay of some of the clerks ought to be increased; but I do not believe that it ought to be increased in that mode, by adding a per cent. to the whole. As I have observed in the Senate heretofore, I believe that that pay should be given which will command the services required. The same rule should be established in regard to the performance of labor for the Government that is established in employing people to do labor for private individuals. A sufficient salary should be given to command the services demanded.

While I am on my feet, I may remark in relation to the Commissioner of Pensions, as it will save me the trouble of rising again, that there is a case where the Commissioner did resign and left the office on account of the insufficiency of his pay, and an abler officer and a purer man perhaps has never served the Government. He resigned and left the office and returned to private life, where he can make more money by the performance of less labor. There is at this time no Commissioner of Pensions in existence. The chief clerk at present is performing the duties of that office. I do not know whether the President finds it impossible to get a man fit for the place to take that office at the present pay or not; but it has been vacant for some time.

Perhaps I might make the same remarks with great propriety in relation to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. TIPTON. I have said not one word during the progress of these investigations; but if it is a fact, as the Senator from Iowa has just asserted, that gentlemen receiving such salaries as are received by the commissioners are retiring on account of the inadequacy of the support, I wish to suggest that it is also a fact known to every Senator here that there are thousands of men in all these Departments who are absolutely suffering for want of adequate pay, men who have just as heavy family expenses, who have just as heavy expenses relative to the education of their children, as those gentlemen receiving larger pay, and who are undoubtedly in many cases induced to resign on account of the inadequacy of their support. I trust, therefore, that if we continue to increase the salaries of those who have now the higher grade of pay, it will be with the distinct understanding that we shall not slacken our hands until we have done ample and adequate justice to all the employes of the Government. And if I was satisfied that such was the determination of the Senate, and that an increase could in some proper and legitimate and safe manner be made to the pay of the clerks throughout the Departments generally, I would most heartily indorse all these propositions which seem to be fragmentary and very unsatisfactory in the mode of accomplishing the general result.

In regard to the case of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, I desire to say, and it was especially for the purpose of making a remark on that point that I rose, that having known him for seventeen years very intimately, having served with him for three years in the Land Office many years ago, I should not be doing my duty toward him, I should be stifling all the better feelings of my nature, if I did not aver in the presence of these gentlemen who have so much knowledge on the subject of the efficiency of officers that I believe there is no more efficient officer in connection with the Government in the city of Washington than the Commissioner of the General Land Office. A more laborious man I have never known; and undoubtedly it has been his pride not only to discharge the daily duties devolved upon him, but to make himself a first-rate lawyer; and as a land lawyer I apprehend that he has nothing to ask of any gentleman connected with the Government, or perhaps connected with Congress, in any respect. As to his willingness to work it exceeds almost his ability, if that were possible. Certainly if there is an officer who deserves any advance in his pay it must be the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and I say nothing disparagingly of any other of the gentlemen occupying analogous positions, for my acquaintance with them, and the intricacy of the duties which they perform, is not so great, or perhaps I should say the same in regard to them.

I therefore desire to see the amendment prevail, and I trust we will resolve when we are dealing with this subject by piece-meal that we will also do it in detail, and do justice before we adjourn to all the employes of the Government.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. Before voting on this proposition, I wish to submit an observation. The proposition is to pay a number of officers here described $4,000 a year in lieu of $3,000, which they now receive. Their compensation as it is as large as that paid in many States to the judges of the highest courts in those States, and my inclination is to believe, if that were the question which I wished to discuss, that the compensation is not now inadequate. I waive that, however, for the purpose of coming to the question whether an amendment of this sort is wise to correct the evil, if it be true that some of these men are inadequately paid.

The Assistant Postmasters General, for example, stands here now in a predicament in which no addition can be made for them without violating the rules of the Senate, because no notice of such an amendment has been given; and the same thing is true with regard to a number of officers of similar grade. Therefore, to justify this amendment entirely, I submit that we must find in it an enumeration of those persons in whose case especially this hardship exists. Is that true, Mr. President, of this amendment? The way to determine its truth is to take particular officers, and not to consider all these persons together. I will take now the case of the Register of the Treasury, and I refer only to what the public prints have said, and therefore not to what is known in executive session, when I state that recently the incumbent of this office evinced a very great disposition to obtain it and hold it. It was a marked instance of activity and enterprise in the acquisition of office. Indeed, I believe I shall not trench upon executive secrets if I say that the departmental history of the Government furnishes but few examples of such agility, of such dexterity, in obtaining office and a commission to office as were exhibited in this case, because the public knows that after the newspapers of the city recorded a motion to reconsider his confirmation a commission was obtained and carried through its various stages and lodged in the hands of the person of whom I am speaking, and he took an oath to enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office, so as, if possible, to close the door against any challenge of his right to hold the office.

This occurred, I think, about two months ago. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] perhaps will remember more accurately than I do when it was. I think it was not more than two months ago; and now, after the lapse of that brief interval, at the commencement of which this gentleman was so ready and so eager to obtain this office, at a compensation then fixed by law, we propose to add $1,000 to him. Upon what principle? Will any Senator say that there is danger of his resigning because by turning to the quiet paths of private life he can make more money in some other way? Will any Senator, without disparaging him, tell the Senate that $3,000 a year is not a compensation full and ample for his services, no matter in what direction they are devoted? Why, then, should he be put higher, why should he be singled out and placed upon a roll on which the Commissioner of the Land Office, the First, Second, and Third Assistant Postmasters General, and others whom I might mention do not appear, and to be decorated—

Mr. WILSON. He must have a great deal of work to do, it appears, because he appoints a great many clerks.

Mr. CONKLING. I know a statement has been read here that this gentleman found cast upon him among the first of his duties the necessity of appointing, I believe, thirteen men and one hundred and seventeen women as clerks at an expense, as I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to state, amounting to $100,000 a year, and that sum to be paid out of the money appropriated to defray the expenses of loans. I do not know but that just as it stands is satisfactory to persons who know more about it than I do; but persons outside of this Chamber who think they know a great deal about it, and who have spent time investigating it, are greatly dissatisfied, without being I think partisans in the matter.

Now, Mr. President, this amendment involves one ingredient to which I wish to call attention. The other day in Committee of the Whole the Senate imported into this bill the provision which had expired giving a large sum of money to the Secretary of the Treasury with which to pay temporary clerks. Seeing that it was to be adopted, as everybody saw, I consoled myself, and audibly expressed the consolation that I felt that the amendment then proposed had omitted a part of the phraseology employed a year ago in a similar amendment; it had dropped that part of the phraseology which gave a large sum of money to the Secretary with which, at his option, to increase the salaries of officers and clerks. I do not suppose it was intended as a strategic movement; but if it was, I congratulate the Senator who thought of it upon the dexterity with which this has been done; he divided to conquer—that was the idea—to give it to the Senate in installments; first, to have the Senate vote the amount of money necessary to pay the temporary clerks, with the idea that sixty or eighty thousand dollars was to be omitted; and then in place of adopting the old language, and giving that sum to the Secretary to dispense among the heads of bureaus and clerks, under another form to increase the appropriation for salaries, so that now we come back to where we were last year, and the same inequality is to be preserved. The heads of bureaus in the Treasury Department are to be paid an increased salary by direct appropriation, and then the residue of the sum as it was fixed last year is to be lodged in the hands of the Secretary with which to employ temporary clerks. I cannot think that this is right; I cannot see that it is defensible upon the merits as to those men who are here; I cannot say that it is defensible in respect to the invidious distinction that it establishes; and I cannot see that it is right in its graduation of the amounts, when you remember the differences in prices existing now and existing at the time when the appropriation bill was passed which provided for it last year.

I have heard it said by Senators here that living is very expensive in Washington. Certainly it is; living is very expensive everywhere. It is expensive in the city of New York; expensive in the city of Albany; expensive in the city of Buffalo, and in other cities in which judges reside who perform large services, and do not receive, many of them, a salary as great as this. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this cannot be defended; and the way to avoid the injustice of excluding other persons on the one hand or of loading the bill with many on the other is, I submit, to vote down this amendment, and leave the law where it now is.

The honorable Senator from Iowa spoke of the Commissioner of Pensions. I agree with him entirely that he was a very pure and competent man, but I did not understand, although I once had a talk with him on the subject, that he resigned exclusively or chiefly on account of the inadequacy of his pay. The Senator, however, may have better information on that point than I have. The Commissioner of Patents also resigned some time ago. Did he resign on account of the inadequacy of the pay, I should like to inquire?

Mr. HARLAN. I am not able to give positive information; but I think in the latter case the officer resigned because of some misunderstanding between him and the head of the Department.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But his salary is higher, is it not?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes; his salary is $4,500 a year. I will say for the information of the Senator from New York, that I know that the late Commissioner of Patents remained in office at the request of the head of the Department for some time after he had expressed a desire, for private reasons, to retire.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not mean to question the Senator's statement: on the contrary, I agree that that gentleman was a valuable officer, and that his retirement was to be deplored. It has been said—and I was going to remark on that point—that the salary of the Commissioner of Patents is $4,500. So it is; and in my opinion it is a most exorbitant and unreasonable salary for any services that have been rendered in that office for a long time. I knew the late Commissioner of Patents very well; I served with him in the House of Representatives; and I have no hesitation in saying that any individual, or any Government which paid to him

$4,500 for any services which he rendered, or was capable of rendering, paid a salary utterly exorbitant, I might say ludicrously out of proportion to the services. And so by going through the tariff of salaries I presume we can find many instances of hardship where salaries are too low, and many instances such as I conceive this one that I have spoken of last to be, in which the salary is too high; and when we have bills reorganizing the Departments, as I hope we shall, Senators who are competent to do it will, I hope, adjust this more to their own and the public satisfaction, but for the time being I hope we shall not enter on the course we do when we adopt an amendment like this.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope the Senate will not adopt the Senator's advice at least in one particular. He requests that this amendment be voted down, and then that the committee's amendment be voted down. It seems to me it would be but doing justice to the mover of this to put this amendment on; if the other is right this is right, and let them stand together.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon. There may be an amendment pending which had escaped my attention. I did not understand that the amendment with reference to the Commissioner of the General Land Office was pending; I spoke of the amendment reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, the amendment which was adopted upon the motion of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARLAN. And to that is now pending an amendment to put the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the same category with the Auditors of the Treasury.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I am very glad to concur with my friend that if the amendment is to be adopted that officer ought to be added to it. I think it would be grossly unjust to exclude him. My proposition is to vote down the entire amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a few words to say in regard to these officers, but not in regard to the particular case pointed out by the Senator from New York. If in the opinion of the Senate or of any Senator the present Register of the Treasury is not a good officer and ought not to have this increase of salary extended to him, I have not the slightest disposition to include his case. My own impression is that the present incumbent is a good officer, and is attending to his duties faithfully and honestly and very vigilantly; but at the same time I do not wish to embarrass this proposition by the fact that, as it stands, he will be a beneficiary under it. He has never applied for an increase of salary, never alluded to it any way, directly or indirectly, so far as I know, to any member of the committee. This effort has been made chiefly for the benefit of the Comptrollers and Auditors, and we confine the amendment simply to that class of officers who are the heads of bureaus in the Treasury Department; but I should be perfectly willing, if any Senator has any doubt about it, to confine it solely to the Comptrollers and Auditors. I will state now the reason why we did not extend it to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and to the Assistant Secretaries of the various Departments.

These Assistant Secretaries do not perform judicial duties. Their functions, although their name is quite high sounding, are far less important than those of the Comptrollers and Auditors.

Mr. HARLAN. Allow me to say to the Senator that he errs greatly as to the duties assigned to the Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not speaking of him.

Mr. HARLAN. His duties require him to supervise, to some extent, the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am speaking of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury and the Assistant Postmasters General. Senators will remember that the Comptrollers and Auditors are really judges. They actually have at times to resist the decisions of the respective Houses of Congress until the mandate comes to them in the form of a law. They resist even the action of the executive authorities. The Comptroller has frequently resisted the decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury himself. They are independent judicial officers to protect the Treasury, without whose official sanction no money can be drawn from the Treasury even upon the requisition of other officers. They are officers of a judicial character, performing important judicial functions, and therefore they are older in grade and higher in rank than an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury or of any Department.

It is only recently that the heads of Departments have had Assistant Secretaries. They are new officers. Legally, they are nothing but chief clerks of the Secretary or head of the Department. The character of duties imposed on them is not the same as on these other officers. True, if there is a vacancy in the office of head of the Department, they may temporarily fill that office; but while they are discharging their ordinary duties, their office is simply that of a deputy or a leading chief clerk of the Secretary or head of Department, while the Comptrollers and Auditors have to perform higher functions, independent functions imposed on them by law, often in antagonism even to the head of the Department. We have in the Treasury Department six Auditors. None of them are selected with a view to politics; and so with the three Comptrollers; and yet it happens that these officers agree in political opinion with a majority of the Senate, all of them, I believe, though there may perhaps be one or two exceptions. They were most of them appointed years ago, during Mr. Lincoln's administration. They are admitted to be able and excellent officers. There are Mr. Taylor and Mr. Brodhead and Mr. Sargent; and the Auditors are all men of capacity and ability.

It must be remembered that these officers have for the last three years by law received a higher salary than the annual compensation fixed by the old acts; that is to say, authority has been conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury for three years to make them an additional allowance, and that has been done. They have actually been drawing $4,500 and $4,000 a year, precisely the amount that we now propose to give them by law, so that this proposition is not to increase their salaries as to them, but is simply to provide in a different mode what they have received for the last three years. We have the personal statement of these officers that their salary is totally inadequate for the support of themselves and their families living here in a plain, homely style; and we all know the fact that upon $3,000 a year a man occupying their position would have great difficulty in making the ends meet. Now, is it necessary for the United States of America, in the present condition of affairs, to starve out these officers who guard the Treasury of the nation, who perform the highest judicial functions, whose duties every day are of the highest importance, and reduce their salaries? This is not a proposition for an increase of salaries. It is a proposition to continue the pay that for three years has been given to them with your knowledge and by the sanction of law.

I submit to Senators whether under these circumstances you ought to embarrass a proposition of this kind, which has been examined by one of your committees, and made known more than a month ago to the Committee on Appropriations, by adding to it other provisions. Suppose it is true that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Assistant Postmasters General, and the Commissioner of Pensions receive too low a salary? By the rule of the Senate you cannot provide for them in this bill without giving the requisite notice. If it is necessary to provide for them, notice can now be given, and the increase can be voted on the miscellaneous appropriation bill, or any of the other appropriation bills that are coming up; but the officers whose cases are covered by this amendment have been provided for, according to our rules, by an amendment carefully considered, and an amendment which appeals to the good sense of every Senator.

There is one other consideration that I desire to suggest. There is already a great jealousy and a great feeling naturally in the Treasury Department on account of the inequality of the salaries in that Department. The officers created by recent laws receive higher salaries than those whose offices date longer back. For instance, the Treasurer of the United States, General Spinner, an officer of the highest character, gets $6,500 a year. Can any man say that General Spinner's duties are any more important than those of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, whose signature is required on every paper?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let me say to the Senator, with regard to the Treasurer, that his salary was fixed on an entirely different principle; and that is, his personal responsibility for money, which is very large, for which he gives very heavy bond, and it was thought his salary should be somewhat in proportion to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator must not understand me as complaining of the amount paid to General Spinner, because I think his services are worth to the United States much more than his salary.

Mr. CHANDLER. Allow me to suggest that the Treasurer of the United States gives a bond in the amount of $5,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I will waive that case. I have no doubt General Spinner earns his salary. But take the case of the Comptroller of the Currency: there is an officer with no pecuniary responsibility, who gives no bond. He is a man of unquestioned ability, who has risen from a subordinate place in the Department until he occupies his present position with conceded ability. His salary is $5,000. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has a salary of $6,000. Here are the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Comptroller of the Currency, neither of whom performs anything like the responsible duties of either of the Comptrollers proper of the Treasury, getting a much larger salary. Is it not something to a man of pride and feeling that those whose accounts he must supervise, who cannot draw any money from the Treasury until their judgment and their action is passed upon by him, should receive a higher salary than he does himself? Is that right? Does it not tend to create that want of esprit du corps, that sense of wounded honor, which every member of the Senate would feel under similar circumstances? Would I be willing to perform at a lower salary higher duties? Would I be willing that a man should perform subordinate duties to me, and that I should supervise and control his conduct, and yet he receive a greater salary than I? If so, it must be an admission on my part that I am unfit to receive the salary proportioned to the duties I perform. That is this case.

Go into the other Departments, and you find that the heads of bureaus in the War Department now receive under law $7,105 a year, and yet every account passed upon by the Quartermaster General, the Paymaster General, the Commissary General, and the Surgeon General must pass under the supervision of these accounting officers of the Treasury Department. These bureau officers are in that sense subordinate, because the accounting officers perform judicial functions over them, finally act on what they do, and yet these bureau officers in the War Department receive nearly twice the compensation of the First Comptroller. The reason is this: the first office created in the Treasury Department after that of the Secretary of the Treasury was the Comptroller of the Treasury. The very name imports the character of the office. The second officers are Auditors. These are independent judicial officers. They were created a long time back. The office of Comptroller was created in 1799, and the pay was then fixed at $3,500 a year, and there it stands yet. It has been filled by Elisha Whittlesey, and by some of the ablest and best men this country has ever produced. The salary was established seventy years ago on a gold standard, at $3,500, the same amount that you now pay to R. W. Taylor, when money has not half the purchasable value it had when the salary was fixed. So with the Auditors; the salary of an Auditor was fixed fifty years ago, in 1817, at $3,000. It was then higher than the salary of all the other officers around them; but now new offices have been created, new wants have been supplied, new salaries have been fixed by law, and in accordance with the liberal spirit of the times, the changed value of money, and the expanded wealth of the country, Congress has given more liberal salaries; and now, when these old and faithful officers, performing the highest functions in this Government, come here and ask to be put upon something like a footing of equality with those who perform even minor duties in their own Department, is it worth while to tell them that their pay will keep body and soul together? Is it right to say that the First Comptroller of the Treasury ought not to receive as much as the Comptroller of the Currency? One controls the whole Treasury, passes upon every account, directly or indirectly; the other controls the currency of sixteen hundred banks. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue collects between two and three hundred millions of money a year. It is a very important office; but the Comptroller of the Treasury has to pass upon the accounts for every dollar thus collected, besides all the other money brought into the Treasury from customs and other sources.

It seemed to me for these reasons, when this matter came up before the Committee on Finance, that this was one of those plain, palpable cases of injustice where, while we did not want to enter upon any general indiscriminate increase of salaries, provision must be made for the Auditors and Comptrollers. As I said before, if, in the opinion of Senators, the Register (who, I concede, is an officer of no more importance than the head of a bureau in any other Department) and the Solicitor of the Treasury ought not to be included among the Auditors and the Comptrollers, strike them off. I do not appear here to plead for the interests of any particular officer; but I do say that as to the accounting officers you ought to do justice to them, even if you are not able now to do justice to other meritorious officers of the Government. As soon as we come back to specie payments and lower prices, as soon as we settle down upon the peace basis, I have no doubt the whole civil list will be revised, and these officers will be scaled according to the nature of their services; but in the mean time we ought not to lower the compensation paid to these high officers; and as we have now taken away from the Secretary of the Treasury the power to give them $1,000 a year extra, which has been allowed by Secretary Chase, and Secretary Fessenden, and Secretary McCulloch, which enabled the Secretaries to equalize the salaries to some extent, we ought not to reduce their pay to the injustice and detriment of high officers of the Government, whose responsibility and integrity no man can question or deny.

I know from men, who would not speak a falsehood, that in regard to some of these officers they will not be able to continue in the discharge of their duties unless they have something like a compensation sufficient to maintain them with manly and reasonable independence. Some of these men have large families. You cannot always compare the exercise of duties by these officers with the performance of mere clerical duties, because there are obligations resting on these officers that do not rest on clerks and others. It may not be very pleasant, but it is true that official station brings with it obligations, and the higher that station the stronger those obligations are. It may cost no more to feed with bread a Comptroller of the Treasury than it does the poorest clerk; but still there are obligations resting upon him, from the nature of his office, his social duty, his social position, which imposes upon him an expenditure that is not demanded of others. And, sir, unless you are blind to a fact which we know exists at all times and in all ages and among all conditions of men in every form of government, there is a distinction made in salaries as to the character of employment, the nature of the service, the responsibility and the intelligence required for the discharge of the duties. No man is fit to be Comptroller or Auditor who could not in private life, in private business, get a larger salary than even the amount you now propose to give.

With these considerations I shall leave the matter entirely to the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, the object of the speech made by the honorable Senator who has just taken his seat is to show the Senate that it should vote to continue, as he describes it, the salary to the Comptroller and Auditors of the Treasury, to now put in the form of a regular salary the amount they have been heretofore receiving in the shape of salary and annual allowance in addition thereto; and also to convince the Senate that, in order that that may be done the pending amendment should not be adopted.

I listened with some attention to the honorable Senator, and I indorse in the most thorough manner everything that he said of the Comptrollers of the Treasury and the justice of allowing them the salary proposed. If my friend were equally candid and equally generous and equally informed (as he may be) in regard to the duties performed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, I undertake to say that he would not have made the speech that he has with the purpose of defeating the pending amendment. He has described to us the judicial character of the functions performed by the Comptrollers of the Treasury. I agree with him that they are of the most important character. I know how earnestly the honorable Senator from Ohio has spoken and feels on this question.

I repeat again that I agree with him, but that he does great injustice to the pending proposition without, perhaps, intending to do so. There are no duties performed by the Comptrollers of the Treasury that transcend in importance the duties performed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. His is essentially both a judicial and an administrative position. There is not a preëmption claim belonging to a citizen in this broad land that is not passed upon by that officer. There is not a claim for a grant of land but that the piles and heaps of papers are passed upon by him and examined and decided. Millions upon millions of dollars worth of property are determined by that officer constantly and continuously; and I think that there is not a Senator in Congress, nor a member of the other House, who would acquaint himself with the duties that officer performs and the manner in which they are performed and the length of time required in their performance, who would not agree at once to compensate him fairly and enable him to live as a gentleman should.

But the honorable Senator from Ohio deprecates the adoption of this pending amendment lest it should affect the amendment he proposed and which was adopted in committee. I regret to see this. I know that it is not in any spirit of defending the officers that belong to the Treasury Department, but it is because the honorable Senator from Ohio, chairman of the Finance Committee, is so well informed touching the duties of the officers of the Treasury Department, with which he is so intimately connected.

I might appeal to my friend, the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] touching the character of the duties and functions performed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I think that it is due to all the officers that we should courageously determine which of them should have an increase of salary, and give it to them. There was a proposition pending here a while ago that might have been adopted to buy $15,000 worth of books, which perhaps would never have counted the people or the Government the weight of a straw, which would make the entire compensation that is spoken of for these officers if it had obtained. We vote ten or fifteen thousand dollars away here in many ways, and we refuse to give to the occupants of important offices upon which the true and honest administration of public affairs, the public revenue and public means depend, and, indeed, by which the public credit is sustained, a fair compensation for their services. Now, sir, I am not afraid, for one, to vote such a compensation upon any or all occasions, and I hope to have the vote of the honorable Senator from Ohio in behalf of the pending amendment, and I shall be glad then to vote for his amendment; but I am not willing to make "fish of one and flesh of another." I think that it is time that we dealt with even-handed justice toward the officers engaged in conducting the great business affairs of the country and the Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am of opinion that great injustice is being done by the amendment put on this bill from the Committee on Finance. I find that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who signs all Treasury warrants and whose duties are certainly next to those of the Secretary, receives $3,500 a year; and yet you put his subordinates over him in point of salary. You put his subordinates at $4,500 and leave him at $3,500. And, sir, this morning I suppose I have been approached by twenty, it may be thirty, perhaps forty of the heads of bureaus in the other Departments of the Government, a very large number, and they all claim that their duties are as great as those whose salaries have been advanced, some of them greater. It is perfectly evident to me that we must either kill the proposition of the Committee on Finance or go into a general advancement of salaries from the head down and equalize them. If you raise the salaries of these subordinate officers to $4,500 there is no reason whatever why their chief should remain at $3,500. I have before me a proposition to raise the salary of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, designated to sign Treasury warrants to $5,000 a year. It ought to be. If his subordinates are raised to $4,500, of course his salary should be $5,000. I suppose it is not in order for me now to move that his salary be made $5,000; but I simply state the fact that this thing must either be stopped or be carried out.

I have finally come to the conclusion that there is only one remedy for all of this proposed extravagance, and that is to reduce the salaries of Senators to $3,000, and then claim that no man is entitled to more salary than a Senator. Do that, and we shall be able to stop it; and I shall move to-morrow, if this bill is not passed to-night, that the salaries of members of Congress be reduced to $3,000, and that that sum be the limit of any subordinate's pay. Then, sir, I hope we shall be able to stop this extravagance.

Mr. RAMSEY. What will you do with the President's salary of $25,000?

Mr. CHANDLER. I would cut off his extras. The President really receives $56,000 instead of $25,000. There is no other way but for us to cut down our own salaries, and then we shall stop this eternal clamor for advance of salaries. We have either got to stop the advance proposed by the Committee on Finance, or else advance every grade, provide that the female clerks, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] proposed, shall receive the same pay as men who perform the same service, and that all other clerks be advanced in proportion with those who have been advanced. Carry it out through all the bureaus and Departments, and I think perhaps five, ten, or fifteen million of dollars will accomplish it.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I would suggest that in bringing in a proposition for the reduction of the salaries of members of the Senate, the Senator enlarge the proposition a little and provide for equalizing the incomes of Senators. [Laughter.] We will all vote for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAMSEY. Make a common fund of the surplus income. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that my friend from Nevada has the largest of any one here from his gold mines, and he would probably suffer the most. But, sir, this thing has got to be stopped, or else we may as well abandon all restrictions and raise all salaries in the ratio already applied to some by the amendment you have adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have voted against all advancement, but I shall vote for including in this section all that are offered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Corbett, Davis, Doolittle, Drake, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McDonald, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Vickers, Willey, Williams, and Yates—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Cole, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Patterson of New Hampshire, and Wilson—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Conkling, Dixon, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Morton, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wade—21.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I propose to amend this amendment by striking out in the fifth and sixth lines the words "of the Solicitor, the Register, and the supervising architect of the Treasury."

Mr. SHERMAN. You had better leave in the supervising architect.

Mr. WILSON. Very well; I will make the motion simply to strike out the Solicitor and the Register.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not strike out the Register alone? Why not take the vote on that proposition by itself.

Mr. WILSON. We may as well vote on both. The Senator who moved this amendment told us that certain officers named in it, the Auditors and Comptrollers, had judicial functions. Certainly the Register of the Treasury has not; neither has the Solicitor; and I think they ought to be stricken out at any rate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will make no objection to the motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does the Senator from Massachusetts propose to disallow the Solicitor of the Treasury the same compensation given to the other persons? There is no question that he ought to have as much as the Comptrollers, in my opinion. He must be a man of education in the law; he ought to be a very able lawyer, and I believe the present Solicitor is. The office of Solicitor of the Treasury, in my judgment, is a more important office than that of the Attorney General. He has more to do with the law business of the Government. It has become now a great law office, in which the management of the law suits of the Government in all the courts of the United States is prepared and controlled. If there is any officer in the Treasury who ought to be discriminated favorably upon it is the Solicitor.

I am not satisfied that there ought to be an increase of any of these compensations at this time; the people are not making any more money than they used to do; but if there is an increase the Solicitor of the Treasury ought to enjoy it. Three fourths of the business that is transacted by the Auditors is routine, passes as a matter of course; the examinations are made in the proper Department before the papers go to them. Allowances are made by the Secretaries. The responsibility of the decision in most of the contested or doubtful cases is upon the Secretary of the particular Department with which the claim is connected. Take an important claim connected with the quartermaster's department; the Quartermaster General decides upon it, and then the Secretary of War decides upon it, and mainly the labors of the Auditors and Comptrollers are routine. There is not this difference that is talked about between these officers. I merely rose to say one word for the Solicitor of the Treasury. I think that is one of the most important offices of the Government.

Mr. CRAGIN. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Indiana one way in which the Solicitor of the Treasury has been in the habit of having an increase of salary heretofore. In a case in the custom-house at Boston, in the settlement of a claim there, the collector and naval officer I think paid over to Mr. Jordan $4,000, which he accepted, whether for services or otherwise I do not know, but he certainly accepted it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The present Solicitor? Mr. CRAGIN. The present Solicitor.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not choose to vote in regard to fixing permanently the salaries of the officers of this country on any rumor to the prejudice of a particular officer. The question is what is the grade of the office, what compensation a lawyer who is able to take charge of that bureau ought to have. He has the most important causes to superintend. I never heard anything against the present Solicitor.

Mr. CRAGIN. I will state that the fact I mentioned is stated in a report of a committee of the House of Representatives, and Mr. Jordan himself has admitted it over and over again.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let there be higher authority than a report of a secret committee of the House of Representatives. I do not consider any man's good name damaged much by that.

Mr. CRAGIN. The testimony of Mr. Jordan, as reported, shows the fact.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What he said I dare say would be all right, but I do not speak for him personally. I know but very little about him personally; but I know that the causes which are being tried in the courts below are well prepared in the Department. I have had occasion to meet some of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understood the Senator who moved the original proposition, and argued its necessity, to agree to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, to strike out the Solicitor and Register, and I suppose therefore the Senate will not object to that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask to have the question divided, so as to take the vote separately, first on the Solicitor and then on the Register.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division of the question is called for. The question being divided, the first vote is on the motion to strike out "the Solicitor."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cattell, Conkling, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Howard, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Davis, Doolittle, Drake, Fessenden, Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, McDonald, Ramsey, Ross, Sprague, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Willey, Williams, and Yates—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Morton, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, and Saulsbury—15.

So the first branch of the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on striking out "the Register."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cattell, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Wade, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Corbett, Doolittle, Drake, Fessenden, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McDonald, Ramsey, Ross, Sprague, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Willey, Williams, and Yates—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cole, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Morton, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, and Saulsbury—16.

So the second branch of the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to add the following words after "Commissioner of General Land Office" in the amendment as it stands:

The Commissioner of Pensions and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Can there be a separation of the proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I suppose so.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I call for a division of the question. I think the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is a very important one. The other is merely clerical; anybody can decide whether disability accrued because of service or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question being divided, the first vote is on inserting "the Commissioner of Pensions."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Corbett, Doolittle, Drake, Fessenden, Harlan, Howard, Johnson, McDonald, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Willey, Williams, and Yates—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Cole, Conkling, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sherman, Sumner, Thayer, Wade, and Wilson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Morton, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, and Saulsbury—16.

So the first branch of the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the second clause of the amendment, to insert "the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Doolittle, Drake, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, McDonald, Nye, Ramsey, Ross, Sprague, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Willey, Williams, and Yates—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conkling, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Wade, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, and Saulsbury—16.

So the second clause of the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting just preceding the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa the words "the Assistant Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would like to have the Senator state on what authority he moves that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I propose this amendment upon the same authority the other amendments have had for their support. They were propositions made by individual members of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. They were instructed to move those by committees, and notice was given. The Senator's motion is not in accordance with the rule, I submit.

Mr. CONKLING. Neither were the others; they were not referred to our committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, they were laid on the table yesterday and referred to our committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to inquire whether the rule applies in such cases as this. This is not an amendment to the original bill, but an amendment to an amendment. I do not understand that the rule covers an amendment to an amendment. It only covers an amendment proposed to an appropriation bill. This is an amendment to an amendment. I raise that question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Upon that point I hope the Chair will allow me to make a suggestion. It seems to me that the Senator from Maine must be correct, because you never can anticipate the amendments that may be necessary to an amendment. We can anticipate what amendments we desire to offer to an appropriation bill; but when an amendment is made to it it brings up a new question, and it seems to me it is in order to offer an amendment to that amendment without giving notice.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Whatever the Senator's theory may be the fact does not justify his inference in this case, because the amendment here has offered no new light, I take it, to any of the propositions—

Mr. TRUMBULL. Certainly it is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I cannot conceive that it has. It has not changed the character of the service at all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have voted for three or four amendments to the amendment that I never would have voted for as independent propositions. I merely voted for them as amendments to the original amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the rule read.

The Chief Clerk read the last clause of the thirtieth rule, as follows:

"All amendments to general appropriation bills reported from committees of the Senate, proposing new items of appropriation, shall, one day before they are offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Our rule has been that no amendment should be received to an appropriation bill increasing the appropriations unless it was offered from a committee; but that rule was never held to apply to an amendment to an amendment. If a committee offered an amendment, which brought the case within the rule, it was always held to be in order for a Senator to move an amendment to that amendment, because it was no part of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What would the rule amount to if you could get around it all the time in that way?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then make your rule so that we cannot get around it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That seems impossible.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The ruling has always been that where a committee offered an amendment, an amendment might be offered by anybody to that amendment increasing the amount or doing anything else. Now, we have a rule that an amendment must be referred to the Committee on Appropriations a day beforehand. When that has been done, and the amendment is offered in the Senate, why cannot anybody offer an amendment to that amendment, which then for the first time comes before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that an amendment to an amendment does not come within the provision of the rule. Any Senator may offer an amendment to an amendment without submitting it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONNESS. If it increases the amount of appropriation. Is that the decision?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, that does not make any difference in the case of an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one view of this matter which I wish to present to the Senate. Each name inserted here increases the appropriation, because the section as I offered it makes an appropriation to pay the increase of salary. This is a very important rule; and if you allow this proceeding it upsets the whole rule. Amendments of a legislative character are offered to an appropriation bill. Under this construction what, then, is to prevent any Senator from moving to hitch on to such an amendment a provision appropriating $1,000,000? When you add a new name to the list in this amendment you increase the appropriation, and in fact make a new additional appropriation. The Senate will see at once that if it is decided that an amendment to an amendment does not come within the spirit of our rules, as a matter of course it will be the easiest thing in the world for us to upset this whole rule. Suppose, for instance, the Committee on Appropriations should report an amendment appropriating $100,000 for the Agricultural Department, and then the Senator from Illinois, without authority from any committee, should move as an amendment to that amendment an appropriation of $500,000 for the increase of the judiciary fund. That would be perfectly proper according to his doctrine, but by it this whole rule would be defeated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that there is any question before the Senate. If there is I should like to reply to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing before the Senate unless the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I appeal, and wish to say a word on that question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Chair has not decided it, as I understand.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Chair has decided—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has intimated the opinion that an amendment to an amendment does not come within the rule relating to amendments being referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The question had better be settled.

Mr. SHERMAN. With perfect respect, I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, because it virtually upsets the rule.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I suppose it is in order to reply to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is a new rule; and it is the first time we have ever had a practical application of it to any extent. We have always been able to get along very well without such a rule. The Senator from Ohio, after adopting a new rule, is for giving it an application that would prevent the Senate from amending an amendment. It would be like the previous question here in the Senate. An amendment is intended to be proposed by some Senator, and he sends it quietly to the Committee on Appropriations. Neither the Senator from Ohio nor myself have ever heard of it. It comes into the Senate here for the first time, and we are to take that precisely as it is presented, and we cannot move to amend it; that is to say, we are to take the sum as proposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. This point of order is made upon the old rule. The objection now made does not come under the new rule. The objection now made is that the amendment of the Senator from Oregon does not come from any standing committee. That is the objection of the Senator from Maine, and it is an objection made under the old rule.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have been discussing it with regard to the point whether it came within the new rule. Now, if the Senator puts his appeal upon some other ground, it is a change of front.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I stated distinctly at first that that was the ground I put it on, though I did not get an opportunity to state it very fully.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The principle would be the same, I suppose; but the ground upon which it was argued by the Senator from Ohio, I understood, was that the proposition was not in order under the new rule. But suppose you take it under the old rule, was it ever the understanding in the Senate that if an amendment was moved by a committee a Senator could not move an amendment to it? That was never my understanding. I never knew of such a rule. This is the first time that it was attempted to be applied; and to give to the new rule the construction contended for by the Senator from Ohio virtually amounts to having none, is to having the previous question, which the Senate has never agreed to and I hope never will.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him on that point? It seems to me it does not amount to the previous question. An amendment, notice having been given, and it being in order, is under consideration. Anybody may move to amend that amendment, so that his amendment does not amount to a further proposition to appropriate; but the moment he offers an amendment of that particular kind, the rule takes hold of it. If a Senator gives notice of an amendment to increase a salary, when his amendment comes up I may move to increase it still more, or I may move to reduce it, because that is all germane; but when I come to propose as an independent proposition to give some other man an increased salary, to put in some further appropriation, but putting it in the parliamentary form of an amendment to his amendment, then I submit that the spirit of the rule attaches to it, and ought to attach to it if the rule is to mean anything, just as much as it would if I waited till he sat down and proposed the same words in an independent amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a refinement upon the rule that I think cannot be sustained. The Senator from New York admits that if notice of an amendment is given to increase the appropriation, it would be competent, when that amendment came up, for a member of the Senate to move to change that particular sum, to reduce it or to increase it, but he cannot move to amend it in any other respect. That is not the meaning of the rule that he may amend it in one way and not in another.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator hardly does me justice in saying that I contend that we cannot amend it in any other respect. I do not say that. I only suggest to him that when he comes to move to amend it in the particular respect of proposing a new and independent appropriation, then it falls not only within the spirit, but as I submit to him, within the letter of the rule.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The precise point is here: the Senator from Ohio originally moves to increase the salary of the Comptrollers of the Treasury. I understood the Senator from New York to admit that it would be competent for the Senator from Oregon to move to increase the salary of the Comptrollers still more. Then the Senator from Ohio proposes to increase that appropriation, but he insists that we cannot move to add to it the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer. I should like to know why not? What principle is in that if we can increase the same?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask my friend a question. Suppose, in pursuance of notice, an amendment is offered in the regular way to appropriate $100,000 for the improvement of the harbor of Chicago. That is an amendment of which due notice has been given. Suppose, as an amendment to that amendment, some one should propose an appropriation of $500,000 for the improvement of the harbor of Milwaukee. There is an amendment to an amendment, but it is an amendment proposing an increased appropriation. Is not that within the rule?

Mr. CONKLING. Allow me to suggest that it proposes not merely, as the Senator from Ohio says, an increase of the appropriation, but, in the language of the rule, a new item of appropriation. That is the point, a new item of appropriation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But it is an amendment to an amendment, and not an amendment to the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is precisely that case. Here is an amendment that has been carefully considered, that has gone through all the forms required, appropriating so much money to pay certain designated officers, and now here is an amendment to it to pay another designated officer not named in the amendment another additional sum. It seems to me that unless we intend to upset the rules which have been established to promote the convenience of business, we must hold that this is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a question of a great deal of practical importance, and I hope Senators will give it sufficient attention to decide it according to the real merit that it may have, because the decision now made will stand as the construction of the rule for all other cases. The particular item upon which we are now engaged is not of so much practical consequence, but of course this settles the meaning of the rule, and if the meaning of the rule be settled in the manner that the Chair indicates his construction is, it is equivalent to a repeal of the rule, because that construction permits the rule to be overborne indirectly, when directly the rule absolutely prohibits the increase of the amount appropriated in an appropriation bill unless you go through with certain forms. If there was any value in having this rule—and we have had it now for eighteen years as a necessary rule in this body—that this taking of money out of the Treasury to pay for particular items of appropriation should always be considered first in a committee, so that there might be a careful investigation of the proofs and grounds on which the appropriation should go, then I say that it is of a great deal of consequence that we should adhere to that spirit, and that is certainly the spirit and object and groundwork of the rule.

Now, it is claimed by the Senator from Illinois, that inasmuch as he can by the form of proceeding, not the substance of proceeding, but by the mere form of proceeding, evade the letter of the rule in the strictest and most technical parliamentary sense, that gives him the right to swing around the substance and defeat it entirely. That I deny. In every sense except the mere technical one I am speaking of, in every sense that we should act on in construing a statute, the term amendment to an appropriation bill or to any other bill includes the whole series of amendments, an amendment to an amendment, and an amendment to that, if parliamentary usage would permit you to go as far. They all belong to the bill, but in different degrees; each is the link in the chain that connects the remotest one to the bill. So that in any general and fair sense of the use of language an amendment to an amendment is just as much a proposed amendment to a bill as the first amendment is. The mere technical difference is purely the form of coming at it.

The question is whether the Senate is determined, in order to adhere to what appears to be a literal form in that narrow sense, to overthrow the whole substance of the provision of this rule. I do not think there is a Senator who hears me who is a lawyer or a judge, if this were a statute and he were on the bench, would not feel bound to declare that an amendment to an amendment in this narrow and verbal sense in which we are now speaking of it was in substance and reality an amendment proposed to the principal thing. If there is any such person, I venture to say that his salary ought to be reduced, instead of increased, on the first appropriation bill that shall come up.

One of the first rules of construction in all civilized courts is that you shall not adhere to the letter to the injury of the substance, that you are to look through the mere shell of phraseology to the real purpose and design of this statute of your body, as it is one, in order to reach its true construction. This purpose and design was to prevent the attaching to appropriation bills of new items of expenditure, increasing the price or cost to the people, until those proposals should have been subjected to the careful and rigid scrutiny of a committee. That was the object, and yet gentlemen coolly propose, by a literal construction, to take the very heart out of this rule. It cannot be fairly done, and I hope the Senate, independent of what their wishes may be as to this particular amendment, will so vote as to give this rule some life in the future.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am so much alarmed as to my salary being cut down for disagreeing with the honorable Senator from Vermont that I am going to say a word or two.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You are not a judge; I spoke about a judge.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You said "lawyer or judge." I used to be a lawyer, and therefore I may come, perhaps, within the description.

I raised this question for the sake of having it settled by the Senate, and I have been thinking of it before. The old rule was that an amendment increasing an appropriation could only be moved in a certain way, among others, by permission or direction of a committee of the Senate. If I remember rightly, under that rule, when such a motion was made by a committee it was then at the mercy of the Senate, and anybody might offer an amendment to that putting on an additional appropriation if he saw fit. I may be wrong in my recollection; but that is my recollection of the practice. If the practice is otherwise, my argument fails. The Chief Clerk undoubtedly will know better than most of us whether I am right or not in that particular.

Now, here comes another clause, and that is that no such amendment shall be offered unless it has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations a day beforehand. That apparently stands in precisely the same position, and would be subject to the same rules of practice that the other is. And yet I cannot help seeing that the effect of it, if carried to that extent, is substantially to defeat the rule, and that the better construction would be that any amendment to an amendment of that nature proposing to increase appropriations or to make new items of appropriation ought not to be allowed, because the result of it would be, as Senators can readily see, to destroy the operation of the rule, and I do not see any difficulty that would come practically from following the rule; for if Senators desire to put anything of that sort in they ought to give notice of it beforehand.

Still I revert to that original position that if we follow the analogy of the former practice of the Senate under the old rule, any amendment may be proposed to an amendment to a bill; and when you come to look at the philosophy of the thing it may be proper. A bill is before the Senate; it is printed and laid on the table, and every Senator can examine it. If he desires to make an amendment to it, he ought to know it in season, and the rule provides that he shall put that amendment in proper shape and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. But the Senate is not bound to take notice of all the amendments thus presented. They are not printed; they go directly to the Committee on Appropriations; nobody knows anything about them; and then they come in here in the ordinary way. Senators do not have the same notice of them that they have of the original bill. Therefore the reasoning would not seem to apply to them. Still I see what the effect would be of the construction which I think, in analogy to the old rule, the Chair has correctly put on this rule, and that is, that any amendment may be offered to an amendment. If the Senate choose to correct that, and say that under this new rule it shall not be allowed, I shall have no regrets about it, because the rule will then be made absolute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not suppose when I proposed this amendment that it was strictly in accordance with the rule; but I expected that its justice would commend itself so to the Senate that no objection would be made, for the very palpable reason that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has had his salary raised, and the Commissioner of Pensions has had his salary raised to $4,000; and now here is the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, who has for a long time acted as Secretary of the Interior, who is practically the law officer of that Department, whose business it is to review all litigated questions in reference to land titles and other questions of that description, and to finally decide them, and he is left to get on with a salary of $3,500. It seems to me to be a very singular state of affairs. I supposed that the same reason which justified increasing the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions would justify an increase of this salary, and I did not suppose any objection would be made. The propositions that have been made here, I have no doubt, though I am not advised as to all, have been simply made by certain members of the committee applying to other members of the committee for consent to propose those amendments, and they have been proposed as coming from the committee, when perhaps in point of fact they had never been considered by any committee, either by the committee proposing them or by the Committee on Appropriations, and in that way have been brought before the Senate and have been considered and adopted. If it be decided to be out of order I have nothing further to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is whether the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know that I can add to the discussion; but without undertaking to express any opinion on what the old rule was, or the old practice, it does seem to me that the new rule we have established, if it is to be preserved, requires an interpretation that shall exclude such a motion as that which is now made, except according to the notice required by the rule. I do not doubt that a proposition may be made on an amendment which shall be germane to it, which shall be kindred to it, which shall be essentially associated with that special amendment. For instance, a condition may be annexed, or it may be reduced; but to add another distinct proposition relating to another distinct subject-matter it seems to me entirely nullifies the new rule. If you can add to the first amendment a second amendment to increase the salary of another officer, why may you not go through the whole Government and add a proposition to increase the salary of the President of the United States or of the Chief Justice? By the same argument that you can add a proposition to increase the salary of one other officer you may add a proposition that shall increase the salaries of all the officers of the Government. It seems to me, therefore, that we cannot preserve the rule which we have at last established without excluding the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

The question being put, the decision of the Chair was overruled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon is out of order under the construction of the Senate. The question is on the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended, to add as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th day of June, 1893, the annual salaries of the Comptrollers of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Customs shall be $4,500 each; of the Solicitor, the Auditors, the Register, and the supervising architect of the Treasury, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Commissioner of Pensions $4,000 each; and the additional amount necessary to pay the increase of salaries provided for by this section be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have voted against these other amendments to this amendment, not because I had any special ground to distinguish against gentlemen whose salaries it was proposed to increase—I presume some of them ought to be increased—but because I am opposed to any increase at this time. That is the reason why I have voted "no" upon several amendments that have been offered adding to this list of officers, and I shall vote against this amendment, and I hope the Senate will not adopt it.

A great deal of truth has been stated by the Senator from Ohio as to the necessities of these gentlemen. That is a truth that he could assert as to the necessities of every Senator who hears me who has not a fortune, whose expenditures necessarily exceed his official income and salary, for the same reason that was told by some gentleman in debate, that even in this republican and democratic country there are certain expenses that belong to official station somewhat proportioned to the dignity of that station, family expenses, social expenses, official expenses, and "begging expenses," it is suggested. You are expected to subscribe to every good work, and a great many that are not good; and you have to do it. So, although our salaries are somewhat higher than those of these Comptrollers, it is just as true of us that we are pinched in order to make the ends meet on our salaries at the end of the year. It cannot be done. We are obliged, those of us who are lawyers, to resort to our professional occupations during the vacation, and during odd hours of the session of the Senate to run into the Supreme Court and earn $100, and do whatever we honorably and properly can in order to eke out that sum which it is necessary that persons in our position should expend for public and private objects.

All this is true undoubtedly of these Comptrollers, but the question is whether we can lift them at this time out of the position in which they are placed and leave the poor low grade of clerks—and when I speak of low grade, I of course am speaking of their official grade—who only get nine, ten, twelve, fourteen, or sixteen hundred dollars a year in the slough of despond, while we are elevating these others. They are pinched in the same way. Their expenditures are not as large, to be sure, but they have only a third of the money to pay them with. We are all in need of an increase of salary, or else we ought all to be able to make a dollar that we receive worth more in wheat and corn and wine and oil than it is now. That is the truth about it.

Can we, before we have settled our finances, before we have adjusted our taxation, before we have taken any of those great reformatory and revisory steps that always must follow after a period of disturbance and distress, such as this war has brought about, enter upon this special method of elevating particular salaries to particular officers? They must bear the griefs they have as the rest of us do, for the time being, until we shall be able to adjust all these salaries upon some proper substantial basis.

These are the reasons briefly why I feel obliged to vote against this amendment as I voted against the particular ones that were offered to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is not a consul of the United States, I believe, who is not asking for an increase of salary because he has all the dignity of the United States to sustain and nearly all the charities. A consul with $1,500 a year has to maintain his flag and the dignity of the United States and contribute to all the charities; and I believe there is not a single consul of the United States who is not to-day demanding an increase of salary because his necessary expenses in supporting the dignity of this great Government are so great that his pay is utterly incompetent to support him.

Now, sir, I find that the dignity of the United States has to be sustained by every one of these officers whose salaries have been raised; but I find also that there is not a subordinate, no matter whether his salary be $600 as a watchman or he be an Assistant Secretary, who does not equally have the whole dignity of the United States upon his shoulders. If it is necessary that every employé of this Government should sustain the dignity of the United States let us increase them all, and let us enable every one of them to sustain the dignity of the United States. It will be pretty costly; but after all dignity must be sustained; we cannot allow the dignity of this great Government to fail for the sake of a few hundred or a few thousand dollars which is simply required by each and every subordinate.

Sir, I speak from actual knowledge—my friend from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will bear me out—that there is not a consul of the United States anywhere from the Mosquito Islands to London who does not demand an increase of salary, and show us that it is absolutely necessary to sustain the dignity of the flag and the dignity of this great Government that his salary should be increased.

This is all right, I suppose; but if we commence the increase of salaries, let us go through and increase them all; let us have the dignity sustained; let the women in the Departments be paid enough to sustain the dignity of the United States; let the consuls of the United States who are scattered over the broad globe have money enough to sustain its dignity. Let us have dignity by all means; and let there be no lack.

But, sir, enough of this. We have commenced here and now an initiatory step. If this increase of salary is sustained in the Senate, then, sir, you must increase every salary from the highest to the lowest, and next year $10,000,000 will not pay for this initiatory step. You have inaugurated a system that, if carried out, will involve millions, and it must be carried out. I have here before me, and shall propose it now, a proposition coming from the Treasury Department to increase other salaries of a higher grade. You have insulted men here by raising their subordinates over them, actually insulted them. You have raised the salaries of subordinates over that of their principals. The dignity of the United States cannot be maintained if you raise the salary of a subordinate over that of his principal. You must maintain dignity. Here you have raised the salaries of your subordinates over that of an Assistant Secretary. You lose your dignity at once. It cannot be done.

Mr. NYE. I should like to know from the honorable Senator from Michigan if he did not vote for the additions. I noticed that he voted for them, and the question arises in my mind whether he has not helped to sustain the dignity by his votes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I propose to put them all on; you want part; I want them all on; I gave notice that I would vote for them all on the ground that if you raise one you must raise all. I voted for every one after I gave that notice. If you are going to sustain the dignity I want to sustain the whole dignity, and not a little part of it. I want them all raised if you raise any, and I expect the Senate to raise them all. And now, sir, I wish to move to put in at the place where my friend from Iowa put in his amendment—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question pending is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is in order, I believe, to amend the amendment.

Mr. DRAKE. It has just been decided that you cannot do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to put in "that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum." I move that as an amendment to the amendment, and after that I have twenty or thirty others which I wish to put in likewise.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will ask the Senator whether he has given any notice of that?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; it is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That has been ruled out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. It ought to be if it is not; and if this is not entertained, I shall vote against the whole section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment as amended.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I have not said anything about this matter, and would not if you had not obliged me to say yea or nay—

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Wisconsin to know whether he will not yield to a motion to adjourn or for an executive session.

Mr. HOWE. In one moment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We can finish this bill in a short time now.

Mr. HOWE. I will yield to a motion to adjourn in a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; let us go right on with the bill.

Mr. HOWE. Well, I will yield any way in a moment, whatever comes.

Mr. President, I am going to vote against this amendment; and yet I subscribe to the truth of almost every word that was urged by the Senator from Ohio some time since. I believe that we are not paying these officers an adequate salary. I believe we are not paying a single Government employé in the city of Washington, who does the duty which the law imposes upon him, anything like an honest salary. I believe that real suffering grows out of these meager salaries, and to relieve that suffering I would be willing to vote for an increase of this compensation.

But when Senators enlarge here upon the impossibility of supporting a family on a salary of $3,000 it astounds me that it does not occur to them that the difficulty of supporting a family on $1,800 or $1,200 must be very much greater. The House of Representatives, I am told, a short time since agreed to continue an appropriation or an increase of twenty percent. to the present salaries of the clerks in these Departments, and sent to this body a bill for that purpose, but the next day they recalled it, and it is said that no such proposition as that will receive the assent of this Congress. Taking it for granted that that is so, I cannot myself see the propriety of raising $3,500 to $4,500, and $3,000 to $4,000, and leaving $1,200 and $1,400 to be just so many dollars. I do not believe that it is honest or just. There are men holding $1,200 clerkships in the city of Washington who take to the daily discharge of their daily duty as much integrity, as much character, and as much capacity as you find at the heads of many of these bureaus. Now, Mr. President, I think that Congress must afford relief in some way to these necessitous. I should be glad to see it done at this session; at the next session I believe it will be done; but when you shall offer me an opportunity to vote to relieve the necessities of all these employés I am ready for it, and will vote for it. Until you give me such an opportunity I cannot vote to relieve the necessities of any of them, or if I do it must not be the least necessitous ones that I will vote to relieve, but I will ask that it be the most necessitous, those who receive the lowest salaries.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I intend to vote in favor of this amendment, and for this reason: I believe the committee who have examined this subject know a great deal more about it than the rest of the Senate, and they have unanimously recommended it, and the responsibility is with them. We have been told by one of the members of that committee that most valuable talent to the Government would be lost unless this increase of salary was made. I do not see the logic of the argument which has been made here, that men who get $1,200 or $1,800 are any worse off because we do justice in this emergency to a few of the officers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Corbett, Davis, Doolittle, Drake, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Hendricks, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Tipton, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Willey—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Cragin,

Edmunds, Howe, McCreery, Patterson of New Hampshire, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Dixon, Ferry, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Thayer—19.

So the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to submit an amendment, of which I give notice now according to the rules, and desire to have printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred and printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an amendment that ought to have been made in Committee of the Whole, on page 18, which for the time was informally passed over. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have that amendment concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was on page 18, line four hundred and thirty-one, to strike out "two" and to insert "four;" in line four hundred and thirty-two, to strike out "five" and to insert "six;" and in line four hundred and thirty-seven to strike out "five" and insert "nine;" so that the clause will read:

For First Auditor of the Treasury, chief clerk, four clerks of class four, eight clerks of class three, six clerks of class two, five clerks of class one; also, two clerks of class three, four clerks of class two, and eight clerks of class one, (transferred from the offices of the Third Auditor and the Solicitor) one messenger and one assistant messenger, and one laborer, in all $59,360.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This clause was passed over on the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] that he desired to offer an amendment to it; but I believe he afterward put his amendment somewhere else, so that it becomes necessary to act on this amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire to offer an amendment to House bill No. 818, the miscellaneous appropriation bill, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to submit an amendment to this bill which I intend to offer.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire also to give notice of an amendment I intend to offer to the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I offer an amendment to the miscellaneous appropriation bill, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. These notices are not in order until we pass the bill before us.

Mr. CATTELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill. The Clerk has the amendment, and I ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was on page 44, line one thousand and eighty-one, to strike out "six" and insert "nine;" and in the same line, after the word "thousands" to strike out "five hundred," and at the end of the line to insert:

Provided, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1868, the annual compensation of the weighing clerk shall be $2,500, and the compensation of the calculating, accounting, and warrant clerks shall be $2,000 each.

So that the clause will read:

Mint at Philadelphia:

For salaries of the Director, treasurer, assayer, melter and refiner, chief coiner and engraver, assistant assayer, and seven clerks, $39,000: Provided, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1868, the annual compensation of the weighing clerk shall be $2,500, and the compensation of the calculating, accounting, and warrant clerks shall be $2,000 each.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope not. We can finish this bill in a few minutes. It has now been before the Senate for four days, and ought to be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate certain communications.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 27th ultimo, a copy of the report of Inspector General Marcy, made in 1864, on the condition of the department of Arkansas and the Indian territory; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, recommending that so much of section thirteen of an act entitled "An act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States," approved July 28, 1866, as provides that no vacancies occurring in the quartermaster's department in the grades of major and captain shall be filled until the number of majors is reduced to twelve and the number of captains to thirty, be repealed; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1313) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 225) respecting national banks in liquidation.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions of the Senate:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 129) donating certain captured ordnance for the completion of a monument to the memory of the late Major General John Sedgwick; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 143) for the relief of George W. Doty, a commander in the United States Navy on the retired list.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 236) granting a pension to John Q. A. Keck, late private in the third Missouri cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 347) for holding terms of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois at the city of Cairo, in said State;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 129) donating certain captured ordnance for the completion of a monument to the memory of the late Major General John Sedgwick; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 143) for the relief of George W. Doty, a commander in the United States Navy on the retired list.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1313) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 225) respecting national banks in liquidation, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CATTELL. I have the floor, and did not yield to the motion to adjourn. I offered an amendment, and while the amendment was being read the Chair introduced these matters, I holding the floor; and I have not yielded it to allow a motion to adjourn to be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was after my motion to adjourn that the Chair laid those matters before the Senate. I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan had the floor, I believe.

Mr. CATTELL. It was during the reading of my amendment, I submit to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment had been read. The question is on the adjournment.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 9, noes 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not make any difference on a motion to adjourn; the motion is lost.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But you cannot do any business.

Mr. WILSON. We had better have the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Nineteen and nine constitute a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It takes twenty-nine now to make a quorum.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 6, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cole, McCreery, Sprague, Tipton, Trumbull, and Wilson—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conkling, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Thayer, Van Winkle, Vickers, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Chandler, Dixon, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Rice, Saulsbury, and Sumner—25.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CATTELL. I desire to make a very brief statement in regard to the amendment which I have proposed, which is to increase the salaries of the principal clerks in the Mint at Philadelphia, those who are charged with the responsible duty of having charge of the bullion and passing millions of dollars through their hands. Their salary has not been changed since 1854, and when a revision was made of the salaries of the officers in the Mint these gentlemen were in some way overlooked. They are now under heavy bonds, and yet they are upon salaries of $1,500 each, less than that of a third-class clerk in the Departments in the city of Washington. This advance of their salary is recommended by the Treasurer, Mr. McKibbin, at Philadelphia, by the Director, Mr. Linderman, and also by the Secretary of the Treasury in a very warm letter on the subject. One of these clerks, the weigh clerk, for instance, informs me that he passes through his hands in the course of a year from thirty to fifty million dollars, reaching one year $69,000,000 of bullion, and that he frequently has in charge under his own key five, six, seven, or eight million dollars of treasure. All of the gentlemen connected with the Mint speak of these as being highly responsible positions, and of the incumbents, who have filled them for years, as being of the highest character both as to ability and as to integrity.

This proposition has been submitted to the Committee on Finance, and upon examination has been recommended by that committee. It has also been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe has met with some success even with that committee; at any rate with its chairman. I believe that this advance upon these salaries is justly due to honest, faithful, competent officers, filling high positions of trust and responsibility upon salaries, as I have already observed, really below that of a third-class clerk in the city of Washington. Having said this much, I submit it to the Senate.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Several SENATORS. Let us pass this bill first.

Mr. McCREERY. Very well; I withdraw the motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is that within the rule, I should like to know?

Mr. CATTELL. Certainly it is. If the Senator had done me the honor to listen to my remarks he would have learned that it had been through all its stages.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes fourteen.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is not a majority of a quorum; the amendment is lost.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those in the negative will rise.

Six Senators rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no quorum voting.

Mr. CRAGIN. There is one little amendment that I wish to offer—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending, and there is no quorum to decide it.

Mr. CATTELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment. I hope Senators will vote; and I trust they will agree to this amendment. I think it is but an act of justice.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cattell, Cole, Corbett, Davis, Doolittle, Frelinghuysen, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Van Winkle, Vickers, Williams, and Yates—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Conkling, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Harlan, McCreery, Morgan, Patterson of New Hampshire, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Chandler, Dixon, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, and Willey—30.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the absentees called, and I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a question of order, and I ask for the reading of the sixteenth rule.

The Chief Clerk read it, as follows:

"16. When the yeas and nays shall be called for by one fifth of the Senators present, each Senator called upon shall, unless for special reasons he be excused by the Senate, declare openly and without debate his assent or dissent to the question. In taking the yeas and nays and upon a call of the Senate the names of the Senators shall be called alphabetically."

Mr. CONKLING. I see the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] in his seat. I beg to inquire of him whether he voted on the call? His name does not appear.

Mr. RAMSEY. I respectfully inform the Senator from New York that I was not in my seat at the time the roll was called.

Mr. CONKLING. But some time before the announcement was made the Senator was in his seat.

Mr. RAMSEY. I was in conversation with a Senator, and did not observe that my name was called.

Mr. CONKLING. Nevertheless, I submit we are entitled to have the Senator vote, as we are trying to get a quorum.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This is all out of order. As a quorum is not present, we must adjourn or send for the absentees.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I believe my motion is in order to call the absentees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Maine is in order. Less than a quorum can compel the attendance of the absent members.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I merely ask that they be called. I do not ask that they be notified to attend, but that the list of those who have not voted shall be called by the Secretary, that it may be seen who are absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be called.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the names of the absentees, as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. BAYARD, Mr. BUCKALEW, Mr. CAMERON, Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. DIXON, Mr. DRAKE, Mr. FERRY, Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. GRIMES, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. HENDRICKS, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. HOWE—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. HOWE is present.

The CHIEF CLERK, (continuing.) Mr. MORRILL of Vermont, Mr. MORTON, Mr. NORTON, Mr. NYE, Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee, Mr. POMEROY, Mr. RAMSEY—

Mr. RAMSEY. Here.

The CHIEF CLERK, (continuing.) Mr. RICE, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. SUMNER, Mr. THAYER, Mr. TIPTON—

Mr. TIPTON. Here.

The CHIEF CLERK, (continuing.) Mr. WILLEY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WILLEY] has gone home very unwell.

Mr. HOWE. Is not my vote recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. HOWE. I voted in the negative.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Nebraska, with the Senator from Wisconsin, make a quorum.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the names of the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Nebraska be called.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not need any motion. You have a right to insist upon it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Called for what purpose?

Mr. EDMUNDS. To vote.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They cannot vote after the result is declared. There is an express rule forbidding it. I object to it. They have no right to vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All you have to do is to call the yeas and nays over again.

Mr. TRUMBULL. You have no right to call the yeas and nays over again. I object to that. The question is decided, and you cannot decide it twice except by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then I will submit another motion, and see what the Senator says to that. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to notify absent members to attend the meeting of the Senate. I feel justified in making this motion because I notice that by a systematic effort certain Senators left the Senate obviously for the purpose of breaking up a quorum when this call began.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think that motion is necessary. The rule is imperative and plain. If the want of a quorum is disclosed the vote fails, and then as soon as a quorum is got together the roll is again called, without an ordering of the yeas and nays, and the vote is taken again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; there is no doubt of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. And I ask now that the roll be called again.

Mr. MORRILL of Maine. If that is in order I withdraw my motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Regularly the roll should be called to ascertain whether there is a quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It now appears that there is a quorum present.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It has not been made to appear yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll may be called again on the same question. I see no impropriety in that, although I never knew it to be done before.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose when it is ascertained that we have got a quorum that must be done.

Mr. CONKLING. That is ascertained now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Chair is satisfied that a quorum is present, very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I suppose the proper way to test that would be to call the roll and find out. The Chair is of opinion that there is a quorum present. The roll may be called again on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, if there is no objection to it. I see no objection.

The question being again taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cattell, Cole, Corbett, Davis, Doolittle, Frelinghuysen, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Van Winkle, Vickers, Williams, and Yates—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Conkling, Connors, Cragin, Edmunds, Harlan, Howe, McCreery, Morgan, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sprague, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Chandler, Dixon, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sumner, and Willey—25.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I wish to offer two amendments. Notice of them has been given, and I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report them. The first is on page 9, at the end of line two hundred and seven, to insert:

Provided, That the foreman of binding in the Government Printing Office be paid the same salary now allowed to the foreman of printing.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the salary of the foreman of printing?

Mr. ROSS. The salary of the foreman of printing is now $1,800. The foreman of binding receives $1,500, and performs the same labor and the same responsibility, and ought to have the same pay.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator who moves this, if it is in order—I do not know whether notice has been given—that he change the phraseology and specify the sum. I think it is an unfortunate way of legislation to make the salary the same as some other salary.

Mr. ROSS. I will accept the modification.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It had better be put distinctly, so as to state the sum to be paid.

The amendment was modified to read:

Provided, That the salary of the foreman of binding in the Government Printing Office shall hereafter be $1,800 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. On page 3, after line sixty-two, I move to insert:

Provided, That $20,000 of the appropriations heretofore made and unexpended "for purchase of one complete set of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each Senator and Representative who have not already received them," may be applied for the payment of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1868.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That comes from the Committee on Printing, and I know nothing about it except what is gathered from a copy of a letter which I have received and ask the Clerk to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, June 12, 1868.

DEAR SIR: In consequence of no appropriations whatever being made to meet the accounts of this office for reporting and printing the debates of the Senate for the additional session (sittings of March, July, and November, 1867,) and for the copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for Senators for the same session, a deficiency has been created—a deficiency which may, however, be in large part met and provided for without additional appropriation, and in this way, namely: by authorizing a transfer of a portion of an unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made to pay for complete sets of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for new Senators. [Not more than fifty per cent. of the appropriations made for that specific purpose have ever been required.]

The unexpended balance referred to amounts to $27,293 84; of which sum $20,400 may be transferred to meet the deficiency existing in the sum requisite to pay for the Congressional Globe and Appendix for Senators for the current session, which work has been completed to the extent of more than the three thousand pages limit, and delivered to Mr. DeFrees, the Congressional Printer, and for which we hold his receipts.

We would suggest that, providing such a transfer as we have indicated be made, a very suitable point in the bill now pending (H. R. No. 605) would be immediately after line sixty-two—as lines sixty-one and sixty-two contain a proposition to pay for that particular branch of the work for the ensuing sessions.

The deficiency which exists in the appropriations for reporting and printing in the Daily Globe we shall take measures to have provided for in the deficiency bill now framing by the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives.

Trusting that our suggestion may be favorably considered by yourself and your honorable committee, we remain, very respectfully,

F. & J. RIVES & GEORGE A. BAILEY.

Reporters and Printers of the Debates of Congress.
Hon. Lot M. MORRILL, Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee did not adopt that suggestion, for reasons obvious enough on the reading of the letter. The committee had no such information as justified them in adopting it; and supposing that if it was offered by the Committee on Printing in the Senate they would be able to communicate such intelligence to the Senate as would enable the Senate to act intelligently on the subject, we left it to them. Whether they have done so or not, it is for the Senate to judge. I would suggest, however, that as these persons say themselves that they have a further appropriation to put upon the deficiency bill which is now being matured in the other House, much damage will not be likely to accrue to them if this amendment be withdrawn. This, evidently, is a deficiency, if anything.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They say it is in their own letter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. A deficiency growing out of increased service occasioned by the extra sessions last year.

Mr. CRAGIN. Perhaps I can shed some light on this subject, and this may not be a deficiency except in mere form. Our former Secretary drew the money appropriated for this purpose. When the present Secretary was elected by the Senate the moneys on hand in the charge of Colonel Forney were restored to the Treasury. Among those moneys, to my certain knowledge, was a portion of the amount appropriated for this purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Restored to the credit of the appropriation?

Mr. CRAGIN. Restored to the credit of the Secretary. When his accounts are settled I suppose the money will be handed over again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The money is provided for the object, whether it be in the Secretary's hands or in the Treasury.

Mr. ROSS. Acting on the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. RAMSEY. In page 41, line nine hundred and eighty-four, I move to strike out "three" and insert "ten." The object of this amendment is to increase the salaries of the Assistant Postmasters General to the same amount that has been bestowed on the Comptrollers of the Treasury. It is obviously correct. The duties are equally honorable and responsible, and there is no reason why there should be a discrimination.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I must raise a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has notice been given to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. RAMSEY. I did give notice a few moments ago.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That will not do. It is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. RAMSEY. For that reason I desired the Senate to adjourn until to-morrow, so that it might be in order if it would gratify the chairman of the Committee on Appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I thought I saw that plainly by the movements in that region.

Mr. CRAGIN. I have a short amendment. It will take but a few moments. On page 4, line eighty-three, I move to strike out "five" and insert "ten." This is an appropriation for additional laborers and messengers for the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The same rule applies to that.

Mr. CRAGIN. The rule as I understand it is that you cannot introduce new matter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This is an increase. I raise the question of order.

Mr. CRAGIN. I supposed you could increase or diminish an appropriation in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. You can diminish, but not increase.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not in order.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the bill establishing rules and articles for the government of the Army of the United States. It is a very important bill, and I want an hour or two to-morrow for the purpose of considering it.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILSON. I hope I shall be allowed to have Senate bill No. 529 first taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will put the question on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts. The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 26, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BRYNOR.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXCUSED FROM COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, I find it impracticable to attend, as one of the representatives of the House, the national shooting festival at New York, and ask, therefore, to be excused. It was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, to fill the vacancy.

RICHARD WILLARD.

On motion of Mr. POLAND, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Richard Willard, for reference to the Treasury Department.

ISSUE OF ARMS TO MILITIA.

Mr. PAINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1342) to provide for the issue of arms for the use of the militia; which was read the first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF STATES.

Mr. SCOFIELD submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to present to the Secretary of State the act entitled, "An act to admit the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to representation in Congress, together with the certificates of the Clerk of the House of Representatives and Secretary of the Senate, showing that the said act was passed by the vote of two thirds of both Houses of Congress, after the objections of the President thereto had been received, and after the reconsideration of said act by both Houses in accordance with the Constitution.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRAZIL MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

On motion of Mr. NICHOLSON, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Appropriations were discharged from the consideration of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the sums paid without protest on the vessels of the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company at the port of New York, amounting to $7,611 10, and the same was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SARAH HACKLEMAN.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, authorized to report at any time the bill (H. R. No. 1313) granting a pension to Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman, reported back the same with an amendment.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of the widow of General Hackleman, with a pension at the rate of fifty dollars per month from the 3d day of October, 1862, when he fell mortally wounded at the battle of Corinth.

Section two directs that the pension heretofore allowed to the said widow shall be deducted from the pension hereby granted, and that this pension shall be subject to the provisions of the general pension law.

The amendment was to add to the first section the words "to continue during widowhood."

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENJAMIN the title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill granting an increase of pension."

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEONIDAS SMITH.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, from the Committee on Military Affairs, by unanimous consent, made a report in the matter of the memorial of Leonidas Smith, for relief; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the committee.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. HINDS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution (H. R. No. 310) limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to the loyal citizens of the State of Arkansas, and ask its present consideration.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I object.

Mr. BROOKS. I would like to have it reported.

The joint resolution was reported. It extends the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to limit the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims" to the loyal citizens of the State of Arkansas.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAY OF ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN.

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on Appropriations, by unanimous consent, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That for the present Congress, commencing therewith, the Clerk is directed to pay from the contingent fund of the House to the Assistant Librarian in charge of the Hall Library, the difference between his present pay and the pay of the file, printing, and engrossing clerk.

Mr. BLAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. DOTY.

Mr. PIKE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution No. 143, for the relief of George W. Doty, a commander in the United States Navy, on the retired list.

The resolution was accordingly taken up and read a first and second time. It places the name of Mr. Doty on the Navy Register as commander from the 16th of July, 1862, with the pay of such rank, to date from his commission.

Mr. PIKE. This is merely to correct a mistake in a previous bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PIKE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. UPSON. I move to reconsider the various votes this morning, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. That will include the votes of reference.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETH LEA.

Mr. HAWKINS. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 1315) for the relief of Seth Lea.

The bill was reported. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Seth Lea, of Knox county, Tennessee, on the roll of invalid pensions at the rate of a full pension now allowed by law to a second lieutenant, said pension to commence on the 5th of April, 1865, and to continue for his natural life.

Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object, unless the bill is referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HAWKINS. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am perfectly willing that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, provided that the committee may have leave to report it back at any time. I ask unanimous consent that it may be so disposed of.

There was no objection; and the bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with leave to report it back at any time.

NATIONAL BANKS IN LIQUIDATION.

Mr. BARNES, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 225) respecting national banks in liquidation.

The joint resolution was read. It proposes to direct the Comptroller of the Currency to publish a detailed statement of the assets, liabilities, and general condition of all national banks in the hands of receivers, or which may be in liquidation on the first Monday of January, April, July, and October of each year, in one paper in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and in one paper in the place where said bank may be located, as provided for the publication of other returns in section thirty-four of an act to provide a national currency, approved June 3, 1864. It also provides that after such provision shall first have been made for refunding to the United States all deficiencies as provided for in section fifty of the same act, the Comptroller of Currency shall make ratable dividends of the assets of said banks to the creditors thereof once in each calendar month, if such dividend shall be equal to ten per cent. of its indebtedness, and once in three months, if such dividend shall be equal to five per cent. of its indebtedness.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHEROKEE NEUTRAL LANDS.

Mr. CLARK, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present to the House the following preamble and resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the settlers on the "Cherokee neutral lands," Cherokee county, Kansas, held at Centralia, on the 11th day of June, 1868. The sentiments expressed in these resolutions are not only unanimously indorsed by the settlers on the Cherokee neutral lands, by the settlers on the Osage Indian lands, the Shawnee Absentee lands, the Pottawatomie Indian lands, the Blackfeet lands, but by a vast majority of the people of my State. This House will bear me witness that I have struggled here continually for the protection of these settlers, and that I have protested against the pernicious policy which the Senate has pursued in refusing to afford this portion of my constituents that relief to which they are justly entitled. I deeply sympathize with the views expressed in these resolutions.

The preamble and resolutions are as follows:

Whereas we, the settlers on the "Cherokee neutral lands," citizens of Cherokee county, Kansas, having occupied these lands under the conviction that the Government would soon extinguish the Indian title to the same, and throw them open for legal settlement under the just and equitable laws of preemption and homestead, now existing; and whereas the settlement of said lands by the hardy pioneer has been made under circumstances of unusual hardships and privation, owing to the devastation of Missouri and Northern Kansas by the recent war, causing supplies to be transported long distances and procured at high prices; and whereas we are now in danger of having our hard-earned homes transferred to the hands of a railroad corporation, with no security that we will be remunerated, under the pretext of favoring the railroad interest: Therefore,

Resolved, That we believe we are fully entitled, so soon as the Indian title to the land is extinguished, to the benefit of the preemption and homestead laws; and we believe those laws will protect us in our rights, any treaty by the Senate to the contrary notwithstanding.

Resolved, That, as the preemption and homestead laws are the most important parts in the policy of the Government in relation to the public lands, the homestead law, in particular, having been pledged by the party now in power to the hardy pioneer, it being one of the principal planks in the platform that carried that party into power, we demand it as our right, and call on the voters throughout the Union to sustain us at the polls.

Resolved, That we view with alarm the recent and changed policy of the Government in extinguishing Indian titles to lands only to transfer them into the hands of railroad and speculating companies, thus converting the pioneer into a serf at the mercy of a soulless corporation.

Resolved, That in the name of twenty-five thousand men, women, and children now living on the "neutral lands"—loyal citizens of the United States—we do protest against the sale of any part of this tract to any other than actual settlers.

Resolved, That we give notice to all railroad and land-monopolizing companies that, having settled these lands in the full faith that our Government would act with us as the laws already in force would warrant, we will not tamely be driven from our homes or be made to pay an exorbitant price for the same.

Resolved, That the men in Congress who have stood up for the rights of the self-sacrificing and hardy pioneer of the West deserve our warmest thanks, and we hope their noble efforts may be crowned with success and our Government spared the shame of dealing falsely with its citizens.

Resolved, That all papers that advocate a "home for the homeless" on the public domain are solicited to give these resolutions a place in their columns.

J. F. FITZER, Chairman.

W. S. HUSTON, Secretary.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

TREATIES WITH INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution concerning treaties hereafter made between the United States and the Indian tribes for action at this time. I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas sundry treaties between the United States and different Indian tribes have heretofore been concluded, by virtue of which large bodies of land have been transferred to individuals and corporations in contravention of the spirit and policy of the preemption and homestead laws of the United States; and whereas the lands now known as Indian reservations, on the extinguishment of the Indian title thereto, should become the property of the United States and a part of the public domain thereof, and cannot rightfully be disposed of otherwise: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in any treaty which may hereafter be concluded between the United States and any Indian tribe, by which the title of such tribe to their lands shall be divested, the same shall be conveyed directly to the United States, and shall thenceforward be subject to the authority of Congress in the same manner as all other public lands.

Mr. TAFTE. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL SEDGWICK.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (S. R. No. 129) donating certain captured ordnance for the completion of a monument to the memory of the late Major General John Sedgwick, with a view to put it upon its passage.

Mr. BROOKS. I shall object to taking from the Speaker's table any Senate bills that succeed the gold contracts bill; but as this precedes that bill I do not object.

The joint resolution, which was read, requires the Secretary of War to place in charge of Major General H. G. Wright, Major General Frank Wheaton, Major General George W. Getty, and Major General Truman Seymour, three bronze cannon, captured by the sixth Army corps in battle, for the construction of a statue of the late Major General John Sedgwick, to be placed on a monument erected to his memory by the sixth corps of the army of the Potomac.

No objection being made, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first, second, and third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS HONORABLY DISCHARGED

Mr. BOLES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1816) for the relief of soldiers honorably discharged from the service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF A SUIT.

Mr. BOLES, by unanimous consent, also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 811) to remove a suit from the circuit court of Franklin county, Arkansas, to the circuit court of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALEXANDER'S SAW BAYONET.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of adopting for use in the infantry regiments of the United States Army Colonel F. W. Alexander's saw bayonet, patented in 1864, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. UPSON. I object.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now insist upon the regular order of business.

The House, under the order heretofore made, accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on an appeal from a decision of the Chair. The Chair ruled out of order an amendment moved by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] to insert after section one hundred and seven the additional section which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That upon all interest arising from bonds of the United States there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of ten percent, on the amount of such interest, and the Treasurer of the United States, and such subordinate officers as shall be charged with the payment of said interest shall assess and collect the duty hereby levied.

Mr. PIKE. Before the Chair again submits the question to the committee, I desire to explain that I made an appeal from the decision of the Chair, not for the purpose of antagonizing the Chair upon a question of order, but as the only way of getting this proposition before the Committee of the Whole. At this stage of the session there is no way of presenting this matter, either in Committee of the Whole or in the House, unless in connection with this bill. It was for that reason that I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SCHENCK. After having assisted in getting the general bill out of the way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the grounds of his decision. A few days ago the House had under consideration in Committee of the Whole a general tax bill. After proceeding with its consideration for some time the House suspended further action upon the general bill and instructed the Committee of Ways and Means to bring in a specific bill relating to distilled spirits, tobacco, and banks. The Committee of Ways and Means, in pursuance of those instructions, prepared and reported a bill bearing this specific title: "A bill to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks." That bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with precisely the same restrictions and limitations as those under which the Committee of Ways and Means acted in preparing the bill. The Chair rules that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is no more competent to enlarge legislation embraced in this bill than was the Committee of Ways and Means in preparing it originally. On that ground the Chair rules the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] to be out of order. From that decision an appeal is taken; and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of this committee?"

Mr. UPSON. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order, as the Committee of the Whole has no table. The Chair will further state, that while this amendment would of course be in order in connection with a general tax bill, if this provision be decided to be in order, then any amendment whatever, throughout the whole domain of taxation, would also be in order upon this bill, and it would be impossible to limit it to the objects for which it was prepared.

The question was taken upon sustaining the decision of the Chair; and upon a division there were—ayes 98, noes 21.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. There were two or three amendments reserved last night, the first being that of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUBBARD] to section ninety-one.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I move to amend section ninety-one by inserting after the word "boxes," in line three, the words "or packages;" so as to read:

That from and after the passage of this act all cigars shall be packed by the manufacturers in boxes or packages not before used for that purpose, &c.

By the adoption of this amendment this bill will correspond in this respect with the law as it now stands, under which the cigar manufacturer has the privilege of packing his cigars in boxes or packages. Thus the cigar manufacturer will have the same privilege allowed to manufacturers of tobacco and snuff under the present bill, under which they can pack their tobacco and snuff in packages.

I am advised by the assessor of cigars in the district which I represent that if such an amendment as I propose be adopted there will be no more opportunity for fraud than the manufacturer will have under the bill as it now stands. Common cigars sold, before the war, at from two dollars to two dollars and fifty cents per thousand, and if there were no internal taxes upon the article, would sell now at three and a half or four dollars per thousand. The manufacturers believe that if they be required to pack these cigars in boxes the effect will be simply to add a very considerable percentage to the price; and they regard the requirement as altogether unnecessary. I trust that the amendment may be adopted, so that the manufacturers of cigars may have the same privilege allowed by this bill to manufacturers of tobacco and snuff, and may pack their cigars in boxes or packages at their option.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a proposition to break up the whole provision in regard to the tax on cigars. We propose to collect the tax by means of stamps on the boxes. The gentleman proposes to allow cigars to be sold in bundles or packages, with no limitations as to what the packages are to be or how the stamps are to be affixed. This is one of the subjects upon which we had the cigar makers, tobaccoists, &c., before us; and it was agreed all round that in order to collect the tax by stamps—the system which they all wanted—it would be necessary to define what should be a box, how much a box should contain, and everything else necessary for the security of the revenue. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment in order is that reserved by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend section ninety-three by striking out the following proviso:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the duty on all cigars imported into the United States from foreign countries shall be two dollars per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The effect of this proviso is to reduce the tariff on imported cigars. By striking out this proviso, as my amendment proposes, we shall leave the tariff on foreign cigars just what it is now. I am opposed to reducing the tariff upon imported cigars; I propose to leave it as it now is; so that if foreign cigars are imported into this country they shall pay the duty imposed by the existing law.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, my only desire is the House shall know what is proposed and then submit it. The tax on domestic cigars is five dollars a thousand and on foreign cigars three dollars per pound and fifty per cent. ad valorem. Cigars at the time of importation weigh only twelve pounds. They run down to eight or nine when they are dry, and up to fourteen when very green. At fourteen it would be forty-two dollars in gold or $58 80 in currency. Fifty per cent. ad valorem or $42 40 in gold, the average price in Cuba, is twenty dollars in gold or $26 26 in currency. Thus cigars coming from Cuba pay $84 80, and from that down to seventy-six dollars. Now, sir, what has been the consequence? The tariff is so high that it has defeated itself. Instead of being a protection to the domestic manufacturer, it has stimulated smuggling in all variety of cunning to get imported cigars into the country without paying duty. It has in a great degree injured and interfered with the domestic trade. In the interest of the home manufacture I think it better to adopt the provision of the bill. If the committee think differently, they will refuse to adopt this provision.

Mr. MYERS. I rise to a point of order. This portion of the paragraph which it is proposed to strike out I hold not to be in order, as it is not germane to this bill. This is a tax bill, and that provision is in relation to the tariff.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not reserved when the bill was sent to the Committee of the Whole; and the committee is not competent to decide out of order anything sent to it.

Mr. MYERS. When this section was reserved the point of order was also reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. At no time since the bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole could the point have been well taken. It should have been reserved when the bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the text of the proviso by making the specific tax $2 50 instead of two dollars. Mr. Chairman, whatever may be said in regard to the propriety of including a tariff item in an internal tax bill, I wish to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the facts. In the first place, as the tariff now stands, and as it has stood for several years, the tax duty upon imported cigars is three dollars a pound and fifty per cent. ad valorem, and upon imported leaf tobacco it is thirty-five cents a pound. That being the case the manufacturers in this country have imported more leaf tobacco during the last year, and under this tariff we have manufactured more tobacco of our own raising than imported tobacco than at any previous day.

Now, I supposed if there was no other question upon which the manufacturers were more agreed it was upon this subject of the tariff. It seems the committee reduced it nearly one half, from three dollars to two dollars, and from fifty per cent. ad valorem to twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. The effect will be, with a tariff of thirty-five cents upon leaf tobacco, to destroy this manufacturing interest in this country.

I now submit to the committee while it may be proper to reduce it to some extent, still they have reduced it to such an extent that it will destroy the manufacture of cigars in this country. I therefore hope my amendment will be adopted. That makes it $2 50 per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

We are told imported cigars cost $84 40. When you put the duty on leaf tobacco cigars manufactured here of the same quality cost seventy-five to eighty dollars. With the reduction of the duty on imported cigars as proposed by the committee it will destroy the domestic manufacture. I submit, sir, whether this tariff item, which has nothing to do with this tax bill, should be deferred to the consideration of the general tariff bill. We will only have to wait three or four months. I hope if insisted on that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to oppose the amendment, and I do so in the interest of the revenue. Every gentleman on this floor knows very well that to-day there are as many imported cigars smoked in this country as at any former period, probably more. Yet the statistics of the Department show that we import only a very few million cigars. The internal tax by this bill on imported cigars is five dollars a thousand, making really an increase upon the import duty to that extent. We compel every cigar importer, in addition to the present import duties, hereafter to pay five dollars. In other words, he must pay on his imported cigars just as much as the home manufacturer pays. Now, take the five dollars and add it to the present duty. The tariff to-day is $83 40, (fifty-six dollars in gold,) with five dollars currency added upon every thousand cigars imported, estimating an average cost of forty dollars per thousand, the average cost of production in Cuba is forty dollars a thousand; so that to-day we have an import duty of two hundred per cent. on cigars. Now, what is the effect? The effect is that nearly all the cigars that come into the country are smuggled in the interest of the cigar manufacturers of this country. I suggest that this duty should be reduced. I do not wish to discourage the manufacturer here.

Now, what reduction do we propose in this bill? A reduction so that the tariff duty on imported cigars shall be one hundred per cent. or more on the cost of those articles. Is not that enough? They pay thirty-five cents a pound for imported tobacco. That is only seven dollars on each thousand cigars, estimating twenty pounds of tobacco to the one thousand cigars. Add to that the five dollars tax, and the producer makes cigars from imported tobacco at a cost of twelve dollars a thousand, to which should be added some fifteen or twenty dollars for the labor of manufacturing, making the entire cost from forty to fifty dollars a thousand upon an average cigar made in this country from Havana tobacco.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Instead of forty or fifty dollars, the manufacturers say they cost them over seventy dollars a thousand.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask my friend to tell me what it costs to manufacture a thousand cigars?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The labor on the best cigars costs twenty-two dollars a thousand.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will take the gentleman's own figures. The labor twenty-two dollars and the tobacco seven dollars make twenty-nine dollars, to which should be added the original cost of the tobacco and the internal tax. Now, we give one hundred per cent. protection, and I submit that is enough.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew it. There is such a thing, Mr. Chairman, as value in stability in legislation, and the proposition now before the House illustrates the want of stability in our legislation—at least on the subject of cigars and tobacco. It is too late now, I suppose, to make the point of order that this provision is improperly here in an internal tax bill. That it belongs to a bill of another class is palpable. As it is not legitimately in this bill, it would, in my judgment, be but proper for the committee to withdraw it. There is another bill, I understand, pending before the committee now in which it would be proper to present it.

Sir, the provisions of the tariff law, which it is proposed thus irregularly to modify, will, if maintained, break up the importation of high-priced cigars and establish their manufacture in this country. The chairman of the committee, in his opening address on the presentation of the original bill, said that the importation of high-priced cigars through the custom-house had almost ceased; but he did not state what he might have done, that the importation of the tobacco of which they are made has very largely increased, and that the hands that formerly made them in Havana are now making them in our cities. Thus the house of Fuguet & Sons, of Philadelphia, formerly among the largest importers of fine cigars into this country, are now large manufacturers of fine cigars. When Congress broke up their business as importers of cigars they took to importing the finest leaf, and imported also large numbers of Havana cigar-makers from that city, and they are now, I might almost say, by compulsion of Congress, very large importers of leaf and large manufacturers of the finest Havana cigars; so that those who make them are consumers of our cereals, our other taxable productions, and of foreign goods that have paid duties at an American custom-house. If the clause is not withdrawn or stricken out, I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] may be adopted, and that we shall not drive these recently imported citizens back to their native land, to manufacture goods for our consumption. We are deriving in internal taxes and customs revenue more from fine Spanish cigars to-day than we were under the old system. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what is his precise amendment?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. To add fifty cents to the two dollars.

Mr. KELLEY. That is as I believed it to be. I understand the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] who represents the Committee of Ways and Means, to say that so far as he is concerned he will consent to that amendment, which he had not understood.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I am very glad he has made the argument which he has. I would ask him whether under the present law we are not importing not only the raw material from Cuba to this country to be manufactured, but also bringing the operatives and makers of cigars? And I would ask him further, whether his object would not be better accomplished by the adoption of my motion to strike out the provision and let the law stand as it is?

Mr. KELLEY. I began by stating that I thought this provision was improperly here and ought to be stricken out; but as a matter of compromise I would take the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN.] I think the provision ought to be stricken out, or that the committee ought to withdraw it. But as it is too late to make a motion to strike out and the committee is indisposed to withdraw it, I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts as a compromise. The tariff, as it stands, has introduced into the country a new branch of industry, and will give fine American cigars the world over the high reputation that the choice brands of Havana's have hitherto enjoyed. I now withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MYERS. I renew it. The amendment I had desired to see adopted is one making it $2 50 per pound and fifty cents ad valorem. That, I think, is what it ought to be. I never would have consented to pass this section, hurrying through as we did last night, without making the point of order that a tariff clause had nothing to do with the bill, but for the fact that I understood we should return to it. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means makes a new argument against the tariff. He says that we are already getting a large number of these imported cigars. I do not want them to come in and compete with our own industry. I want no tariff that will allow that. Let those who wish to smoke imported cigars pay a little higher. From every part of the country we are flooded with petitions to protect this industry. I propose to do it, and I believe this House, if it understands the question, will do it. Now, I have the figures here in answer to the figures of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means:

Cost of pure Havana tobacco made in the United States into cigars.

Wrappers, six pounds, at $3 50.....	$21 00
Fillers, fourteen pounds, at $1 40.....	19 60

Average cost of making.....	40 00
Packing and shading.....	20 00
Ten boxes with trimming.....	5 00
Stripping stems.....	2 50
Tax.....	1 00
	5 00

Say..... $74 10

Same grade of cigars cost in Havana.....	$20 00
Eleven pounds to finished cigar per thousand, (there being a waste of nine pounds, one third stems,) at two dollars duty.....	$22 00
Twenty-five per cent. ad valorem .....	5 00

27 00

Freight and insurance.....	1 00
----------------------------	------

48 00

Premium on gold.....	19 20
----------------------	-------

67 20

Tax now added.....	5 00
--------------------	------

$76 20

So that you can import one thousand Havana cigars for two dollars less than you can make up the same grade of tobacco here, and as where the wrappers are of Connecticut seed-leaf, Pennsylvania or Ohio tobacco the cost is but $9 50 less per thousand, you will have the fine grade Havanas, with their great prestige, imported at only seventy-five cents more per hundred than a commoner grade of American cigars. Certainly this is sufficient protection. To obtain this protection I last night reserved the right to amend this section when the House would be fuller and better able to give the subject attention. I still believe my point of order well taken, that a tariff clause is not germane to a tax bill; but if a reduction of duty is insisted on at least let us not go below the amendment which I have just renewed, that this duty on foreign cigars shall be $2 50 per thousand and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. When the addition of the five-dollar tax is considered this will still reduce the duty $4 50 per thousand on imported cigars. Certainly this is enough, and I hope the House will so consider it.

I hope that the committee will not adhere blindly to every proposition that is contained in this bill. That committee comes in here from year to year with additional legislation, acknowledging by so doing that they have made mistakes. If nothing better can be obtained, I hope this amendment will become the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] that that gentleman is under a misapprehension in regard to the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is minuted upon the Clerk's record as having reserved the right to move an amendment to this section. The gentleman has no right on any parliamentary point, because the point could not be made in Committee of the Whole, not having been reserved at the time the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAYNARD. Upon that point the Chair will recollect that I arose in my place last night and announced that I would reserve the right to make a point of order on this proposition. The Chair intimated that the right to make such a point must be first reserved in the House. It would, perhaps, have been time enough to make that decision when the point was made. I merely said that I would reserve the right to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] has made the point, and the Chair has ruled upon it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to oppose the amendment, and also to oppose the entire proviso of this section. It is due to myself to say that I was not aware that this proviso was in this bill until I saw it in print. I shall add very little to what has been said upon the subject of the duty on cigars. The principal objection which I shall now urge is, that in my opinion this is a provision which has no business in this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MAYNARD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLISON. Do we not by this very bill add five dollars per thousand to the duty on imported cigars, and by this very section?

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not so understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it so perfectly.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not understand that to be the effect of it. But even if it is, as I was remarking by way of apology, this particular feature of it had escaped my attention, and I was not aware it was in the bill until I saw a printed copy of it. Now, I object to its being here as a part of this bill, proposed as it was under the restricted and limited instructions of the House, which instructions would exclude it, and which provision the Chair informs us would be ruled out of order had that point been made at the proper time. But I am opposed to introducing such a provision into an internal tax bill under any circumstances. Duties on imports and internal taxes should be kept separate and distinct as well in the enactment and passage of the law as in the administration of the law. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOODWARD] observed a few minutes ago, the Committee of Ways and Means have officially announced in the House their intention to ask leave to introduce a tariff bill, and to invoke action upon it. I trust that permission will be granted by the House, that the Committee of Ways and Means will act under it, and that the subject of the tariff will come up, and that before this session closes.

At that time this subject of the duty on cigars can be considered. That will be the time and that the place for considering this subject. If the present duty is too high, then reduce it. Arguments on the one side or the other will be pertinent at that time, and will be germane to such a bill. But they are neither pertinent nor germane to this bill, which is one relating to the internal taxes of the country.

I am reminded that in the bill reported by my colleague on the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MOORHEAD,] it is proposed to reduce the present duty on cigars below what it now is. On investigation and examination it may be found proper to concur in the action so recommended. But my objection is that such a provision is utterly out of place here in this bill; that it is a stranger and an outlaw; that it has no business here, and that it ought not to be entertained in connection with this bill. I hope, therefore, that the Committee of the Whole will concur in the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] to strike out this proviso, and we can incorporate it in the tariff bill when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. O'NEILL. Technically as a parliamentary point I do not care whether this provision remains in the bill or not. If I thought we could make a change in the tariff in this respect I would say let us do it here and now, without regard to the question of order which was raised. I am very anxious that not only upon manufactured tobacco, but upon every other article which can be made in this country by our own people, there should be a tariff high enough to protect American industry, and I do not care in what kind of a bill we get it. By striking out this proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means to reduce the duty from three dollars per pound and fifty cents ad valorem to two dollars per pound and twenty-five cents ad valorem, we are thus far protecting the men and women who are toiling in cigar manufactories against foreign competition and capital. Although I am in favor of striking out these few lines, I am not even in favor of the amendment offered by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] unless I find we cannot succeed in keeping in force the existing duty. I have become convinced that the Thirty-Ninth Congress did right in not reducing the tariff upon cigars, and it is only necessary to know to be convinced of that fact that now there is invested in many of our districts a vast amount of money, giving work to hundreds of people in making up tobacco into various shapes, and especially into cigars, who heretofore could find very little to do, and whose occupation was almost gone. Why? For the reason so plainly indicated in the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. KELLEY,] that the men who imported cigars see they can use their capital to more advantage in Philadelphia by importing it in the leaf and manufacturing it where it is consumed. I do not mean to be understood as intimating that Philadelphia is the only locality in this country where American cigars are made or where American tobacco is manufactured, but I want to say that in our city the manufacture of cigars is carried on by such firms as the one mentioned by my colleague, employing hundreds and thousands of men and women, and even children. Then do not let us diminish their work by legislating as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means. I am in favor of the duty remaining just as it is. I am sure those who consume foreign tobacco made up before importation will not complain of Congress for trying at least to encourage the industrious among our own citizens. Many of the smokers of imported cigars will, if by our cherishing home industry we can improve the growth of American tobacco by encouraging the planter and farmer, after awhile use it as it comes from our own soil, and already are enjoying American cigars made of foreign tobacco in American workshops.

To come to the practical point, why should we seek to reduce the duty? We are Representatives in an American Congress. We are endeavoring to uphold and stimulate the industries of our country. We are endeavoring, or we should be, to encourage every branch of manufacturing which can by any possibility be carried on by our own people. I represent a district in which the manufacture of cigars is carried on to a very great extent, greater, perhaps, than in many other districts in Pennsylvania; among my constituents in that are hundreds and thousands of people who are in some cases working for men who have heretofore imported cigars very largely in making what is called the American article, which I believe will, in a few years, comparatively drive out of the market all other kinds. I believe that most of us are learning to smoke American cigars; and even those who think the imported are better, will at last, if we do not legislate unwisely, come to believe that we can grow tobacco here excelling much of the foreign tobacco. I would prefer the striking out of the paragraph which would reduce the duty and leave it as in the present law, to voting for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN,] but will vote for his amendment if I can do no better. In other words, I would prefer the duty at three dollars per pound and fifty per cent. ad valorem, than at $2 50 per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise to oppose the amendment pro forma. I desire to have this item and two or three similar items stricken out of this bill, for the reason that they properly belong to a tariff bill, not to this bill, and have no business here.

Now, sir, I know that it is very common and very proper for members of a committee to support the action of the committee in the House. I have endeavored to do so generally, so far as I could do so with propriety. In this case I feel that I am entirely released from any obligation to support this item, for when it was introduced in the committee I told my colleagues that it was not germane; that we had no right under the rules of the House to introduce a tariff provision into an internal revenue bill; and that I would make objection to the provision whenever the bill should be reported to the House, knowing that the Speaker would rule it out. But I happened to be absent when the bill was reported. It appears that the bill is now in such a position that the provision cannot be ruled out on a point of order. But it is very easy for the Committee of the Whole to get out of the difficulty by striking out the provision; and as it does not properly belong in the bill, as it is an overturning of our whole system of legislation, mingling together two incongruous subjects, I hope the committee will strike it out. And just at this point I would appeal to the chairman of the committee, who is so well versed in matters of this kind, to give us his opinion whether this proviso legitimately belongs in this bill or not.

Mr. SCHENCK. It does legitimately belong there, because the majority of the committee agreed to put it there, and reported it to the House to take its fortune with the rest of the bill; and though I, as well as my colleague, [Mr. MOORHEAD,] voted against it, I supposed (for I may as well define my own position now) there was no impropriety on my part in expressing the views of the committee, and I undertook to be the committee's organ. I find, sir, however loyal I may try to be to the committee in presenting its views according to the decision of the majority, so far as the individual members of the committee are concerned, they too often, when in the House, vote according to the particular views they expressed in committee. The consequence is, instead of presenting an undivided front, we are divided, and lose the force we otherwise would have. Since we have become demoralized on this subject, I do not hesitate to confess, if we may divulge the secrets of the committee, whatever may be the case with others,

I thought it should have never gone into the bill. I presented the views, however, of the committee.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the objection of the gentleman from Massachusetts refers to the internal tax of five dollars being applied to the imported article—

Mr. MOORHEAD. I am just coming to that. The chairman says it is legitimate to this bill because it puts five dollars tax upon imported cigars. My objection is as I have stated it. I do not want a tariff item in an internal tax bill. The sub-committee of the Committee of Ways and Means have acted on this subject and have recommended a reduction of the duty to some extent on these cigars. I hope, therefore, this item, which seems to trouble us and is acknowledged by the best parliamentarians to be out of order in this bill, will be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to add a word to what I have said before. I do not think gentlemen understand the question involved. My friends from Tennessee and Pennsylvania on the Committee of Ways and Means undertake to carry their point on a technical point. They forget we have imposed a tax of five dollars on imported cigars.

Mr. MOORHEAD. We did not forget it.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot yield. Why do we put five dollars upon them? Because we have adopted a new system of stamps, and we put the same amount on imported cigars as upon manufactured cigars. Shall we not beside reduce an onerous import duty? Now, I stand here as much as any man in favor of protecting the cigar manufacturers of this country. This provision is to do away with the smuggling of imported cigars. Everybody who knows the A, B, C of tariff questions knows there are more cigars smuggled than pay duty. In 1860 we imported five hundred millions of cigars which paid duty. As many are smoked now as then, but a very small amount of imported cigars pays duty. The result is they come in without paying any duty, and are a serious injury to our domestic manufacture. I am willing to be fair; I am willing to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts of $2 50 a pound upon imported cigars. I am not surprised the gentleman from Pennsylvania should insist this should go into the tariff bill. He would have a wall around the country and all importations prohibited. The duty now is two hundred per cent, and defeats the object sought to be accomplished. The same quantity of cigars is imported, but they are smuggled and do not pay duty.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The gentleman says this stamp tax is an import duty. I thought he was better informed. He has been on the Committee of Ways and Means for years. I have sat beside him and opposite him, and I am sorry he should come here and expose himself in this way.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment of Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE called for tellers on his motion to strike out.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PRICE and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That there shall be assessed and levied on the interest and interest coupons accruing on all bonds, the interest on which is payable at the Treasury of the United States, an annual tax of sixteen and two thirds per cent., which tax shall be withheld by the proper officer of the Treasury at the time of the payment of such interest or coupons. The tax hereby provided for shall be withheld from the interest which shall become due on and after the 1st day of November, 1868.

Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. SPALDING raised the point of order that the amendment was not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. When the original bill was pending I sought an opportunity to offer this proposition, and the chairman of the committee [Mr. SCHENCK] stated that inasmuch as it was desirable to dispose of the section then pending, he would allow me the opportunity of submitting the amendment at a subsequent time. I submit that inasmuch as this is really a continuation of the same bill, I should have permission to offer it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means had no power to make any promise to bind the House. The Chair rules it out of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not repeat the grounds upon which he made a similar decision this morning.

The question being taken on sustaining the decision of the Chair, it was sustained—ayes 91, noes 16.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to insert after section one hundred and seven the following as a new section:

SEC. — . And be it further enacted, That no stamp under the internal revenue law shall be required on any certificate or ticket given by pawnbrokers for the article pledged.

I believe this is in order. We have got through with the subject of cigars, and we are now proceeding to the consideration of banks.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I raise the point of order that this is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is important that this should pass, and I give notice that I intend to press it at some place. Will it be in order to bring it in after we dispose of the matter of banks?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be in order at any time.

Mr. MOOREHEAD. Will it be in order to have a vote in the House on striking out that section in relation to cigars?

The CHAIRMAN. It is competent for the House to allow the committee to vote, but not for the committee to allow the House to vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

Banks and Bankers.

SEC. 108. And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one twelfth of one per cent, each month upon the average amount of the deposits of money, other than public money of the United States, subject to payment by check or draft, or represented by certificates of deposit or otherwise, whether payable on demand or at some future day, with any person, bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking, and a tax of one fourth of one per cent, each month on the average amount of all deposits of public money in their possession to the credit of the Treasurer or any disbursing officer of the United States; and a tax of one twenty fourth of one per cent, each month, as aforesaid, upon the capital of any bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking, and on the capital employed by any person in the business of banking, beyond the average amount invested in United States bonds; and a tax of one sixth of one per cent, each month upon the average amount of circulation issued by any bank, association, corporation, company, or person, including as circulation all certified checks and all notes and other obligations calculated or intended to circulate or to be used as money, but not including that in the vault of the bank, or redeemed and on deposit for said bank. And a true and accurate return of the amount of circulation, of deposit, and of capital, as aforesaid, and of the amount of notes of persons, State banks and State banking associations, and of States, cities, towns, or other municipal corporations, paid out by them for the previous month, shall be made and rendered monthly by each of them to the assessor of the district in which such bank, association corporation, or company may be located, or in which such person has his place of business, with a declaration annexed thereto, verified by the oath or affirmation of such person, or of the president or cashier of such bank, association, corporation, or company, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And for any refusal or neglect to make or to render such return and pay the tax, any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person so in default shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $200, besides the additional penalty and forfeitures in other cases provided by law; and in default of such return the several amounts subject to tax shall be estimated by the assessor or assistant assessor on the best information he can obtain. And in the case of banks with branches, each branch shall make a separate return, and the tax shall be assessed on each severally. And so much of the forty-first section of the act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof, approved June 3, 1864, as imposes a tax on the banks organized under that act, and requires returns to be made to the Treasurer of the United States, be, and is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions, savings-banks, savings funds, or savings institutions, having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, shall be exempt from tax on so much of their deposits as they have invested in securities of the United States, and on all deposits less than $500 made in the name of any one person; and the returns required to be made by such provident institutions and savings-banks shall be made on the first Monday of January and July of each year, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to strike out the foregoing section, and if the committee shall see fit to do it, I shall move to strike out the next. I will state briefly my reasons for so doing. I wish the committee to consent to take a vote on this motion, so that if it prevails no time need be wasted in amendments. Now, I appeal to the fairness and courtesy of the committee. The Committee of Ways and Means some weeks since presented a bill covering the whole system of internal revenue, based upon two grounds: first, taking the subjects of distilled spirits and tobacco in which great frauds exist, and not only amending the tax upon those articles, but also providing for a new administration of the revenue system by which that tax was to be collected. They further undertook in that bill to readjust and redistribute the whole internal revenue tax. After spending some ten days on that bill the Committee of the Whole decided that it should be laid aside, and ordered the Committee of Ways and Means to report a bill to revise the tax on distilled spirits and tobacco, and also to provide a new administrative plan for collecting it. It appears by the Journal that some time afterward a resolution was by unanimous consent in some manner introduced and passed instructing the committee also to report upon banks, a subject having no more connection with the subject which the House had seriously determined that the Committee of Ways and Means should report this bill upon than it would have been to have referred to them the subject of the tax upon manufacturers or upon brokers or special taxes.

Now, I do not wish to impugn the motives of any person in the matter; but I need not say to any gentleman here that no such resolution as that could have passed, had the House known what was before it, by the unanimous consent of the House. It was entirely foreign to the bill which the House had determined they would act upon at this session. Without going now into the question whether or not the taxes upon banks are such as they ought to be or not, I submit that they are already taxed by law, and that there is no interest in the United States where taxes are more fairly and honestly paid than those of the banks, because there is no opportunity for concealment or for fraud. Every dollar of their circulation is known at the Treasury Department. Every dollar of their Government deposits is known at the Treasury Department. And of their individual deposits sworn statements have to be periodically made. Every dollar of their taxes is being collected. Nobody pretends that any frauds are being perpetrated under the present law. And yet under that resolution the interests of these banks are dragged in here to be revised in a bill the only object of which is to break up the whiskey ring and to prevent tobacco frauds. Now, without going into the subject of what the taxes are or ought to be, I submit to the committee that as an act of courtesy to the committee having charge of these interests in this House, and as an act of courtesy toward the banking interests, this section should be stricken out, and should be considered with the other great industrial interests of the country when we come to consider the special taxes, the manufacturers' taxes, the tax on brokers, and other subjects which are cognate to it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. POMEROY] as reflecting in any way on the Committee of Ways and Means in this matter.

Mr. POMEROY. I stated distinctly that the Committee of Ways and Means had no thought of any such thing.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Committee of Ways and Means retired with as much equanimity as they could summon for the occasion to reconsider the whole matter of taxes so far as whisky and tobacco were concerned, supposing that their duties were confined to those two subjects of taxation. Two days afterwards, they received unexpectedly a resolution, which we afterward understood passed the House by unanimous consent, instructing them also to consider and report upon banks in connection with the other two subjects. That we did, and the result is before the House. While I am up I will simply say in regard to this section that it is the section just as it was agreed on in Committee of the Whole, with the single exception of an increase in the tax on circulation. The Committee of the Whole had amended the original report of the Committee of Ways and Means by adding three per cent. upon Government deposits, doubling the tax on private deposits, and striking off half of what had been recommended on circulation. The committee restored the tax on circulation, and with that single change reported it back as it had passed the Committee of the Whole to take its chance again. I will only say that while it is for the Committee of the Whole or for the House to determine whether or not they will retain this provision in regard to banks, it is my duty to call attention to the effect of its action.

I have already explained to the House that the laying aside of the other portions of the bill—of the general bill introduced by the Committee of Ways and Means and confining legislation to distilled spirits and tobacco—takes away an advantage of about seventeen million dollars in the estimated revenue that we should have derived from that bill. But if we include banks, that amounts to nearly four million dollars out of the $17,000,000. If this should remain, the deficiency, comparing our present legislation with the legislation originally proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, would be a little short of $12,000,000. If the banks are dropped also, the deficiency then, as compared with that bill, will be about seventeen million dollars. It is for Congress to determine whether they can afford this, or how far it ought to be considered in the determination of the question whether you will or will not strike out those sections in relation to banks. I repeat that this section was put in here simply by order of the House. I am asked what is the difference between the present tax on banks and the estimated tax to be derived should this section be retained in this bill. I have already stated that the increased revenue to be so derived will be nearly four million dollars. That is, taking the tax upon deposits of public moneys, the increased tax upon private deposits, and the increased tax on circulation would make the increased amount to be derived from banks about four million dollars. And there is this further provision to be borne in mind: we include in the internal revenue system the national banks as well as the State banks.

Mr. DELANO. I move to amend this section pro forma by striking out the last word. There is no member of this House who has a more sincere respect for the opinion of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. SCHENCK] than I have, or who listens to what reasons he has to assign for his measures with more desire to understand them. But I want to suggest to him that the reason he has last assigned for this tax upon banks is fallacious and must be unsatisfactory.

Now, it may be true that the action of this House has rendered necessary some other sources of revenue than those that are embraced in the tax on whisky and tobacco. But I ask the gentleman if that is a sound reason for laying violent hands upon the banking system, and doing that which is equivalent to striking it out of existence? I am therefore somewhat astonished that the gentleman should allude to that action of the House as a reason for this provision in regard to banks, or even as an apology for its introduction.

Mr. SCHENCK. I make no apology for the introduction of this provision. We were ordered to introduce it, and we should not have introduced it without the order of the House.

Mr. DELANO. I know that the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed by an order of the House to tax banks. The committee, however, was not instructed to tax them unreasonably. The resolution relating to that subject was introduced under circumstances alluded to by the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. POMEROY:] it was extorted or obtained from the House without the consent of the House.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Allow me to correct the gentleman. That resolution was adopted by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. DELANO. I am speaking of things as they are in fact, not as they are in mere name. I mean the substance of things hoped for; and I allude to the evidence of some things not seen. As I understand it, this section provides a tax of one per cent. upon private deposits, a tax of three per cent. on public deposits, a tax of one per cent. upon capital, and a tax of two per cent. upon circulation; the total amount being seven per cent., and amounting to one hundred per cent. more than the present tax. Now, no one who will examine this section will fail to see that the animus of it is the destruction of the banking system. If that is the purpose of the House and country, then, gentlemen, lay your hands on the system and destroy it. What you will have afterward it is not for me to predict, for I am not authorized or empowered to prophecy upon this subject. But that is the purpose of the bill. I know it is very popular to attack banks. It is always, therefore, a pleasant recreation for politicians who are seeking notoriety. I know also, what I desire to say here and have gone before the country, that at the present moment the banks pay better for the revenues of the country than capital in any other form. Your banks now pay in the form of taxation, local and national, $18,338,430 per annum. The entire interest on the amount of bonds which are deposited as security for the circulation of these banks amounts only to about eighteen million dollars. It thus appears that the banks pay a larger sum for taxes than the total amount of interest on all the bonds which they hold as the basis of their circulation. In the State of Ohio the tax upon banks, State and national, upon the average throughout the State, for it varies in different parts of the State, amounts to about six and a half per cent. In the county in which I live it amounts to over six per cent. upon the amount of capital invested in your banks. The banks are therefore at the present day, in the way of contributing to the revenues of the country, the very best property you have. For example, in the State of Ohio—and I presume the case is the same elsewhere—the amount of bonds deposited with the National Government as a security for the circulation becomes a capital for taxation, which is not the case with bonds in the hands of private individuals. Every dollar which you call out and put into your banks in this way makes a source of local taxation and of support to the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Chairman, if I am not mistaken, on the day on which the original tax bill reported from the Committee of Ways and Means was recommitted, this section on banks had already been acted upon and adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PRICE. As it is now?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Nearly as it is now.

Mr. PRICE. Not at all. Where is the provision in regard to taxation of Government deposits?

Mr. INGERSOLL. The three per cent. tax on Government deposits had been adopted.

Mr. PRICE. That is not in this bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. It is in this bill. This section, as now reported, is very nearly in the same form as the section agreed to by the Committee of the Whole when the original bill was under consideration. The bill was recommitted, gentlemen voting for that motion from various motives. Some undoubtedly supported the motion with the intent to defeat any legislation on the subject. Those largely interested in manufactures, that interest having been relieved from the five per cent., did not wish any new tax bill; they were satisfied with existing legislation. Those who desired that the tax on whisky should remain at two dollars did not want any tax bill which would reduce that tax. Those who did not want to have the bank interest disturbed had no reason to desire any modification of the revenue system. So, acting from various motives, a majority of the House decided to recommit the bill, providing, however, that a revision of the system of taxation of whisky and tobacco should be embraced in a new bill and reported to the House at some subsequent day.

Within two days after the action of the House to which I have referred, I presented, during the morning hour, a resolution giving the Committee of Ways and Means authority to embrace in the bill to be reported the subject of the taxation of banks. This resolution was read at the Clerk's desk in the hearing of the House. It was read a second time, in consequence of a suggestion that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] had had a similar resolution referred at some prior time during the morning hour. That was discovered to be a mistake; and my resolution having been twice read, and objections asked for, no member objecting, the resolution was adopted unanimously. Owing to the circumstances I have stated, the resolution received more attention from the House than any resolution—causing no debate—which has been adopted during the present session.

In pursuance of that resolution the Committee of Ways and Means took jurisdiction of the subject, and they have reported these sections with the view of increasing the revenues of the Government from the national banks. The question is whether these banks, which can well afford to pay this additional tax, shall contribute four or five million dollars more to the revenues, relieving to that extent the various industries of the country, or whether we shall legislate in the interest of what is now a monopoly, an absolute monopoly, an aristocratic monopoly, that is making more money on its capital, invested on safer and more reliable and remunerative employment than is realized by any like amount of capital in the United States. I say without fear of contradiction that there is no $300,000,000 invested in any other business in the country with the same security and certainty that it will return a round sum to the investor as this banking capital.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DELANO. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PRUYN. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I think it does not matter very much from what quarter the resolution referred to emanated; but I am surprised that it came from the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL.] He has been appealing to this House to modify the taxation on a great interest which he represents, which modification I admit to be beneficial to the country as well as that particular interest; yet at the same time he turns round and attempts to impose an increased burden on another interest which is now paying fairly and squarely every dollar of taxation imposed on it. That at least is not fair play on the part of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, one word on the subject of this bank tax. It is proposed to increase the tax upon deposits, to double the tax upon Government deposits, and to make the banks pay three per cent. As to Government deposits I have nothing to say. It is for the Secretary of the Treasury to make such arrangements as he thinks will be best for the interests of the country. If he thinks he can get three per cent. it is very well. He cannot get four per cent. He cannot manage to get five. If the banks are to pay at the rate the committee recommend it will be impossible for them to pay the tax upon the Government deposits. Therefore, if the Secretary of the Treasury is now getting, as I understand, in certain quarters interest upon Government deposits, the effect of this will be only to reduce the interest.

Now, as to the local banks in New York: in the town in which I live the local tax is from three and a half to four per cent. and the tax for Government and local purposes is from six to eight, and sometimes runs up to ten per cent. The effect of this legislation upon the banks will be to drive them there to reorganize under the general banking law of New York. Some have contemplated this during the past year. They will do better under the general banking law of New York than under the law of Congress. For the reasons assigned by my colleague I hope this provision will be stricken out.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to state there is no law compelling the banks to receive deposits from the Government. It is at their option. If they do not wish to do so they need not.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am asked to yield to the gentleman from Ohio, who wishes to correct some figures. I yield if it does not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move, on page 129, to strike out the words "beyond the average amount invested in United States bonds." Those words in this bill except United States bonds held by the banks as part of their capital from taxation, and allow the banks by investing their capital in United States bonds so far to escape taxation. Therefore I desire, if we can, to meet the question whether we shall begin to tax these United States bonds in the hands of these institutions. I desire to test the sense of the House on this proposition precisely.

Mr. Chairman, we have come now to a place where we can try the question nakedly and alone, how much we have of real meaning when we say we are in favor of taxing bonds.

Mr. PRUYN. They are taxed as part of the capital.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If they are then this will not do any harm. This bill provides taxation only of the capital invested beyond the average amount invested in United States bonds. By striking out these words we allow capital invested in United States bonds to be taxed. When the proposition of the gentleman from Maine was before this House this morning we found ninety-eight members voted against any proposition to tax United States bonds; but I observed they all voted on a side issue, which might not involve the main one. I wish now to make the taxing of United States bonds held by banks the straight issue, bold, direct. I do not mean, if I can help it, to have any doubt what the question is; but it shall go out as the voice of this House whether we are willing or not to tax United States bonds in the hands of banks, for if you will not tax them in the hands of banks you will not tax them anywhere. There are no widows and orphans or savings institutions here now on which to avoid the question—none of that dodge. Plain cold steel, gentlemen; walk up to it. Let us have it understood. Let us plainly ascertain what the majority of the House mean to do on this question. I want gentlemen to understand distinctly what we are about. There is no double meaning here; no shelter. Any gentleman who votes against this amendment votes not to begin here when he has a chance to tax United States bonds. Any one who votes for this amendment votes to begin to tax United States bonds and relieve the industry of the country of its burdens. Who votes against it, votes to allow the bondholder to hold his bonds without bearing his proportion of the public burden.

Mr. BENTON. I rise not for the purpose of opposing the amendment, but—

Mr. POMEROY. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENTON. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POMEROY.]

The CHAIRMAN. That is not pending.

Mr. POMEROY. The committee will recollect when this subject was under discussion in the old bill I was unfortunate in not being able to take part in the discussion, being chairman of the Committee of the Whole. Now, when I took the floor this morning I begged of the committee before proceeding to amend this section, to vote upon the question whether they would entertain the subject of bank taxation in the manner in which it has been brought before the committee, as an addition to this bill in relation to the tax on distilled spirits and tobacco. Now, sir, I impugn the motives of no person connected with the resolution instructing the Committee of Ways and Means. It was properly introduced, and was properly passed; but I say it was done at a time in the morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, when gentlemen were crowding around the desk with resolutions and other matters which they were eager to have introduced, and in the confusion few members knew what the resolution meant. Now, I attack no man's motive. The committee are technically right in reporting this bill. But I submit, as a question of courtesy to the House, whether we should still continue to consider in connection with whisky and tobacco, a subject so highly incongruous as that of the taxation of banks.

Now, sir, I call the attention of the committee to the extent to which the banks are now taxed. There is already a license tax on banks of two dollars per thousand. There is an additional tax of five per cent. on profits. There is a tax on circulation of one per cent. per annum. There is a tax of one half per cent. on deposits. Then there is in addition to all this a tax for the whole band of Department detectives who are constantly traveling over the country examining into the condition of the banks, whose expenses and salaries the banks have to pay. In addition to that there is no interest in the United States which, for local purposes, is taxed as clean and hard as that of banks. Their capital is known in every locality, and the tax which is assessed upon that capital is collected.

Now, I have no reason to believe that the taxes on banks in my locality are any more severe than those of the average of the country banks. Under existing law the tax is over six per cent. on the cash capital in central and western New York. And yet that tax is paid, and there is no pretense of fraud on the part of any of those institutions in the payment of their taxes. Now these banks are dragged into this bill for the purpose of having an additional tax imposed upon them. Under this bill you propose to tax their circulation $6,000,000, being an increase of $3,000,000. You propose a tax on individual deposits of $5,287,794, being an increase of $2,643,880. You propose to tax Government deposits $728,750, being an increase of $607,292. I make this calculation on the basis of the bank returns in April last, at a period of the year when the deposits are ordinarily the lowest. I make the aggregate increase of tax on banks $6,251,172 over the present tax imposed by the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BENTON. I move to strike out the last word. As I understand it the objection made to the introduction of the sections in this bill in reference to banks is that it was not understood by members when the resolution of instruction was passed that this subject was included. But I presume the resolution is to be treated like other resolutions introduced and passed without objection. It is not to be presumed that a resolution of this importance, introduced in the business hours of the House, is to be smuggled through without the notice or attention of this body. I think that would be a pretty extreme presumption for any man to make here. I take it, then, that this subject was properly enough before the Committee of Ways and Means, and that they have properly enough reported this section to the House. I go further, and I take the ground that if there is any interest in this country that can afford to bear its share of the burdens of taxation it is the very interest now under consideration, the banking interest of this country. It has been demonstrated here to my satisfaction, and I believe to the satisfaction of the majority of the House, that larger profits are made in the banking business in this country than in any other business. Gentlemen talk here about the depressed condition of the banks. Why, sir, it has been stated upon this floor over and over again that they make from fifteen to eighteen or twenty per cent. profit annually, and no man has stood up here and introduced any figures or facts or arguments to refute the statements made by those who claim that these enormous profits are made by the banks. I believe that the country banks make much less profit than the city banks, which are favored with large deposits. I think the taxation proposed to be imposed on deposits is too small. It ought to be increased, and, perhaps, the tax on circulation should be diminished, because the country banks are almost entirely deprived of any advantage from deposits, and their circulation is what they have to rely on for their profit, and it is for the accommodation of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that upon this section the gentleman from Massachusetts will see the advantage of obtaining a more direct vote than his proposition would indicate. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "bonds," in the eighteenth line, insert the following:

And a tax of sixteen and two thirds per cent. on the interest annually accruing on the bonds of the United States held or deposited by such bank, with the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment presents the question directly whether the committee intend to impose any tax on bonds held by the national banks or not. Heretofore the Committee of the Whole have decided that the bonds shall not be taxed for any purpose. But the question is now, shall these bonds held by the banks be taxed. The proposition that these banks are overtaxed, so urgently pressed by the friends of the banks is the most remarkable propositions ever submitted to a body of intelligent gentlemen. The banks overtaxed! Here are the banks with near eight hundred million dollars capital, having $860,000,000 of bonds, $300,000,000 of circulation, and $70,000,000 of surplus fund, and gentlemen come forward here with figures to show the large taxes they pay. Certainly they do pay very considerable taxes; but they have near eight hundred million dollars of capital on which those taxes are to be paid. So that when gentlemen talk of the enormous sums paid, they should take into consideration the enormous capital and the unexampled privileges possessed by these banks. They should consider the power of these banks, not only of controlling the entire moneyed affairs of the country, but of reaping unexampled profits. The entire tax proposed by this bill on the circulation of the banks is two per cent.; this, with the amount paid for license for banking, say $200 a year, and one half of one per cent. on their surplus capital, is the tax they pay. They pay on their individual deposits the small tax of one half of one per cent., but this has no connection with their circulation. They pay these inconsiderable taxes while the whole country is laboring under heavy taxation, more on an average than two per cent. without any privileges from the Government. They pay less on their capital than any other business of the country pays, and yet you have graciously and freely given them $300,000,000 of capital. A small capital of $60,000,000 excited the apprehensions of Andrew Jackson, but he could scarcely have comprehended the power of $800,000,000 of united capital. Talk about the excessive taxation of the banks! Their power even in this Congress is illustrated in being able to command such arguments in their defense. Their power is not easily resisted, however virtuous may be the intentions of the gentlemen. Who has not seen the effects of the blandishments of wealth and power? You pay them their six per cent. interest in gold upon their bonds, purchased with paper greatly under par; you keep their bonds safely at the risk of the Government; you give them $800,000,000 of money and guarantee its solvency—money which they loan to your citizens at from six to fifteen per cent. interest; you have enabled them, after making large dividends annually, to accumulate $70,000,000 of surplus fund in three years; and now, when, for all these extraordinary bounties, you propose to increase the tax on their circulation from one to two per cent. and impose one per cent. only on their bonds, which is sixteen and two thirds per cent. on the interest, their indignation is actually unbounded. I affirm that there is no interest in this nation that is so lightly taxed, considering the amount of capital involved, as the banks, without reference to the enormous privileges and exemptions which they enjoy under our legislation. The Government, for their $800,000,000 of bonds, gives these banks $300,000,000 of currency, actually makes the money for them and pays the salaries of the officers who manage their bureau, and on this they are now paying but one per cent.; and when a proposition is made to increase the taxation to two per cent., the whole financial interests of the country seem to be brought to bear to defeat it.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this question will not be dodged. If gentlemen intend in good faith to tax the securities, here is the place to begin to tax them—in the hands of the bankers, persons who of all others are most able to pay taxes, and on whom, in view of the extraordinary benefits you have conferred, you may most justly impose a reasonable tax. I trust the gentleman from Massachusetts will withdraw his amendment so that the question on this proposition may be directly taken. If we strike out the words which the gentleman proposes to strike out, the banks will still pay no tax on their bonds, the tax must be directly imposed or not at all. Those words stricken out, and the banks are still exempt from this taxation. If the voice of the country is heard, these bonds, especially in the hands of the banks will be taxed. If the intelligent convictions of the whole land are to control the action of Congress, these banks will be required to pay a tax, not simply in proportion to their wealth, but in proportion to the enormous bonus which they realize under the remarkable system of legislation which we have heretofore adopted. Capitalists should consider that a free people will not patiently submit either to great inequality of taxation or to extraordinary favoritism in legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PILE. Mr. Chairman, I would not say a word on this subject, but that I desire to call attention to one effect which I fear this legislation would produce upon the banks, particularly in my own section of the country—a matter which I have not thus far heard mentioned in this debate. I fear that if this additional tax be imposed upon the banks its effect will be to drive money in large amounts to the great cities, rendering the money market more stringent in the interior cities of the West. If this should be the effect, then such legislation will injure instead of benefiting the class of persons whose interests, as I understand the arguments of gentlemen favoring the proposition, it is intended to advance.

Every person conversant with the method of moving the produce of the West to market knows that the price of that product is affected one, two, and three per cent. by the condition of the money market; that the price of the grain that must be moved to the East is not only regulated by the demand and supply, but is also affected to the extent of one, two, and three per cent. by the amount of money that is on hand to move it, the rate of interest, and the readiness with which money accommodations can be secured. Now, one of the evils, as I understand, of our present financial condition, is that in the great money centers, in the large cities, there is a surplus of capital, while in the West and in the interior there is a stringent money market. If this increased tax upon circulation and deposits will, as I think it will, bear so heavily upon the smaller banks of the West as to promote the still further accumulation of money in the large centers and render the money market more stringent in the West, then the class of persons intended to be benefited—the laborer, the farmer, the producer, whose taxes this proposition is intended to lighten by imposing additional taxes upon the banks—will be subjected to an increased burden by reason of the decreased price which they will get for their products. To this single consideration I wished to call the attention of the committee. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a few words, principally in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who challenges to a cold-steel encounter the advocates of the proposition to strike out this section. He maintains that inasmuch as the banks pay no interest upon their bonds there must be some kind of war instituted to bring them to that point. I would like to know whether the gentleman has ever considered this question: when a corporation puts $100,000 worth of bonds into the Treasury of the United States, taking out $90,000 of circulation, and is taxed upon that $90,000 one per cent. under the old law, or two per cent., as this bill proposes, does not the bank pay a tax on the bonds it puts in there? It holds the circulation in lieu of the bonds, and in that way pays tax upon the bonds. This idea does not seem to have occurred to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; it never did.

Mr. PRICE. Well, that is honest. The gentleman says it never has occurred to him. So I was right in my impression. I presume the gentleman will now change his opinion in reference to this matter. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, when interrogated as to the increase of taxation contemplated by this section, stated it at about four million dollars. My friend from New York [Mr. POMEROY] has demonstrated, as I think conclusively, that the amount of increase will be over six million dollars.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN's amendment to the amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] for the purpose of making one or two statements in relation to the taxation of United States bonds. There seems to be a little difficulty about this matter of taxation. When I introduced the proposition this morning it was not in order because of some rule or other; and ninety-eight gentlemen, it seems, either because they were really opposed to it or for the laudable purpose of upholding the rule, concluded to vote against my proposition. It seems now that propositions relating to the banks are in order, because during the morning hour, or at some other time, a resolution was, in some surreptitious way, adopted instructing the Committee of Ways and Means to embrace this subject in the bill. And yet it is complained that banks ought not to be taxed, even if in order, because the order itself ought not to have been adopted.

But I do not propose to discuss bank taxation just now. I wish to call the attention of the House to a more important matter, and as this House is at least three fourths Republican I desire to remind my party friends of the responsibility of the party legislation that falls upon them. I presented this amendment this morning, and it was based upon the reasons which I beg leave to submit to the House:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That upon all interest arising from the bonds of the United States there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of ten per cent. on the amount of such interest, and the Treasurer of the United States and such subordinate officers as shall be charged with the payment of such interest shall assess and collect the duty hereby levied.

The reasons why I propose this method of taxation are these:

1. It is the English method. We are exceedingly sensitive on this question of bond taxation, and while many demand an unfriendly and an unreasonable rate of taxation as compared with the taxation of other property, there are others who shrink from all taxation as if it were a species of repudiation. For the benefit of such I cite the English example, feeling satisfied that if we keep within the pale of the present English law on the subject we shall not lay ourselves liable to this charge.

The income statute of 5 Victoria is very elaborate, occupying a hundred and twenty pages, with minute details of different subjects of taxations and modes of collection.

Schedule B provides that upon incomes from landed estates—and from this source some of the largest English incomes are derived—there shall be levied "two and a half pence upon every twenty shillings of value."

Schedule C is as follows:

"Upon all profits arising from annuities, dividends, and shares of annuities payable to any person, body politic or corporate, company or society, whether corporate or not corporate, out of any public revenue, there shall be charged yearly for every twenty shillings of the amount thereof the sum of seven pence, without deduction."

During the Crimean war, in 1854, the tax was increased fifty per cent., and in 1855 it was again increased until it got to be sixteen pence on the debt and eleven and a half pence on landed income. After that war it fell back and was again increased last year in order to pay the expenses of the Abyssinian war. During the Napoleon wars the tax was two shillings in the pound or ten per cent. of the amount of interest. The mode of collection is provided in sections twenty-four to twenty-eight inclusive of the same act. Section twenty-four reads as follows:

"The governor and directors of the Bank of England shall be commissioners for executing this act, for the purpose of assessing and charging the duties hereby granted in respect of all annuities, dividends, and shares of annuities payable out of the revenue of the United Kingdom to any persons, corporations, or companies whatsoever, and which shall have been intrusted to said governor and company for payment."

The other sections make similar provisions in case of Bank of Ireland, South Sea Company, East India Company, and commissioners for the reduction of the public debt. The effect of these English statutes is:

1. A larger tax is assessed upon the holders of property in the public debt than upon the holders of landed estates.

2. Every holder of the debt, whether resident in Great Britain or not, is assessed.

3. As a portion of the public debt of England is in terminable annuities, to that extent the principal of the debt is taxed, and that whether the holder resides in Great Britain or abroad. Leon Levi, one of the most eminent of English writers on finance, mentions this speciality of British taxation.

4. As the payment of the interest of the debt is intrusted to the banks of England and Ireland, the East India and the South Sea Companies, and the commissioners for the reduction of the debt, the effect of putting this tax into their hands to assess and collect is nearly the same as it would be in our case to deduct it from the coupons. I have in my amendment followed the idea of the British statute and charged the Treasurer with these duties.

5. Schedule C provides for payment of tax "without deduction." In case of other property it is provided by the statute that income up to a certain amount is not taxed. In our case all incomes under $1,000 are not taxed. The English limit is somewhat less.

It is evident that my proposition is clearly within the English example. It should be remembered that the larger portion of the English debt is but three per cent., while almost the whole of ours is at six per cent. A tax of ten per cent., as in Pitt's time, on the English holder, would leave him but two and seven tenths for interest, while in our case it would leave five and two fifths—just double.

2. A proposition was made the other day by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUBBARD] to tax the debt one per cent. and collect by means of the officers of the internal revenue department. It was similar to the tax I proposed in December last and bears a near analogy to the taxation of State bonds under State authority. That proposition failed by a vote of 44 to 52, and, as in a fuller House it would probably share the same fate, instead of renewing it, I propose the English method, which has the advantage of certainty both in assessment and collection.

3. There is no other method of taxation except this I propose or the one rejected by the House. It has been suggested many times that the present bonds may by and by be taken up from the proceeds of new bonds which shall be expressly made taxable by State authority. But this cannot be done. Congress has no authority under the Constitution to issue such bonds, and should they do so, and the bonds be taxed, the Supreme Court would pronounce the tax unconstitutional.

In the case of Van Allen vs. The Assessors, 3 Wallace, 585, 1865, the court says:

"It is said Congress possesses no power to confer upon a State authority to be exercised which has been exclusively delegated to that body by the Constitution, and consequently that it cannot confer upon a State the sovereign right of taxation, nor is a State competent to receive a grant of any such power from Congress. We agree to this. But as it respects a subject-matter over which Congress and the States may exercise a concurrent power, but from the exercise of which Congress by reason of its paramount authority may exclude the States, there is no doubt Congress may withhold the exercise of that authority and leave the States free to act. An example of this relation existing between the Federal and State Governments is found in the pilot laws of the States and the health and quarantine laws. The power of taxation under the Constitution, as a general rule, and as has been repeatedly recognized in adjudged cases in this court, is a concurrent power. The qualifications of this rule are the exclusion of the States from the taxation of the means and instruments employed in the exercise of the functions of the Federal Government."

This opinion sets at rest all questions of local taxation of United States bonds, and as our Democratic friends have been in the habit of complaining that Congress in exempting these bonds from taxation has not dealt fairly by the towns and cities in which they are held, I beg them to notice that this opinion was not given by a Republican, nor by any of the recent Democratic converts on that distinguished bench, but by a member of the court whose Democracy has always been of the most unquestionable character, Judge Nelson, of New York.

It was entirely a work of supererogation for Congress to provide that the bonds should not be taxed by State authority, and as the clause in the loan law has caused so much discussion it was a blunder to insert it. The whole effect of it was to declare what the law was, and the result would have been the same had it been left out.

Several objections are made to this taxation.

1. It may be said that if this tax is levied and collected this year another and a larger one may be levied and collected next year. True. And the same thing may be said of every other tax on the list. The English tax has ranged from seven pence to twenty-four pence in the pound. Ours may do the same. We tax the foreign and domestic holder of our railroad bonds five per cent. on his income and deduct it from the coupon. We have taxed him ten per cent. We have power to tax him twenty. The only assurance the holder of such property can have is in the good sense and honesty of the taxing power.

2. It is said the foreign Governments do not tax their own debts. The statement is entirely incorrect. I have already given the English example. The Governments on the Continent, so far as I have been able to learn, do the same thing. It is not infrequent to see complaints in the English newspapers of the amount of foreign taxation of Government stock held by British subjects. If we allow the property in our bonds to be untaxed we shall be alone among the Governments of the world. I doubt if any other Government, having a well-considered system of taxation, fails to tax this species of property.

3. Many of the holders of the bonds are people of moderate means. True again, but what of it? Our whole system of taxation, whether by means of a tariff or the internal revenue, gathers taxes from such people, and from them mainly. The largest holders of bonds in this country are banks, insurance offices, trust companies, and savings-banks. A considerable amount is held abroad, and the remainder is scattered everywhere. None of the very poor hold bonds, and although our tariff and internal taxation is obnoxious to the objection that it taxes anybody who consumes, whether of food or clothing, no matter how poor he is, this tax is not liable to that objection, because none who are really poor will be affected by it.

4. But it is said we agreed not to tax. That is not so. We not only did not agree not to tax, but we have always taxed. We commenced at one and one-half per cent. and went up to ten, and now have fallen back to five. The difficulty with previous and present taxation is, that we have failed to collect. The method I propose is not only for a reasonable tax, but it insures its collection.

5. If it be alleged that a part of the property is held abroad, and therefore should not be taxed here, I reply that might be a good objection if the attempt were to tax the principal. But it is not. It taxes only the income. If it be said that this distinction is shadowy, I reply that it is the distinction upon which the whole income tax rests, as decided by the Supreme Court in the celebrated carriage case. And while it may well be that we should not tax a bond held abroad any more than a ship owned abroad, we may tax the income if it be in this country, because it is earned under the protection of our laws and comes in its payment within our jurisdiction.

It is to be hoped that while we tax everything else higher in this country than under almost any other Government, we shall not place ourselves in the singular position of being nearly alone among the Governments of the earth in the exemption of the best property in the country from all Government burdens. The fourth of the Chicago resolutions very well says:

"It is due to the labor of the nation that taxation should be equalized and reduced as rapidly as national faith will permit."

If the amendment is adopted, the amount obtained from this source should be between twelve and thirteen million dollars.

Mr. BENTON. I desire to say in reply to the remark made by the gentleman awhile ago, that of those who voted to sustain the decision of the Chair, at least three fourths did so without intending to express any opinion on the gentleman's proposition, but because they believed the decision of the Chair to be correct.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I desire to move an amendment in order to submit some remarks on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is to strike out certain words.

Mr. PIKE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out "one fourth of one per cent." Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to this amendment. I want to strike out one fourth of one per cent. a month upon Government deposits. It was offered by me and considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union when this tax bill was up before. I hope it will now be adopted. The position of this question is this: by the internal revenue law you oblige every collector in the country to deposit the money he collects daily with the Government depositories. In order that the House may understand the matter I will state the circumstances in my own district. After we passed the law to which I have referred the collector of my district was bound to make his deposits daily in a United States depository. There was none, however, within twenty miles. He violated the law if he did not deposit his money there daily. That bank came to the conclusion to refuse to become a depository, saying the trouble of doing the business was not compensated for at all. The law provided the collector should make his deposits daily, and the bank was compelled to give him triplicate certificates of deposit, one for himself, one to be sent to Washington, and one to be preserved. All this made great trouble for the bank, and they refused the deposits, saying they were not worth the trouble.

The law, as I have said, provided that he should deposit the money he collected daily. I endeavored to get the bank there made a depository. It was done. The collector deposited daily, and the Treasury called for certificates daily. There was all the trouble of making out all these triplicate certificates. What is the anomaly of our position to-day? At the other end of the Capitol the chairman of the Committee on Finance has submitted a proposition to abolish all tax upon all deposits in banks, and urges it as in the highest interest of the country. Yet, sir, we are here now proposing to increase the tax upon deposits of banks, the deposits of every little bank throughout the country, when every collector is compelled daily to make his deposits in these banks. We are asked to tax the banks three per cent. upon these deposits. They are more trouble than they are worth. The gentleman says they are not obliged to receive them. What is the result? Pass this into law and you will wind up every deposit bank in the country. Then where are we? You have collectors. They make collections daily. What are you going to do with the money?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be this: because the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate is against this tax therefore we ought not to pass it. We are here to act upon our own judgment. The chairman of the Committee on Finance has reported a great many bills which have failed to pass the Senate. Because he has reported a bill is no reason why we should adopt it. I think the House will agree to no such principle in our legislation. I see there is upon the Speaker's table one of his bills requiring contracts to be made in gold, making the poor in the country the pioneers in specie payment. I do not think we are bound by that. I am sure I am not. I introduced a proposition to tax deposits of the Government in national banks. I did it for the reason I gave at the time, that the Secretary of the Treasury was depositing Government funds in a few dead banks to enrich them, while the Government was paying them a percentage to bank upon. I stated then and state now, one of his pet banks in this city has had from six to thirty millions of Government money upon deposit for which no interest was paid, while the Government was paying interest at six per cent. upon its collaterals.

A MEMBER. What bank is it?

Mr. LOGAN. Examine his report carefully and you will find what bank it is. I do not wish to say what bank it is. These are facts that anybody can ascertain by examination.

A MEMBER. Give us the name.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, if you want to know, it is Jay Cooke & Co. Now, I say this manner of doing business is not to the advantage or the interest of the people of the country. If the people can make four per cent. in agricultural and mercantile business they are very well satisfied. But the banking interest of the country makes from twelve to eighteen per cent. Then if you undertake to tax the banks you raise a howl against it. I tell gentlemen there are other interests in this country than banking institutions, and you will learn it soon if you undertake to favor the banks to the detriment of the people, who have to pay the taxes. Now, sir, I do not desire to tax the banks out of existence by any means; but I do desire that they shall be taxed at a fair rate, so as to equalize the burden of taxation. Now, as to whether this portion of the bill was brought in fairly under the resolution is not the question before the House; but the question for us to determine is, is it right to tax the banks in this way or is it not? The bill came before the House properly, in my opinion, and if it is unsatisfactory to the House let us amend it until it is satisfactory, and tax this interest as well as others.

One word further. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] desires this banking provision to remain in the bill and to tax United States bonds also, I say to him I am now ready, and ever have been, to vote for taxing the bonds. I am as willing as he or anybody else to vote for that proposition. I am willing to vote for this amendment if it will secure the object, though I do not think it will. I am willing to vote to make it stronger. I am ready to tax United States bonds. I think this House ought to do it, and unless they do it I think they will make a great mistake. This idea that because contracts are made and money furnished to the Government with the understanding that the bonds should not be taxed is one which has no force in it in my estimation. Let us see. Some people have constitutional objections on this subject. I have none. I think we have a right to tax the bonds, both the interest and the principal, for the purpose of maintaining the Government. Entertaining these views, I am ready to vote to maintain this proposition in the bill, and to go further, if necessary, and vote for an additional proposition for the taxation of bonds.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I propose to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts by inserting "three eighths" in place of "one fourth." Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a most instructive public document. It is the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury to my own resolution calling for a statement of the deposits in the banks, the amount per month, and the amount in each bank for seventeen consecutive months. We loaned the deposit banks nearly thirty million dollars throughout the whole period. We now loan them, it is said, an average of not more than $23,000,000, but we let them have it in such sums that they can invest the bulk of it in gold-bearing bonds, and while holding them draw an average of from eight to ten per cent. currency interest. Now, I propose that they shall pay three eighths instead of one fourth of one per cent. tax on these deposits.

I turn to the report to which I have referred, (Ex. Doc. No. 87,) and take one single bank as an illustration. In the months of November and December, 1866, and January, February, and March, 1867, its deposits of public money amounted in the first month to $2,806,638 19; in the next month to $6,155,901; in the next to $1,685,619 39; in the next to $2,601,092 26; and in the next to $2,306,461 24. That bank could have had about two million dollars of this money invested during these five months in six per cent. gold-bearing bonds. Now, I ask whether it would have been a hardship that it should give to the Government three eighths of one per cent. a month of the interest on its own money, the specific produce of its own funds.

I request gentlemen to turn from month to month in this official statement, and ascertain the average deposit in the First National Bank of Cincinnati, which, I think, ranged from eight hundred thousand to a million dollars through the seventeen months; turn to the First and Fourth National Banks of New York, with deposits ranging, if my memory serves me, at about the same figures. Turn also to the First National Bank of Philadelphia, where I think the undisturbed balance ranged from four to five hundred thousand dollars during all that long period. But why point to special instances when the whole report will well repay scrutiny? It is an official list of the corporate beneficiaries of the Treasury, and abundantly illustrates the justice of my proposition. I propose by imposing a tax of three eighths of one per cent. per month on these deposits to compel the pet banks to give back to the Government some of the largesses that the Secretary of the Treasury is bestowing upon them. He has thus given them millions of dollars in gold. And in the name of justice and the people I demand that we tax these deposits, if gentlemen will not prohibit them by express statute. And let me just here say a word on the question of taxing bonds. Will it be wrong to tax bonds held by banks with the money of the Government? There is not a well-informed capitalist in the country who does not know that Great Britain always taxes investments of this kind, in some instances the principal, and in others the income derived therefrom. There is not an intelligent bondholder in the country that does not feel that while his amassed property is freed from taxation, while it is proposed to make the cigar-maker pay a license for the privilege of following his trade, and the tea, sugar, coffee, molasses, and other essentials of the life of the laborer are taxed, his exemption is arraying the masses of the people against the owners of realized riches, and the labor of the country against its capital. There is not an intelligent bondholder that will not feel relieved when you shall have included his bonds in the taxable property of the country, and have thus given him a guarantee against a popular excitement which might terminate in repudiation or a temporary suspension of the payment of interest and the depreciation of the value of his investments. I would do this, and increase the tax on private deposits also. The banks are to be ruined, say gentlemen. If they are so sorely oppressed why do not some of them in the East, where they most abound, surrender their charters, that the South and the West may get the banking facilities they need? I have not heard of one surrendering its charter. More than fifty per cent. of the banking capital of the country is located in New York and New England, and no one corporation dreads taxation, present or proposed, sufficiently to induce it to yield its charter to escape oppression, or give banking facilities to the South or West, which are suffering from the need of them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. The first motion submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. POMEROY] being to strike out the whole section subsequent debate upon amendments may or may not result in something, and although it is not the regular order of proceeding, and cannot be done except by unanimous consent, I ask whether the committee will not be willing first to take the question whether this bank section is to stand or not, by having a vote upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, before we consume more time on questions of amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be first taken as a test question.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I object.

Mr. PETERS. I object. If the amendment should not be adopted in the House, then the section could not be perfected.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be open to amendment afterward if it should not be stricken out.

Mr. PETERS. The House may not concur in striking it out.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee requires to strike it out it will be open to amendments to perfect it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. But if the committee strike it out there is an end of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the object of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to be to get a test vote.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. PETERS. I insist on the objection.

Mr. O'NEILL. I rise to oppose the amendment offered by my colleague from the fourth district, [Mr. KELLEY,] because, sir, I am in favor of letting the banks alone. I am in favor of keeping the law just as it is to-day, and I am in favor of letting this national banking system remain as it is, for I believe it is the best system that has ever been inaugurated in this country. I am not only opposed to the amendment, but I shall vote to strike out the section, and I hope the Committee of the Whole will not sustain the great increase, over six million dollars, proposed to be made to the now almost ruinous taxation drawn from these institutions. Why, what are we doing here to-day, and what have we been doing for the last year or two relative to banks? It seems to me that Congress wants to destroy this banking system, and all I have to say as to that is that if you will look at the State banks, State bank systems which have gone down, you may trace their destruction in a great degree to inordinate legislation, such as this appears to be, by those who are opposed to the banking interest and to the facilities which it affords.

Now, Mr. Chairman, who are benefited by banks? To be sure there are large investments of capital in banking organizations; that must be. But I can tell you—I suppose it is known, and I do not state it for information, for every gentleman present knows it already, or should know it—there are in this country something like two hundred and thirty thousand stockholders in the national banks. Who compose that large number? Not the great capitalists of the country exclusively, but the less wealthy men, those of moderate means. And I have known within my experience when there has been a financial crisis, and banks were shaking, the poorer men have still, to a great extent, preserved their stock, waiting for the time when the country would become more flourishing, having confidence that their investments would not be lost. It is certainly true that money invested in bank stock has been lost; but it is also true that to this day many of these institutions have stood the shock of monetary revulsions, and that those who owned their stock have found it yielding not only a profit, but have been secured in their investments, when capital placed in individual enterprises has frequently entirely disappeared.

There is invested in banks in this country about four hundred and twenty million dollars, or on an average some eighteen hundred dollars to each stockholder, and yet complaint is made by gentlemen on this floor that we are legislating for the rich to the destruction of the poorer classes of the community. Sir, we are putting upon these banks and upon those who are interested in them what they cannot bear, thus not protecting the property of either poor or rich men.

The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. POMEROY] says that in his own county the tax now paid by the banks amounts to something like six or seven per cent. on their capital. I understand that in the city of New York the amount of tax, Government, State, and municipal, paid by the banks, is from six to ten per cent., and I know that in the State which I in part represent no city bank gets off with much less than six or eight per cent., while in the rural districts the taxes exacted of them will amount on an average to four or five per cent.

Now, in relation to the taxation of deposits of public moneys, I find, by referring to section forty-five of the act of June 3, 1864, that it is not merely a privilege given such banks as are designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to be depositories of public money to have in their vaults the Government deposits, but certain duties to be performed are imposed upon them as financial agents, and they are obliged to receive at par all the national currency bills, by whatever association issued, which have been paid in to the Government for internal revenue or for loans or stocks.

Why should we double the present tax upon the money deposited by individuals, making it one per cent. per annum instead of one half of one per cent., as now? And why should the circulation be taxed two per cent. per annum when, under the existing laws, the tax is but one per cent.?

The answer to me seems plain. There is a determination, under the plea of more revenue wanted, to distress these institutions, to take from them the means of carrying on a paying business for their stockholders, to put obstacles in the way of their success, and in the end, now that the time for coming to the aid of the Government when temporarily in want of funds has passed, to create distrust in them, to shake confidence in them, and thus bring them to ruin. I say again, let them alone. In general business transactions they are useful. They cannot easily violate the laws under which they are organized, and so long as they are accommodating the people and are carried on legitimately let them alone.

In regard to taxing the interest on Government bonds, that question has not come up regularly to-day. It was not in order when introduced by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE.] But still it has been brought into the discussion. Now, wherever we have lawfully a right to tax anything, let us do so if there be necessity for it. But first let us see that we have the authority. Our duty is to carry out in full faith the promises of the Government to its creditors, and not hastily and without proper consideration and reflection to impose a tax where, by common consent and a fair understanding, perhaps, the subscriber to our loans took them in the belief that his coupons or interest were not to be taxed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PETERS. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment; let it be voted upon and disposed of, so that other amendments may be offered.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. KELLEY, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend this section by reducing the rates of taxation proposed by it one half in all cases. This bill rests upon a most peculiar theory. It does not rest upon a theory of the Committee of Ways and Means, for it is the result of the action of this House. But the theory of the bill is this: that wherever you find an interest in the hands of men who are disposed to defraud the Government, and who refuse to pay the taxes levied upon them, then you must reduce their rate of taxation. But wherever you find an interest in the hands of men who pay their taxes fully, by whom the Government loses nothing, then you must increase their rate of taxation. You must relieve the scoundrel and put an additional tax upon the honest man. That is the theory upon which this bill is based. For weeks we have had discussions here denouncing the men engaged in the whisky frauds and in the tobacco frauds. And this bill relieves to a great extent those two interests of the taxation heretofore imposed upon them, and proposes to make up a part of the loss resulting thereby by putting a burdensome and ruinous tax upon probably the only interest in the country that pays every farthing of the tax imposed upon it.

Now, suppose this proposed increase of taxation is imposed upon the national banks.

Then the aggregate amount to be collected of those institutions by the local authorities and under Federal legislation will be $25,000,000 per annum, one twelfth of the entire amount of capital represented by the circulation of the banks, or eight and one third per cent. per annum tax on the entire capital so represented. Now, in addition to that tax of eight and one third per cent. it will cost say three per cent. to meet the expenses of the banks. Then you have eleven and one third per cent. to begin with. I suppose gentlemen will not object to a bank declaring annual dividends of six per cent. If they do that, you have as the amount they must necessarily earn, without taking into account any losses, seventeen and one third per cent. upon their entire capital; that is the amount which by your legislation you compel these banks to earn. Does not every man here know that a system of legislation which drives the banking institutions of the country into a line of business compelling them, without taking account of losses, to earn seventeen and one third per cent. in ordinary times is a system which will bring disaster and ruin upon the whole banking interest of the country? Does any man believe that any banking system, whether national or State, can exist in this country, upon which a burden so onerous as that is placed?

But we are told that some banks are making enormous dividends, and we are also told that these banks are making enormous profits out of Government deposits, and two cases have been cited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] in support of that statement. Now, that statement may be true. But does the gentleman from Pennsylvania propose to test the whole system and condemn every bank because the Secretary of the Treasury or somebody else may have made pets of two or three of these institutions in the country? Is the system to go under because an abuse of that kind may be found in the administration of the law?

Mr. KELLEY. Can the Secretary of the Treasury compel a bank to receive Government funds on deposit?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not care what he can or cannot do. I am informed that these banks are compelled to receive the Government funds on deposit, when selected for that purpose. But be that as it may, the gentleman from Pennsylvania cited those two cases for the purpose of basing an argument upon them in support of this proposition. I object to having a general system run down by a few isolated cases of wrong that may be found in the administration of the law by the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, I object to this unparalleled legislation on the part of Congress, which must lead in a short time to the utter destruction of the present system of banking in this country. If it is followed up it must necessarily drive the banking business into the hands of private bankers, without there being any organized banking institutions under the laws of the States of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS. I have an amendment I desire to offer, and unless some gentleman desires to be heard in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] I hope the vote will be taken upon it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PETERS. I move to amend section one hundred and eight by inserting, after the clause imposing a tax on deposits, the following:

But no bank shall be obliged to receive the deposits of public moneys.

If I understand the provisions of this section, a tax of three per cent. per annum is imposed on all public moneys deposited in these banks. Now, from my connection, as a director, with a national bank in my State, I know that these deposits are not worth to the bank one per cent. per annum.

Mr. INGERSOLL. To what bank does the gentleman refer?

Mr. PETERS. To the First National Bank of Bangor, Maine. These deposits are received in dribblets, and are drawn by the Government in large sums, and without notice. If I understand the provision of the present law, it is mandatory upon the bank; it requires any national bank which may be selected as a public depository to receive these deposits. I do not think there can be any objection to my amendment, and, therefore, I will say no more in favor of it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to correct a statement he has made?

Mr. PETERS. Yes; if I have made any which needs correction.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I find, upon examination, that the amount of Government deposits in the First National Bank of Bangor run from forty-seven thousand to sixty-one thousand dollars; the lowest point being $27,000.

Mr. PETERS. I suppose that the gentleman will allow that I know as much about the matter as he does, or any statement he has got.

Mr. INGERSOLL. The Secretary of the Treasury says so.

Mr. PETERS. I do not care who says so; I think I understand what I am saying. As the Government draws these deposits without any notice, sometimes drawing the whole amount of the balance, or even overdrawing it, the matter is not regarded as worth anything to the banks, and the idea that these banks shall be compelled to receive these deposits whether they desire them or not, and be required to pay a high rate of interest upon them, I do not think is of any advantage to them.

Mr. PRUYN. No bank is now compelled to receive these deposits.

Mr. PETERS. There may be a doubt about the construction of the law. My construction is that the banks are compelled to receive these deposits. At least the law is doubtful, and my amendment will make it certain. I ask the Clerk to read section forty-five of the currency act.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 45. All associations under this act, when designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be depositories of public money, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary; and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government; and they shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositories of public money and financial agents of the Government, as may be required of them. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall require of the associations thus designated satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise, for the safe keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the faithful performance of their duties as financial agents of the Government: Provided, That every association which shall be selected and designated as receiver or depository of the public money shall take and receive at par all of the national currency bills, by whatever association issued, which have been paid into the Government for internal revenue, as for loans on stocks.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent that all further debate on this section be terminated in five minutes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to state that the figures I gave in reference to the Bangor national bank were for 1866. I find on examination the deposits in 1867 were only $15,000.

Mr. PETERS. And they were worthless to the bank.

Mr. POMEROY. I wish, before debate is closed, to explain two amendments I have to offer.

Mr. BARNES. Is it intended to close debate on all the subjects of the section?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARNES. Then I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending section of the tax bill be closed in ten minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Say five minutes.

Mr. SCHENCK. Ten minutes is not too much.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it in order to move in the House that the vote in committee shall be first on striking out the section? If that is carried it saves all necessity to debate and vote on amendments to the section.

The SPEAKER. The rules require the first vote shall be on perfecting the section and then on striking out; and as it would be an amendment of the rules it must lie over for one day.

RODERICK R. BUTLER.

Mr. BROOMALL. Before going into committee I move that Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, be sworn in. The bill in his case has passed and been signed by the President.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a copy of the law, and Mr. BUTLER can now present himself and be sworn in.

Mr. RODERICK R. BUTLER, of Tennessee, then appeared and was sworn in, taking, as the law provided, the following oath:

I, Roderick R. Butler, do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter: so help me God.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now insist upon the regular order of business.

The House, under the order heretofore made, accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POMEROY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. POMEROY. What I previously stated, Mr. Chairman, was in reference to striking out the section. I wish now to propose for the consideration of the committee one or two amendments which I think ought to be adopted. One is to strike out one fourth and insert one twelfth as the monthly tax on Government deposits, leaving it just as it is under the present law. The whole amount of Government deposits in all the banks, according to the last quarterly statement, is only some twenty-seven million dollars. The amount of individual deposits is $528,000,000. Now, I will not stop to argue before any body of sensible men the practicability or even the possibility of any country bank in the United States buying fifty-two bonds at 114 or 115 to deposit as security, and then receiving deposits of money from the Government at three per cent. payable on call.

My next amendment is to strike out one sixth and insert one twelfth as the tax on circulation, leaving it the same as the law now stands. Now, what is the effect of this section as it stands? It is a deadly blow at the country banks and in the interest of the city banks, which hold the great mass of the deposits, and which have been making the largest dividends that have been made during the last three or four years. You ask the country banks to pay two per cent. on their circulation. The whole amount of circulation, according to the last quarterly statement, was $295,000,000. The amount of deposits was almost six hundred million. Now, I propose to leave the tax on the circulation standing where it is. If the Committee of Ways and Means want to hold this tax on deposits they may hold it. The effect of it will be to increase the tax on the banks $2,643,000. I ask, in behalf of the small banks scattered through the country, that this House shall pause and consider before the tax of two per cent. is placed on their circulation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROOMALL. I am not prepared to say that the banks in the large cities would not bear an increased tax, but I am certain the banks in the country will not. According to the best calculation that can be made, the national, State, and local taxes upon these banks amount already to full six per cent. on their entire capital. An increase of tax upon the country banks will lead to the extension of an evil to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. It is already pressing hard upon the interest of the customers of the country banks. It is this: by the law as it now stands banks are allowed to pay interest upon deposits. Now, as money is worth more in the cities than the people of the country can afford to give for it, the result is, in order to keep up their present dividends, the country banks are obliged to loan to the city banks at such rate as they can get moneys that should go to the benefit of their country customers. Now, I want to have this evil broken up altogether by abolishing the law which allows any bank to pay interest on deposits.

One word with reference to the national deposits. I can corroborate the statement of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PETERS] as to the profit on these deposits in the country banks. The First National Bank of Chester, Pennsylvania, was at one time a Government depository. After about a year's experience, in which no interest was paid on those deposits at all, instead of three per cent., as is now proposed, that bank was compelled to give up the Government deposits, because they were worth nothing to it. How much more would this be the case if a tax of three per cent. is put upon them? You would destroy all the public depositories in the country, and force all the receivers of public moneys to take their moneys to the great cities. It is a measure in the interest of the great cities and against the country, and I do not wonder that my colleague from the city of Philadelphia who first spoke [Mr. KELLER] should favor it. But for the very reason that he should be in favor of it, I, as the Representative of a country constituency, will oppose it. I want to keep the money where it belongs, in the banks of the neighborhood, for the benefit of the country customers of the banks, and not compel them, for the purpose of relieving themselves of this enormous load, to carry it all to the great cities.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say that if this section is not stricken out there will be an amendment offered which will be the present banking law, taxing as it now stands, with the proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] to tax the interest on the bonds ten per cent. added.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is now closed on the section by order of the House.

The question was first on the amendment of Mr. PETERS; and being put, the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on striking out the clause as amended, as follows:

And a tax of one fourth of one per cent. each month on the average amount of all deposits of public money in their possession to the credit of the Treasurer or any disbursing officer of the United States, but no bank shall be obliged to receive deposits of public moneys.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 58, noes 48.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. POMEROY and INGERSOLL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

At this point the committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 650) to amend the act of 3d March, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 553) to pay Stephen G. Montana, a citizen of Peru, an unpaid balance of money awarded to him by the mixed commission authorized by the convention of January 12, 1863, between the United States and Peru;

A bill (S. No. 478) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of the Sisseton, Warpeton, Medawakonton, and Warpeku bands of Sioux or Dakota Indians, and for the disposition of their lands in Minnesota and Dakota," approved March 3, 1863;

A bill (S. No. 394) to provide for the removal of the Center market, in the city of Washington, and for the erection of a market building in a more suitable locality;

A bill (S. No. 569) granting relief to Lois Clark;

A bill (S. No. 398) extending the Portage lake and Lake Superior ship-canal to Keweenaw bay, providing for the right of way, and making a grant of lands to aid in the continuance of said extension; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) in relation to the Maquokita river, in the State of Iowa.

The message further announced that the Senate had indefinitely postponed bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1282) authorizing certain banks named therein to change their names; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1035) authorizing the Manufacturer's National Bank of New York to change its location.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 129) donating certain captured ordnance for the completion of a monument to the memory of the late Major General John Sedgwick; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 143) for the relief of George W. Doty, a commander in the United States Navy on the retired list.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BLAINE in the chair) then resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The pending section was section one hundred and eight, in relation to the tax on banks.

Mr. RAUM. I move to amend this section by inserting the words "exceeding $25,000" before the words "of all deposits of public money;" so that portion of the section will read:

A tax of one fourth of one per cent. each month on the average amount exceeding $25,000 of all deposits of public money in their possession to the credit of the Treasurer or any disbursing officer of the United States.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. RAUM; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 51, noes 50.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. BARNES called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BARNES and Mr. RAUM were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes seventy-two, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. POMEROY, to strike out "one sixth" and insert "one twelfth" in the clause relating to the tax on circulation; so that portion of the section would read:

And a tax of one twelfth of one per cent, each month upon the average amount of circulation issued by any bank, association, corporation, company, or person.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and it was agreed to upon a division—ayes 62, noes 44.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend this section by inserting after the clause relating to a tax upon circulation the following:

And a tax of sixteen and two thirds per cent, on the interest and interest coupons accruing on all bonds issued by the United States and held by such bank, and deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to secure the circulation of such bank and deposits.

Mr. POLAND. I rise to a point of order, that this amendment is not germane to the section under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and does so because this section relating to banks, an amendment proposing a tax upon the bonds held by banks, is germane and in order.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will better accomplish his purpose by making the proposed tax twenty-five or thirty-three and a third per cent.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman is in favor of such a tax he can move it.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 49, noes 63.

Before the result of the vote was announced Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 55, noes 62.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MORRELL,] who is not now in his seat, desired to have an amendment offered. I move, therefore, for him, to amend this section by adding to the clause relating to the tax on circulation the following:

Provided, That this shall not apply to any person, bank, association, company, or corporation which is in liquidation, and which has not issued any notes for circulation for a period of more than one year.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "one year" and inserting "two years."

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 42, noes 43; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GRISWOLD and Mr. MAYNARD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 64, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend this section by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one fourth of one per cent, each month on the average amount of all deposits of public money in the possession of any bank, association, or person to the credit of the Treasurer or any collector or disbursing officer of the United States; which said bank, association, or person is within fifty miles of the Treasury or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now renew the amendment I offered some time since, to strike out of the clause relating to the tax on capital the words "beyond the average amount invested in United States bonds."

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 43, noes 58.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. SCHENCK were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 47, noes 54.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BARNES. I move to amend this section by adding to it the following:

Provided further, That no public funds belonging to the United States shall be deposited in any bank where the treasury or assistant treasury exists within five miles of the collection office where such moneys are received, or for a longer period than seven days when the treasury or assistant treasury exists more than five miles and less than fifty miles from the place of collection.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BARNES; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 50, noes 49.

Before the result was announced, Mr. INGERSOLL called for tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were twelve in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was accordingly agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion to strike out the section, as amended.

Mr. SCHENCK. As we are spending a great deal of time on these amendments, I ask that the vote be now taken upon the motion to strike out the entire section, of course reserving the right to move amendments afterward, if the motion to strike out should not be agreed to.

The question was taken upon the motion to strike out the section as amended; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 56, noes 56.

Mr. KELSEY called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LOGAN and Mr. POMEROY were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 66, noes 53.

So the motion to strike out the section was agreed to.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 109. And be it further enacted, That every national banking association, State bank, or State banking association, corporation, company, or person engaged in the business of banking, shall pay a tax of ten per cent, on the amount of notes of any person, State bank, or State banking association, or of any State, town, city, or other municipal corporation, used for circulation and paid out by them, and such tax shall be assessed and paid in such manner as shall be prescribed by law, and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue: Provided, That this section shall not apply to banks, persons, or institutions which are in liquidation and which have not issued any notes for circulation for a period of more than one year.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out this section. It is simply a reenactment of the present law, and is not necessary to be inserted now that the preceding section has been struck out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 110. And be it further enacted, That when any tax is imposed, and the mode or time of assessment or collection is not provided for, the same shall be established by regulation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the Commissioner is authorized to make all such regulations, not otherwise provided for, as may become necessary by reason of any change of law in relation to internal revenue made by this act.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to amend by inserting the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That in every case where it becomes necessary to ascertain the amount of annual or monthly sales made by any person on whom a special tax is imposed by this act to ascertain the excess of such sales above a given amount, such amounts and excesses shall be ascertained and returned under such regulations and in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and in any case where the amount of the tax has been increased by this act above the amount before paid by any person in that behalf, such person, except retail dealers, shall be again assessed and pay the amount of such increase from the taking effect of this act; and in any case where the amount of sales or receipts has been understated or underestimated by any person, such person shall be again assessed for such deficiency, and shall be required to pay the same, with any penalty or penalties that may by law have accrued or be chargeable thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON. I rise to a point of order. Is that amendment germane to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. It refers to special taxes "imposed by this act," and is therefore in order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend by inserting the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one fourth of one per cent, each month on the average amount of all deposits of public money in their possession above the sum of $25,000 to the credit of the Treasurer or any disbursing officer of the United States in any bank or banking association.

On the amendment there were—ayes 49, noes 63.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 111. And be it further enacted, That where not otherwise distinctly expressed, or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof, the word "person," as used in this act, shall be construed to mean and include a firm, partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person; and words of the masculine gender, as applied to persons, to mean and include the feminine gender; and the singular number to mean and include the plural number; and the word "State" to mean and include a Territory and District of Columbia; and the word "county" to mean and include parish, district, or other equivalent territorial subdivision of a State.

No amendment was offered.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 112. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That all the provisions of said acts shall be in force for levying and collecting all taxes properly assessed or liable to be assessed, or accruing under the provisions of former acts, the right to which has already accrued, or which may hereafter accrue, under said acts, and for maintaining and continuing liens, fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under and by virtue thereof. And for carrying out and completing all proceedings which have been already commenced or that may be commenced to enforce such fines, penalties, and forfeitures or criminal proceedings under said acts, and for the punishment of crimes of which any party shall be or has been found guilty: And provided further, That no office created by the said acts and continued by this act shall be vacated by reason of any provisions herein contained, but the officers heretofore appointed shall continue to hold the said offices without reappointment until their successors, or other officers to perform their duties, respectively, shall be appointed as provided in this act: And provided further, That whenever the duty imposed by any existing law shall cease in consequence of any limitation therein contained before the respective provisions of this act shall take effect, the same duty or tax shall be, and is hereby, continued until such provisions of this act shall take effect; and where any act is hereby repealed, no duty or tax imposed thereby shall be held to cease in consequence of such repeal until the respective corresponding provisions of this act shall take effect.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment takes precedence of the motion to rise.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one half of one per cent, per annum upon the average amount of the deposits of money other than public money of the United States subject to check or draft, or represented by certificates of deposit or otherwise, whether payable on demand or at some future day, with any person, bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking, and a tax of three per cent, per annum on the average amount of all deposits of public money in their possession to the credit of the United States; and a tax of one half of one per cent, per annum upon the capital of any bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking beyond the average amount invested in United States bonds; and a tax of one per cent, per annum upon the average amount of circulation issued by any bank, association, corporation, company, or person, including as circulation all certified checks, and all notes and other obligations calculated or intended to circulate or be used as money, but not including that in the bank or redeemed and on deposit for said bank; and a true and accurate return of the amount of circulation, deposit, and capital, as aforesaid, and of the amount of notes of persons, State banks, and State banking associations, and of States, cities, towns, or other municipal corporations paid out by them during the previous month, shall be made and rendered monthly by each of them to the assessor of the district in which such bank, association, corporation, or company may be located, verified by the oath or affirmation of such person, or of the president or cashier of such bank, association, corporation, or company, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and upon all interest arising from the bonds of the United States there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of ten per cent. on the amount of such interest; and the Treasurer of the United States, and such subordinate officers as shall be charged with the payment of said interest, shall assess and collect the duty hereby levied. And for any refusal or neglect to make or to render such return and pay the tax any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person so in default shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $200 besides the additional penalty and forfeitures in other cases provided by law; and in default of such return the several amounts subject to tax shall be estimated by the assessor or assistant assessor on the best information he can obtain. And in the case of banks with branches, each branch shall make a separate return, and the tax shall be assessed on each severally. And so much of the forty-first section of the act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof, approved June 3, 1864, as imposes a tax on the banks organized under that act, and requires returns to be made to the Treasurer of the United States, be, and is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions, savings-banks, savings funds, or savings institutions, having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits, to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, shall be exempt from tax on so much of their deposits as they have invested in securities of the United States, and on all deposits less than $500 made in the name of any one person; and the returns required to be made by such provident institutions and savings-banks shall be provided on the first Monday of January and July of each year, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. POMEROY. I rise to a point of order, that section one hundred and eight and one hundred and nine having been struck out by the committee there is nothing now in the bill to which this amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment could not be in order except as an amendment to the section which has just been read—section one hundred and twelve; and it is not germane to that section.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent that section fifty, relating to export warehouses, be struck out.

Mr. RAUM. That is the section which I moved to strike out the other day; but neither the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] nor the Committee of the Whole appeared to understand the propriety of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, section fifty will be struck out.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to know whether my amendment is not in order, being offered as an independent section?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not now in order to go back to amend sections in regard to whisky, tobacco, and cigars, and the tax on banks.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I want to add to the bill an additional section.

The CHAIRMAN. It must be in the nature of an amendment to the last section, although a separate section.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. It is not now pertinent to move a tax on United States bonds, as that has been stricken out.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw the amendment to the fiftieth section.

Mr. JENCKES. Is it in order to move in the House an additional section to provide for the collection of the penalties imposed by this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot decide that, as he is only chairman of the committee.

Mr. BENTON. I move the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That where it shall appear to the collector of any district within the United States, upon oath or otherwise, to his satisfaction, that any instrument in writing has not been duly stamped at the time of making or issuing the same, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, then and in such case, if such instrument, or if the original be lost a copy thereof duly certified by the officer having charge of any records in which such original is required to be recorded, or, if not recorded, otherwise duly proven to the satisfaction of the collector, shall, within twelve calendar months after the 1st day of August, 1868, or within twelve calendar months after the making or issuing thereof, be brought to the said collector of revenue to be stamped, and the stamp tax chargeable thereon shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said collector to remit the penalty aforesaid and to cause such instrument to be duly stamped.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a point of order on that. It is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. SCHENCK took the floor.

Mr. JUDD. I wish the gentleman to yield to me to offer the following amendment:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act sauces, sirups, prepared mustard, jams, and jellies shall be exempt from internal tax.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is not germane.

Objection was made.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the gentleman will let me offer the following:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That no stamp under the internal revenue law shall be required on any certificate or ticket given by pawnbroker's for the article pledged.

Mr. SCHENCK. I cannot yield for that amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I offer the following as an additional section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That on and after the 1st day of October next so much of all acts and parts of acts as imposes an internal revenue tax on "illuminating or other mineral oils," and on the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, or of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances, together with all the provisions relating to returns, assessment, warehousing, and bonding, and all other provisions providing for determining the quantity of mineral oil distilled to secure the payment of the tax thereon, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am willing there shall be a vote on that.

The SPEAKER. Propositions for taxes and changes upon the people must have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, but reduction of taxes, it has been held, is in order in the House without reference to the committee.

Mr. UPSON. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains that point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask consent to go back to page 7, section six, line ten, and strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so that it will read: "but in no case shall such bond be for a less sum than $5,000." It was the understanding of the committee that that amendment should be offered. It is in relation to the bonds given by distillers.

No objection being made, the amendment was regarded as pending.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is a little amendment that I promised to allow the gentleman from Kentucky in Committee of the Whole to have a vote upon in the House.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I would like to have the same opportunity.

Mr. SCHENCK. The committee gave unanimous consent to the gentleman from Kentucky. Several members objected.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a section, which, if it be ruled in order, the committee would be very glad to have inserted as an amendment. It relates to the fees of gaugers. We find that they are enormous, running up as high as $56,000 a year.

I therefore move to add to the bill the following section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the fees for gauging oil shall be in all districts where the average amount gauged monthly exceeds five thousand barrels, one cent and a half per barrel; and in districts where the amount gauged is five thousand barrels or less the fee shall be three cents per barrel.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether there is anything in the bill in regard to gauging fees; nor can the Chair tell whether this is a reduction or not.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is a reduction. The fees are enormous.

Mr. BLAINE. They make sometimes $50,000 a year for doing little or nothing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the bill does cover a provision in regard to gauging. The rule will be read on page 185 of the Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

"No sum or quantum of tax or duty voted by a Committee of the Whole House shall be increased in the House until the motion or proposition for such increase shall be first discussed and voted in a Committee of the Whole House."

The SPEAKER. If this is a reduction it is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. In some cases this would be an increase.

Mr. BLAINE. It could not by possibility be an increase in any case.

Mr. SCHENCK. A very large reduction.

Mr. ROBINSON. I contend it would be a large increase in some districts where the business is small.

Mr. BLAINE. Unless three cents a barrel is more than one quarter of a cent a gallon it would be no increase.

Mr. GETZ. What is right I believe is always in order. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Not under parliamentary law. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I insist there is nothing in the bill on the subject of gauging of oil; it is the gauging of liquors.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well; then I call the previous question on the bill and amendments. I admit there is nothing in the bill to which the amendment relates.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed there is nothing in the bill in regard to the gauging of oil.

Mr. JENCKES. I wish to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has resumed his seat after demanding the previous question. It is not in order, therefore, to ask him a question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The Clerk then read the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and all those upon which no separate votes were called for were regarded as agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD called for a separate vote on the following amendment:

Page 3, section two, line sixteen, after the word "weighing" insert the words "and marking;" so that the clause will read:

And he may prescribe rules and regulations to secure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing, and marking, and gauging of spirits.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD demanded a separate vote on the following amendment:

Add to section three the following:

And no mash, wort, or wash, fit for distillation or the production of spirits or alcohol, shall be made or fermented in any building or on any premises other than a distillery duly authorized according to law; and no mash, wort, or wash so made and fermented shall be sold or removed from any distillery before being distilled, and no person other than an authorized distiller shall by distillation, or by any other process, separate the alcoholic spirits from any fermented mash, wort, or wash, and no person shall use spirits or alcohol, or any vapor of alcoholic spirits, in manufacturing vinegar or any other article, or in any process of manufacture whatever, unless the spirits or alcohol so used shall have been produced in an authorized distillery and the tax thereon paid, or shall have been lawfully imported into the United States and the duties thereon paid. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be fined for every offense not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than two years.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL called for a separate vote on the following amendment:

Page 15, section twelve, lines five to eight inclusive, strike out "one hundred bushels of grain or less in twenty-four hours, five dollars per day; and three dollars per day for every hundred bushels of such capacity in excess of one hundred bushels in twenty-four hours," and insert in lieu thereof: "Twenty bushels of grain or less in twenty-four hours, two dollars per day; and two dollars per day for every twenty bushels of such capacity in excess of twenty bushels in twenty-four hours;" so that the section, as amended, will read as follows:

That there shall be assessed and collected monthly, in the same manner as other taxes are assessed and collected, on every registered distillery having an aggregate capacity for mashing and fermenting twenty bushels of grain or less in twenty-four hours, two dollars per day; and two dollars per day for every twenty bushels of such capacity in excess of twenty bushels in twenty-four hours.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL demanded a separate vote on the following amendment:

Page 87, after line seventy-five, insert the following:

Provided, That a like tax of four dollars on each barrel, containing forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, shall be assessed and collected from the owner of any distilled spirits which may be in any bonded warehouse at the date of the taking effect of this act, to be paid whenever the same shall be withdrawn from such warehouse under the provisions of the sixty-second section of this act.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK called for a separate vote on the following amendment:

Page 114, section ninety-two, line two, after the word "packed," insert "by the manufacturer;" and in line five, strike out the word "person" and insert "cigar manufacturer;" so that the section will read: Sec. 91. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act all cigars shall be packed by the manufacturer in boxes, not before used for that purpose, containing not more, respectively, than twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, two hundred and fifty, or five hundred cigars each; and any cigar manufacturer who shall sell or offer for sale, or deliver or offer to deliver, any cigars in any other form, &c.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think it was a mistake to put in those words. The intention is to punish any person who does this.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PETERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, called for a separate vote on the following amendment:

Strike out section one hundred and eight, as follows:

Sec. 108. And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one twelfth of one per cent, each month upon the average amount of the deposits of money, other than public money of the United States, subject to payment by check or draft, or represented by certificates of deposit or otherwise, whether payable on demand or at some future day, with any person, bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking, and a tax of one fourth of one per cent, each month on the average amount of all deposits of public money in their possession to the credit of the Treasurer or any disbursing officer of the United States; and a tax of one twenty fourth of one per cent, each month, as aforesaid, upon the capital of any bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking, and on the capital employed by any person in the business of banking, beyond the average amount invested in United States bonds; and a tax of one sixth of one per cent, each month upon the average amount of circulation issued by any bank, association, corporation, company, or person, including as circulation all certified checks and all notes and other obligations calculated or intended to circulate or to be used as money, but not including that in the vault of the bank, or redeemed and on deposit for said bank. And a true and accurate return of the amount of circulation, of deposit, and of capital, as aforesaid, and of the amount of notes of persons, State banks, and State banking associations, and of States, cities, towns, or other municipal corporations, paid out by them for the previous month, shall be made and rendered monthly by each of them to the assessor of the district in which such bank, association, corporation, or company may be located, or in which such person has his place of business, with a declaration annexed thereto, verified by the oath or affirmation of such person, or of the president or cashier of such bank, association, corporation, or *company, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And for any refusal or neglect to make or to render such return and pay the tax any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person so in default shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $200, besides the additional penalty and forfeitures in other cases provided by law; and in default of such return the several amounts subject to tax shall be estimated by the assessor or assistant assessor on the best information he can obtain. And in the case of banks with branches each branch shall make a separate return, and the tax shall be assessed on each severally. And so much of the forty-first section of the act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, as imposes a tax on the banks organized under that act, and requires returns to be made to the Treasurer of the United States, be, and is hereby, repealed: *Provided, That the deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions, savings-banks, savings funds, or savings institutions, having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, shall be exempt from tax on so much of their deposits as they have invested in securities of the United States, and on all deposits less than $500 made in the name of any one person; and the returns required to be made by such provident institutions and savings-banks shall be made on the first Monday of January and July of each year, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I demand the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the House refuses to concur in striking out, in what form is the section then presented to the House?

The SPEAKER. It remains as originally reported by the Committee of Ways and Means in the printed bill.

The Clerk commenced the roll-call.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire that the rule may be read which prohibits any gentleman from voting on a question in which he is interested, so that gentlemen here who are directors of banks and owners of bank stock shall not vote—

The SPEAKER. The roll-call cannot be interrupted to read a rule or for any other business.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is not that one of the standing rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. Every member is supposed to understand the rules of the House.

The call of the roll was then completed; and the question was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 71, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Arnell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Blair, Calkins, Cornell, Covode, Delano, Dixon, Briggs, Eckley, Eliot, Ferriss, Garfield, Griswold, Halsey, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Jencks, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Marvin, Mercur, Moorhead, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Peters, Pike, Platts, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Robertson, Sawyer, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Stewart, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James E. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Baker, Barnes, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boies, Boutwell, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Cobb, Coburn, Cullom, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eli, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferry, Getz, Gravely, Grover, Harding, Hawkins, Hinds, Holman, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Judd, Knott, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Logan, Longridge, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Mullins, Niblack, Phelps, Pike, Polster, Raum, Robinson, Roets, Schenck, Scofield, Shanks, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taft, Taylor, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aukon, Ward, Welker, William Williams, and Woodward—71.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, James M. Ashley, Barnum, Beaman, Boyer, Brownell, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Chandler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Dawes, Dodge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Haight, Hill, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Kelley, Kerr, Kitchen, Laffin, Lincoln, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McCullough, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Nicholson, Nunn, Perham, Randall, Ross, Sessy, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taber, John Trimble, Bart Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, John T. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—66.

So the amendment of the Committee of the Whole was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. TROWBRIDGE said: My colleague,

Mr. BEAMAN, is still detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment from the Committee of the Whole was to strike out section one hundred and nine, as follows:

*Sec. 109. And be it further enacted, That every national banking association, State bank, or State banking association, corporation, company, or person engaged in the business of banking, shall pay a tax of ten per cent, on the amount of notes of any person, State bank, or State banking association, or of any State, town, city, or other municipal corporation, used for circulation and paid out by them, and such tax shall be assessed and paid in such manner as shall be prescribed by law, and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue: *Provided, That this section shall not apply to banks, persons, or institutions which are in liquidation and which have not issued any notes for circulation for a period of more than one year.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask for a separate vote on that amendment; and as section one hundred and eight has not been stricken out I hope this will not be.

The question was then taken; and the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was not agreed to.

The last amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was to insert after section one hundred and ten the following:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That in every case where it becomes necessary to ascertain the amount of annual or monthly sales made by any person on whom a special tax is imposed by this act or to ascertain the excess of such sales above a given amount, such amounts and excesses shall be ascertained and returned under such regulations and in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and in any case where the amount of the tax has been increased by this act above the amount before paid by any person in that behalf, such person, except retail dealers, shall be again assessed and pay the amount of such increase from the taking effect of this act; and in any case where the amount of sales or receipts has been understated or underestimated by any person, such person shall be again assessed for such deficiency, and shall be required to pay the same, with any penalty or penalties that may by law have accrued or be chargeable thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the section just adopted be transferred to another portion of the bill, where it properly belongs, immediately after section sixty-five, in relation to special taxes.

No objection was made.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SCHENCK. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PILE. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BROOMALL: The petition of citizens of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, praying for an appropriation to improve St. Mary's river and St. Mary's falls canal.

Also, the petition of Samuel Gardner, jr., asking the extension of a patent.

By Mr. ELIOT: The petition of M. E. Owens, of Oktobeha county, Mississippi, praying for relief from political disabilities.

By Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts: The petition of citizens of Boston interested in the copper and iron mining interest of Lake Superior, for an appropriation to improve the navigation of St. Mary's river and the St. Mary's falls ship-canal.

By Mr. JUDD: Papers in case of James R. Stanley, asking return of commutation money.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of 72 employés in bookbinderies of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, representing that the industry of the country is paralyzed for want of efficient protection against the cheaper labor of foreign countries, and the manufacturing population cannot continue to pay prices for provisions even approaching those now realized by agriculturists while exposed to competition with the Old World under the existing tariff; that much of the distress now prevalent and increasing daily would be relieved by the passage of the tariff bill which failed in the House of Representatives March, 1867; and praying that Congress will resume consideration of that measure, and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

Also, a memorial of 155 citizens and firms of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, engaged in the manufacture of carpets, leather, chemicals, cotton goods, brass, &c., complaining of the want of efficient protection against the cheaper labor and capital of foreign countries, and praying that Congress will resume consideration of the tariff bill which failed in the House March, 1867, and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

By Mr. ROBINSON: The petition of citizens of New York against the proposed tax on low-priced cigars, known as cheroots.

By Mr. STOKES: The petition of Lane & Bartlett, for compensation for cotton used in fortifications at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1862.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 27, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating information in relation to the Tabeguache band of Utah Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART. I hold in my hand a communication from the Second Assistant Postmaster General with reference to a resolution I offered on the 13th instant, calling for information in relation to a contract with Pratt, Arnold, and Walbridge, for carrying the mail on route No. 15703, from Boise City, Idaho, to Humboldt City, Nevada. The whole matter has been adjusted, and I move that the letter be received as an answer to the resolution. There is no occasion for any further response. I move that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid on the table, no objection being made.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOWARD presented the petition of Robert Lebby, M. D., of Charleston, South Carolina, praying a removal of the civil disabilities imposed on him by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition of citizens of Steuben county, New York, praying the passage of the bill granting pension to the soldiers of the war of 1812; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. I present a petition, extensively signed by the merchants of Boston—indeed, I recognize nearly every house engaged in foreign commerce—in which they represent that great injury has been done to our commerce and revenue by the prohibition of the export of distilled spirits, and they request that some legislation be immediately taken to grant the relief needed. I understand that the tax bill, which has already passed the House of Representatives, does not supply the remedy that is asked; and the bill that passed the other day, owing to an amendment made in the Senate, is practically inoperative; indeed, it only applies to a very narrow class of cases. I have seen certain gentlemen who are interested in this matter, and they set forth the great hardship of the existing legislation and the importance of being able to make this export to the coast of Africa, in order to sustain a very important branch of commerce, important on that coast, and which is equally important at home here. A cargo to the coast of Africa has not only New England rum, but various other articles which are contributed by different parts of the country, and all of that commerce is disturbed unless the merchants can have the privilege of this export. I make this statement in order to call the attention of my friend, the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] to the subject when he takes the tax bill under consideration, and I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. YATES. I present the petition of W. W. Thornton, P. W. Barclay, and others, citizens of Cairo, Illinois, praying Congress to pass a general law regulating the construction of bridges over the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, so that they shall not obstruct nor make dangerous the navigation thereof, and remonstrating against railroad bridges across the Mississippi and Ohio rivers with spans of less than five hundred feet. I desire to remark that these petitioners live at the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and are the first business men in that section of the country. They understand the subject about which they talk; and this question of the size and length and span of bridges across the Ohio and Mississippi rivers is becoming one of the utmost importance throughout the Northwest and in the South, in the Gulf States, and the attention of the committee is earnestly requested to the prayer of the petitioners. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the following petitions and resolutions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

Three petitions of citizens of the United States, praying the passage of a law making eight hours a legal day's work in all Government workshops;

Two resolutions of the Mechanics' State Council of California, in favor of the passage of the bill fixing eight hours as a legal day's work; and

A resolution adopted at a meeting of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union No. 4, of Indiana, asking the passage of the bill making eight hours a day's work for Government employés.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1158) for the relief of Commander John L. Davis, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DRAKE. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Oscar Bullus, commodore on the retired list, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to report a bill supplementary to the act to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy, passed March 2, 1867, which will cover his case and that of other officers in like position with himself. A written report accompanies the bill, and I ask that it be printed.

The bill (S. No. 574) supplementary to the act to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy, passed March 2, 1867, was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 869) prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 300) to enable admiralty courts to decree salvage to incorporations formed for wrecking or salvage purposes, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 378) organizing a commission for the examination and decision of claims in the War Department, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom were referred the petitions of grand and petit jurors of the circuit court of the United States for the circuit and district of Massachusetts, praying for additional compensation to the jurors, have instructed me to report them back, and ask to be discharged from their further consideration.

Mr. SUMNER. May I appeal to the Senator in regard to that last matter? I do it because there have been several petitions that have been presented on that subject. I presented some only a week or a fortnight ago, and I think some at an earlier date in the session. The petition that I presented a short time ago was sustained by the recommendations of both the judges, the marshal, and the district attorney; and it did seem to me on its face to present a hardship. I did not see how the jurors could be expected to go there and perform that service when they did not receive a compensation on which they could live at the ordinary hotels. I ask the Senator from Illinois whether the subject was so fully considered by the committee that they cannot be induced to supply any remedy?

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is no new subject before the Committee on the Judiciary. It has been before the committee, I think, ever since I have been a member of it. The Senator from Massachusetts must be aware that it is not the jurors of Massachusetts alone who are to be affected, but any law on this subject involves a change of compensation to all the jurors throughout the United States. In many of the States it is a matter of convenience for gentlemen to be on the jury in the United States courts, especially to those who like to visit the seat of Government. The courts generally meet about the time the Legislatures assemble in the State capitals. In most of the States there is but one place of holding a United States court, and it is considered rather a favor, in many instances, to be summoned on the United States juries. It is probable that the present pay is too small; I think myself it ought to be more than two dollars a day. I think that an inadequate compensation; but the committee thought that it was not advisable at this time to undertake to change the general law on that subject. The same complaint comes from district attorneys and also from the marshals; but the committee have been against any increase of compensation at this time. A year ago we did undertake to recommend an increase of the salaries of the judges, and that prevailed, and I was in hopes that that would be the end of that controversy; but we find even at the present session that some of the judges are still dissatisfied, although their salaries were raised at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Hannah Tyndall, Hannah Lewis, and Susan Phipic, praying that the widows and orphans of seamen, marines, sailors, and others, serving in the Navy of the United States may receive the same benefit as now enjoyed by relatives of soldiers as regards bounty, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 202) for the relief of Captain Phelps Paine, of Illinois, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Segar, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 575) for the relief of Joseph Segar. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLEY. The same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Gibson, for relief for damages done to his farm by United States troops in 1864 and 1865, have had the same under consideration, and have come to a conclusion to report a bill granting relief to some extent; but the petitioner desires that no report should be made, and asks leave, under these circumstances, to withdraw his papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator moves that the committee be discharged, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his papers.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the debate the other day on the proposition to regulate the publication of advertisements in this District, I stated that the Clerk of the House of Representatives was authorized to select, and did select, the two newspapers in which the advertisements were published. The Clerk calls my attention to the fact that in this I not only misunderstood the law, but, perhaps, did injustice to him. I find by reference to the law—and at his request I make the statement—that these papers were selected as the two newspapers in the city of Washington having the largest circulation, as required by law, and he had no part in the selection of these papers except in compliance with the law. I make this statement at his request. I certainly did not wish to do that very excellent officer any injustice.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 576) relating to the district courts of Utah Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 577) to amend an act entitled "An act to exempt certain manufacturers from internal tax, and for other purposes," approved March 31, 1868; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 578) to regulate trade between the United States and the British North American provinces, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. THAYER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 579) to establish a new land district in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM HENRY OTIS.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 279, for the relief of Mr. Otis, of Indiana.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask the Senator from Indiana whether it is likely that this bill will occupy much time in discussion?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think not.

Mr. HOWARD. I am very anxious this morning to call up Senate bill No. 256, relating to the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad.

Mr. CONNESS. I also desire to give notice that I am very anxious to call up a bill this morning.

Mr. HOWARD. I will make no objection to taking up the bill of the Senator from Indiana, if he assures us that it will consume very little time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot make any assurance as to what other gentlemen may think of this bill. The Committee on Claims thought it all right, and made a unanimous report in its favor, and I think it is right. That is all I can say.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 279) for the relief of William Henry Otis, the pending question being on concurring in the amendment read as in Committee of the Whole, to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and in lieu of the words stricken out to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, or cause to be paid, to William Henry Otis, of Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, the sum of $3,000, in full consideration for growing crop, fencing, and fruit trees destroyed upon, and damages done by the United States troops in and to forty-five and a half acres of land belonging to the said William Henry Otis, known as Camp Burnside, lying and being adjacent to the said city of Indianapolis, while said land was occupied by said troops from the year 1861 to the year 1865.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There is a report accompanying the bill, which will make a better explanation than anything I can say, and therefore I call for its reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I beg pardon. I had forgotten that the report was read before. It need not be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no recollection of the report having been read before. There was a statement made about this bill, and at the request of the Senator from Illinois it went over. I should like to hear the report read to know how much it involves.

The Chief Clerk commenced the reading of the report of the Committee on Claims, and after having proceeded for some time,

Mr. CONKLING. If this report is being read, as I believe it is, on my motion, I desire to say that I have looked at the bill, and I see that the amount is reduced from over twenty thousand dollars to $3,000, and as there is some relief in that I do not insist on the further reading of the report. I shall vote against the bill, but inasmuch as about eighteen thousand dollars has been deducted I am willing to waive the reading of the report.

Mr. CAMERON. I should like to know how much we are giving for these damages. What is the sum appropriated?

The CHIEF CLERK. Three thousand dollars.

Mr. HOWARD. The claim was nearly thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. CAMERON. And he got over four thousand dollars rent, I understand.

Mr. HOWARD. The authorities paid him about four thousand dollars for rent.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not see that we ought to pay any more.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the tax bill be taken up, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance have already been considering the bill while it was under consideration in the House. I ask leave of the Senate for the members of the Committee on Finance to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

Leave was granted.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO.

Mr. YATES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 11.

Mr. CONNESS. What is that?

Mr. YATES. The Colorado bill. We can get a vote upon it now, I think.

Mr. CONNESS. It will be impossible to dispose of that now.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. N. 11) to admit the State of Colorado into the Union, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories, to add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the acting Governor of the Territory of Colorado, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, by proclamation, to call a general election to choose members of the State Legislature and State officers to fill the places of all whose terms of office shall have expired under said constitution. Said election shall be held, and the legal voters registered under the laws now in force in said Territory. The time for holding said election shall be fixed not more than ninety days after the passage of this act, and the time for the meeting of the Legislature at the capital of the Territory and the installation of the State officers shall be fixed not more than thirty days after said election, by said proclamation. All the officers so elected shall continue in office until the commencement of the next constitutional term of their offices respectively; Provided, That before being admitted to representation in Congress, the Legislature so elected and convened shall ratify the amendment to the Constitution of the United States known as the fourteenth article; and also the fundamental conditions herein imposed. And in case said Legislature shall refuse to ratify said amendment and said conditions, this act shall be null and void.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a substitute, which I ask to have read. I will state that my amendment consists of a proposition to pass an enabling act to authorize the Territories of Montana and Colorado to form constitutions and State governments preparatory to their admission as States into the Union.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the amendment of the Committee being to perfect the original bill is first in order. After that the substitute can be proposed. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will not consent to amend the amendment so as to provide that this act shall be void either in case the Legislature refuses to ratify the amendment, or in case the Legislature refuses to be admitted or to vote for admission; so as to take the sense of this Legislature that is to be elected upon the question of admission.

Mr. SUMNER. I will suggest to my friend to put that in legislative shape.

Mr. HOWE. I move to insert after the word "conditions," in the last line of the amendment, the words "or shall decide against being admitted into the Union;" so that the clause will read:

And in case said Legislature shall refuse to ratify said amendment and said conditions, or shall decide against being admitted into the Union, this act shall be null and void.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to propose an amendment, to come in at the end of the fourth section reported by the committee, following immediately, I suppose, the amendment just made. That came in at the end of the fourth section.

Mr. HOWE. Not at the end, but near the end.

Mr. FERRY. I propose to insert at the end of the fourth section reported by the committee the following:

And the said Legislature shall proceed according to law to the election of Senators in Congress, if said Legislature shall decide in favor of the admission of said State.

Mr. RAMSEY. That is all right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. DAVIS. I will offer an amendment to the amendment. After the word "constitution," at the end of the sixth line, I move to insert the words "and which Legislature shall on assembling proceed to choose two Senators to the Congress of the United States."

Mr. YATES. That is already provided for by an amendment adopted a few minutes ago.

Mr. DAVIS. It must have been adopted while I was out. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. As I have not been able to see this amendment as it stands, I wish to inquire of the honorable Senator having the measure in charge whether there is any provision, in case the amendment and bill be adopted, by which the people are to be enabled to vote upon the constitution or to amend it if they wish?

Mr. YATES. If the Senator will examine the last section—section four—he will see that it is the duty of the Governor of the Territory by proclamation to call a general election of members of the State Legislature and State officers, and this Legislature, when chosen, is to decide the question whether the State shall be admitted upon the constitution heretofore adopted, and also upon the question of ratifying the constitutional amendment and the conditions attached to this bill. If they decide in favor of the constitutional amendment and those conditions they come in, and if not, this act is null and void.

Mr. CONKLING. It seems, then, Mr. President, that no provision is made for the adoption or rejection of this constitution, or its amendment if the people see fit to amend it. I am aware that there might be a good practical objection, if the bill were in such form as to provide for the admission without the holding of a popular election, to requiring a vote upon the constitution; but I submit to the honorable Senator, as the bill already requires a popular election to choose a Legislature, what is the objection to inserting a provision that at that same election the people shall agree or disagree to this constitution? I know there is a conflict of understanding as to what has happened in the Territory touching the ratification of the constitution. It is asserted on the one hand that a vote was given recently which constructively affirmed in some way the wish of the majority to adopt this constitution and be admitted under it, but that is stoutly denied on the other side. Now, I suggest that to avoid all difficulty, as there is to be an election by the people preceding the admission, the constitution itself ought to be submitted at that election. Why not? It will make no added trouble; and I inquire of the Senator whether any objection occurs to him to submitting the constitution to the popular vote.

Mr. YATES. I will state to the Senator that there seems to be no objection in the Territory on the part of any person or any party to the constitution. The only question is whether the Territory should be admitted as a State. There was some objection on the part of some persons to the members-elect to the Senate taking their seats, but that objection is now obviated by the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Connecticut. There is no sort of objection to the constitution, and I believe the Senator himself would agree to it. In all the communications before the committee, and in the various petitions and memorials, there has been no objection whatever to the constitution. By the bill as we have now amended it the whole question is submitted to the Legislature, and they can come in or not as they see proper, adopting the conditions proposed and the constitutional amendment. That is the sum and substance of the amendment we propose.

Mr. CONKLING. Conceding the force of what the Senator says, I beg to make a suggestion to him. I have read this constitution; I have no fault to find with it on its face. It is true, however, that a constitution was formed regularly in the Territory of Colorado, which constitution was rejected by the people. In saying this I state what is a historical fact. A constitution was framed in the Territory by a regularly constituted authority for that purpose, and that constitution was rejected by the popular vote of the Territory. Then another constitution, to wit: this constitution was framed irregularly by a convention informal, if you please—I do not wish to apply too strong a word—a convention not assembled in accordance with the usage and the understanding applicable to such things. Now, the Senator says that nobody in the Territory objects to it. That is a mixed question, a question composed of a great many uncertain elements. All sorts of representations have been made as to the particular questions upon which votes were taken and the particular understandings which prevailed during those elections. I submit to the Senate that if this constitution is satisfactory to the people of the Territory of all parties, and if a popular election is to be held with a view to choosing a Legislature that is to select Senators and to adopt fundamental compacts, it would be very harmless, and I think wise, to include in that election a vote on the constitution. It would be a mere pro forma vote, as the Senator supposes; but considering the inception of this constitution, considering the want of regularity in its origin, I think it would round out this proceeding and make it much more complete to allow the popular vote to be taken upon the constitution than to assume that it is satisfactory to the people of the Territory.

As I have said, I would not press the suggestion if it involved the holding of an election for that purpose alone; nor should I be induced to do it if it involved delay; but I beg Senators again to remember that it involves neither. It makes no added trouble. It is nothing but the provision of an additional ballot-box, at which the same electors shall deposit their votes upon this question as well as upon the others, which, at the election already provided for, are to be submitted.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to say to the Senator from New York that I do not think the amendment of the committee as it is printed provides for a general election. It provides only for an election to fill up vacancies.

Mr. FERRY. But as some of them are State officers it will require a general election.

Mr. CAMERON. It may have been gotten up for that purpose, but if so, it does not meet the object. The provision is:

That it shall be the duty of the acting Governor of the Territory of Colorado as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, by proclamation, to call a general election to choose members of the State Legislature and State officers to fill the places of all whose terms of office shall have expired under said constitution.

I propose to strike out the words "to fill the places of all whose terms of office shall have expired," and then it will be a general election in truth and in fact. It is not now. Under the clause as it stands you would bring together the members of the Legislature that were elected three years ago, if they could be found. Of course some of them will be gone. Some are living in distant States probably. But they will be brought together for a special purpose under this act. Surely the chairman of the Committee on Territories did not intend to pass a section which would have one meaning to himself and one to the public. Therefore I take it for granted that he will agree with me in striking out the words I have indicated.

Mr. YATES. I see no objection to that.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I shall take but a moment in what I have to say, and what I have to say on this subject will be directly in reply to the Senator from New York. This constitution was adopted in Colorado in the manner prescribed by itself; and if this State be admitted it will have been declared to be the fundamental law there for some time past. If the position of the Senator from New York is sustained we are not here admitting a State, but we are passing an enabling act providing that if they will make a constitution or readopt this they can come in. I submit to the Senator that that is trifling with the interests of the people of Colorado. It is not worth while every time they have a general election in that State, this year or any other year, to require them to readopt their constitution. It is adopted.

We have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, so as to provide for a general election of all the State officers and members of the Legislature. But I submit that when this State has been hanging here for two years it comes with an ill grace from the friends of this measure now to insist that the constitution shall be referred back to the people. It seems to me entirely useless, and it is applying a rule to the admission of Colorado that has been applied to no other State which has been admitted into this Union, that the people shall readopt their constitution.

Mr. WILSON. I believe one o'clock has arrived.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly before the Senate, being the bill (S. No. 529) establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. If the chairman of the Committee on Territories thinks he can get a vote in a few minutes on the Colorado bill, I will allow the regular order to be passed by informally for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday will be passed over informally, there being no objection.

Mr. TIPTON. I wish to say in regard to the question raised by the Senator from New York, that indirectly, and indeed for all practical purposes directly, the question of the constitution will be involved in any vote that shall be taken for the election of members of the Legislature. If there are two opinions in the State upon that question those who are in favor of admission with this constitution will vote for members of the Legislature to carry out that view. If there is a party in Colorado opposed to the constitution they will vote for members of the Legislature to carry out their views. Therefore the question in regard to the constitution will be sufficiently brought before the people by any vote which shall be taken in Colorado for the election of members of the Legislature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CAMERON. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Territories to accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be accepted without a vote of the Senate.

Mr. YATES. I make no objection to it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not understand precisely how the question is now before the Senate. Is it on the amendment of the committee as amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I beg to submit to the chairman of the committee this amendment, to be inserted after the word "Territory," in the eighth line:

And at said election there shall be submitted the question of the ratification of the constitution proposed by said Territory.

The effect of the amendment will be simply to provide that there shall be an additional ballot-box, into which anybody opposed to this constitution may put his ballot, and those in favor of it may put theirs.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NYE] says that I am turning this bill to admit a State into an enabling act. Why, sir, the other day I remember that the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. POMEROY,] when this bill came up, was for having it passed in the morning hour at once, because, he said, it was now nothing but an enabling act; it was not an act to admit a State. I supposed that was the view; that the purpose was to remit the question to the vote of the people. If that is not the view, I submit to the Senator why should we displace the Senators who have been elected; why provide for the election of two new Senators; why provide for displacing the Legislature? We have just stricken out the clause confining the election to the filling of vacancies, so as to provide for a new organization, an election de novo. That all goes, I submit, on the theory that this is an enabling act in substance, and assumes that the people are to vote upon the question.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. If I understand the bill, the only difference between it and the bill as the Senator would have it is that as the bill stands the decision of the State is to be taken from the action of a Legislature chosen for the express purpose of deciding this question, passing upon the constitution, and saying whether they will be admitted under it or not; and as he would have the bill it would be a direct vote of the people. That would be, perhaps, the most convenient, but the Legislature is required to be convened for another purpose, and I think it would be safe enough to take the decision of the Legislature on the question.

Mr. CONKLING. Will my honorable friend point out to me the language of the bill upon which he relies, which says that the Legislature shall pass upon that question?

Mr. HOWE. The amendment I had incorporated, which provides that if the Legislature decides against the admission the act shall be void.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear that amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment referred to was to insert after the word "conditions," in the twenty-third line, the words "or shall decide against being admitted into the Union;" so as to make the clause read:

And in case said Legislature shall refuse to ratify said amendment and said condition, or shall decide against being admitted into the Union, this act shall be null and void.

Mr. CONKLING. I have two suggestions to make in answer to the Senator from Wisconsin. In the first place, it seems to me it is a novelty and an innovation to commit to a Legislature, and to withdraw from the people, the province of passing upon the ratification of a constitution. I think that of itself would be ground broad enough to base my amendment upon.

Mr. NYE. Let me ask the Senator from New York a question. Is it not a novel thing, after a State has adopted a constitution, to call upon them to readopt it, directly or indirectly? I submit that it has never been prescribed by any other State.

Mr. CONKLING. No, Mr. President, I answer the Senator. I think it is not an unusual thing in this case to do precisely what he suggests. I did not intend to go into this debate at any length; but I can give the Senator many reasons why it is not only not unusual, but a very important thing. In the first place, there is a great deal of controversy as to how this constitution was adopted. It is entirely clear that it was irregular in its inception. The Senator and I do not differ about that. That in itself is enough to distinguish it from ordinary cases.

Mr. NYE. I should like to ask the Senator what irregularity there was about it.

Mr. CONKLING. The irregularity was that it had its origin in a body which had no authority whatever in the ordinary mode to propose a constitution. I will not say, as my honorable friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] did the other day, that it was proposed by a mob; because, although that is a good word, it is a word of various definitions. It was not proposed by a mob in the sense of a turbulent assembly, but it was proposed by an assemblage of men who voluntarily assembled, who assembled of their own motion, in other words, and that warrants me in saying that it was irregular. There can be no doubt about that. But, to go a little further, let me answer the Senator by asking him a question. If this is the ordinary case of a constitution ratified, why is it that we are passing such an act as this? Why do we propose that Senators shall be elected afresh, when this so-called State has elected Senators already? Why do we propose that another Legislature shall be elected, and that we shall submit it to that Legislature, as the Senator from Wisconsin proposes in his amendment?

Mr. NYE. I should like to answer the Senator right there. It is because just such technical objections as the Senator from New York is now urging have kept these people out for more than two years. When this measure was up before my honorable friend on my left [Mr. SUMNER] would not go for it because the word "white" was in the constitution, and away it went back to Colorado to be submitted to the Legislature to strike that out; and now that that is stricken out—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to ask my friend from Nevada if he was for passing it with the word "white" in it either? Is that the style of constitution that he approves of?

Mr. NYE. If the honorable Senator from Vermont has ever done me the honor to read the remarks I made on that occasion his answer will be found there. I suppose that I am as orthodox on that question as the honorable Senator from Vermont; but at that time there were not half a dozen black people there, and the enabling act did not require such a provision, and they had complied with the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The enabling act did require it.

Mr. NYE. The enabling act did not require it, if my recollection is correct.

Mr. SUMNER. The enabling act requires the constitution to be republican.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It required it to be based on the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. NYE. This is the third time that I have attempted to get a word in edgewise in relation to this bill; and as often as I do there are at least three on me at once to choke me down. I rose for the purpose of answering the Senator from New York, who appealed to me to know why it was we were sending this back. I answer, it is because these technical objections, such as he now raises, have been urged against this bill in every form and in every stage. Now, sir, I desire to repeat what I said the other day: I care not how a constitution is made so be it that the people of a State ratify it, the Senator and everybody else is estopped from calling it irregular. The moment that the people ratify the proceedings of any body of men and adopt it as their constitution the hour for irregularity is past; it is the voice of the people. Michigan was admitted in the same way.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish now to cite against the Senator the Senator himself. He says this act is here because, for three years just such objections as I now make have prevailed in the two Houses of Congress. Then I cite against him the action of Congress for the last three years to validate the objections I make. I know they have prevailed for three years; and I am free to say I hope they will prevail for three years longer unless they are removed. It is a very easy thing, in phrase, to belittle an objection by calling it technical. It is very easy to baptize an objection or an argument technical; but that does not change its character. Now, let me submit to the Senator from Nevada the question whether these are technical objections. In the first place is the origin of this constitution as I have suggested it to him? In the next place is the votes which have been given pro and con. In the Territory since—I do not go into them, because we should differ as to what they meant and how they are to be interpreted. In the next place is the fact that Congress has changed this constitution since it was adopted, or since it was argued that it was adopted by anybody, changed it materially and essentially, and now propose conditions with regard to it. Why, sir, these are not technical objections. They are objections which go to the essence of the constitution itself, and they go to prove just as much the propriety of submitting it to the popular vote, as they do of submitting it to the Legislature.

There is another suggestion I wish to make to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] in answer to the suggestion he made to me. By his amendment the Legislature is confined simply to the question whether they are in favor of coming in at this time under this constitution or not. That is not the question that I propose to submit to the people at all. The people might be in favor of coming in, but they might disapprove of this constitution, and vote it down, and take steps to have another constitution with which they would be content; whereas, under the provision of the Senator from Wisconsin, they are not remitted to any remedy. If the Legislature say, "We do not choose to come in under this constitution," what then? That is the only question upon which they have passed. But to the people I propose to submit the simple question of the constitution itself, divested of the question whether they wish to come in or to remain out. It is a very different question. Therefore, as the bill stands, we propose, in the first place, to commit to the Legislature a question which I submit peculiarly and universally in practice and in philosophy belongs to the people themselves; and then, in the second place, we propose to submit that question in such a form that the Legislature is not to pass upon the constitution independently, but simply to pass upon the question whether at this time, and under this constitution, and upon these terms, they are in favor of coming into the Union or not.

Now, Mr. President, in the face of these objections, I cannot hear so far any argument whatever against this suggestion. Confessedly, the objection made by the Senator from Connecticut is removed. Here is to be an election generally, so general that everything in that State is to depend upon it, including the admission of the State and the election of Senators as well as of the officers of the State. Thus a full vote is to be brought out; and now the objection is to allowing the inspectors of election to provide an additional box in which the electors may cast their votes upon this changed and modified constitution.

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to obtain some information from the honorable Senator from New York, if he has no objection. He proposes that in the election contemplated in the bill the electors of the Territory shall pass directly upon the question of ratifying the present Constitution. My first question is, whether it is not an ascertained fact that the majority of the people of that Territory have already passed in the affirmative upon that question?

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; I answer the Senator just there, if he will allow me.

Mr. HOWARD. If the majority of the people have so voted, what good is likely to result from the resubmission of the same question to the people of the Territory? Was there any fraud in the first ratification? Was there any just ground of complaint in regard to it? And if there was not, why repeat the same ceremony?

Mr. CONKLING. Now, Mr. President, I deny both propositions submitted by the Senator. Why? He asks me, in the first place, is it not true that this constitution, as an ascertained fact, has been approved by the people? I say no, sir. And for the reason, among others, that the constitution is changed, essentially changed, by the propositions of this bill. Therefore, the people have never passed, and have never had the opportunity to pass, upon the question. I think that is sufficient to dispose of that.

Mr. HOWARD. I have no reference to the terms and conditions contained in this bill which is now before us. I do not regard them as a part of the Constitution about which I made the inquiry. I mean the instrument that was drawn up by the convention, regular or irregular, which was afterward submitted as an instrument to be known as the fundamental law or the constitution of this State to the people of the Territory. Was not that instrument adopted by a majority of the electors?

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; that was not adopted by a majority of the electors. Now, I beg to tell the Senator why I make that reply that may sound rather bold to him. We are told that there are seventy-five thousand people in this Territory. That is argued strenuously and insisted upon. There were only six thousand people who cast a vote pro or con. on this constitution. Now, take the ratio of Vermont, where I believe the voters are in the smallest proportion to the whole population; and what proportion of the electors voted upon this constitution, I ask the honorable Senator? Take the ratio as we know it exists in the new Territories, and particularly in the mining Territories, where voters, adult males, will average one to three, and if there are seventy-five thousand people there, or sixty thousand, or fifty thousand, I ask the Senator where he supposes a majority of the electors were, when these six thousand were voting pro and con. on this constitution? One of the difficult things in this case, one of the troubles to get over, is the fact that these votes have been so small, diminished incessantly for the last four or five years. In 1861, I think was the year, nine thousand six hundred votes were cast; and from that time the vote has decreased, never reaching ten thousand since but once, and then it fell short of the vote cast six years ago. That is a fact which we cannot wink so hard as not to see. It appears on the papers and is conceded on both sides; and therefore I say to the Senator, when he appeals to this vote of six thousand on the constitution he starts a very ugly question, which runs into matters of fact about which there is a controversy. That controversy I want to cure and put an end to by allowing the people now to pass upon their constitution.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will allow me—I do not wish to interrupt him or take up his time—the result of the election to which he refers is stated in a certificate which I hold in my hand, signed by the secretary of the Territory, the auditor of the Territory, and the treasurer of the Territory. For the constitution there were three thousand and twenty-five votes; against it, two thousand eight hundred and seventy; majority in favor of the constitution, one hundred and fifty-five. Now, the question which I put to the honorable Senator is this: whether there was any ground to complain that there was any unfairness in that election; whether all the electors had not a fair opportunity to go to the polls and express their opinions by their votes?

Mr. EDMUNDS. They were under no obligation to do so.

Mr. HOWARD. That does not answer the question. Nor has there ever been any case in which the elector was under an obligation to go to the polls. The act of voting is a voluntary act. It is the presumption of law. I need hardly say this to the honorable Senator from New York, that those who stay away from an election are held to acquiesce in the result of the election, and to have voted with the majority. This is the principle upon which we acted in regard to Alabama. It is the principle of the common law in reference to corporate elections, whether municipal or private, as the honorable Senator very well knows. Now, why make an objection upon the ground that a portion of the electors stayed away from the polls? They had a right to stay away from the polls.

Mr. CONKLING. With great respect to the honorable Senator, I deny entirely his proposition. As wide as is the East from the West, so broad is the distinction between the case of Alabama and those other cases and this. Why? The elections held in the southern States were under acts of Congress, confessedly under the authority of law; and the Senator well says that but for special legislation to the contrary, those who absented themselves would be held to consent to the acts of those who attended the polls. What is the case here? Was there an election at which any man was bound to attend or else be in default? Not at all; but men who had no right to frame a constitution assumed to do it, and men who had no right to submit it to the people for their ratification assumed to do that; and therefore no obligation rested upon any human being in that Territory to go to the polls upon pain of being held in default if he did not go.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They did go when the constitution was submitted to them under the law, and voted it down.

Mr. CONKLING. And furthermore, as my friend reminds me, when the constitution was submitted under the law, they went to the polls and voted it down, and the only time when they did not vote it down was when it was submitted without authority of law and without any obligation resting upon a single elector to go to the polls, or to have anything taken against him if he refused to go.

Now, Mr. President, to pursue this for one moment, and only a moment—

Mr. YATES. Let us have a vote.

Mr. CONKLING. I shall be through in a moment, although I can tell the Senator that I do not mean to allow this bill to pass in a snatch, for one, if I can help it. When we are considering it, we may as well make it right. There has been considerable trouble about it, and while we are upon it we may as well have it in the best form that we can get it.

The Senator from Michigan asked me what good would come from a second vote. Might I not retort upon him, what harm is to come, when an election is to be held and all the people are to attend to it, from having a ballot-box in which ballots on this point are to be put? If nobody is against this constitution, it is a mere pro forma election; but if there be all these clouds hanging over it, then I submit to him it will be of great use to have the thing not only "technically" right, to borrow the expression of the Senator from Nevada, but right in fairness and in fact, as all conceive.

Now, let us look for a moment at the votes cast in this Territory and see whether I am right in what I stated. In 1861 there were nine thousand five hundred and ninety-seven votes cast. In 1862 there were only eight thousand seven hundred and twenty-one votes cast. In 1864, falling still lower, there were seven thousand four hundred and seventy-six votes cast; and when you come to 1866 there were only six thousand nine hundred and ninety-six votes cast; thus, as I say, continually falling off until we get down to 1866; but in 1867 there were nine thousand three hundred and forty-five votes cast.

Mr. President, upon a record like that, and upon an allegation that this Territory has population enough to entitle it to a Representative in Congress—seventy-five or eighty or one hundred thousand—does any Senator wish unnecessarily to put the admission of this State upon a foundation so precarious and so narrow as is stated by those six thousand votes only cast upon the question of this constitution, pro and con.? I admit if, as in the case of Nebraska, it could be said that it was an inclement season of the year, the ground covered with snow, and it would be a great hardship to impose an election upon the people, there would be great force in the objection to doing it; but how can we excuse ourselves; and how, I ask the Senator from Michigan, will the record look, showing that we have provided for an election, showing that we have committed to that election every question but this, and yet have refused, in the face of the hundreds of remonstrances that come here from the Territory, to allow the people once the opportunity, when they are to be present at the election, to cast their ballots upon this question also, as well as upon the others?

My friend from Nebraska [Mr. TRAYER] asks me if I did not mean Alabama in what I said about the inclement season of the year. No, sir; I meant Nebraska. If he will traverse the debate in reference to his own State he will find that Senators said, "Why ask them to vote again? Why impose an election upon them? It is an inclement season of the year, and it will be a great hardship. This is the only necessity for an election; and you ought to commit it to the Legislature." I am distinguishing this case from the case of the State of the honorable Senator by saying that this is no inclement season of the year; and whether so or not we provide for an election; so that there is to be not the feather's weight of hardship, or of expense, or trouble added by providing that that election shall determine also the validity or the rejection of this constitution. That is my point; and I say again, and I think the Senator who has this bill in charge does not disagree with me essentially, that there being no objection to it except one which perhaps might be called sentimental—I mean one residing in sentiment, in the feeling suggested by the honorable Senator from Nevada, that it was putting upon the State in theory an extra condition to which others had not been subjected; I mean sentimental only in that sense—there being no objection to it, I say, except one of feeling in this regard, I submit that it will look very suspicious when this record is made up, that in the face of all these objections, we have submitted every question to the people except this vital question, which throughout has been contested, and which belongs to them, and which in theory we have no right to commit to the Legislature, nor do we commit to the Legislature by the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, if the majority of the people in the Territory of Colorado are believed to be in favor of this constitution, I should like to know from the friends of this measure what reasonable objection there can be to submitting it at this election that is provided for? It takes no more time; it does not put the thing off any further; and if they are sure of the result, that the people will vote for this constitution, I ask what objection there is to it? If I occupied the position that some Senators do here, and had been urging this movement, and felt confident that a majority of the people of the Territory were in favor of this constitution, I should certainly be in favor of submitting the question at the election that we are now providing for. There can be no objection to submitting it except the existence of a doubt as to what the wish of the majority of the people of Colorado is. That is the only objection there can be that I can possibly see, the existence of a doubt as to how they will vote on this constitution.

Mr. President, it is not material to the question how this constitution was first framed. It may have been done by an enabling act, or without it. That is not material. It may have been done by a mob, and that may not be important. The important question is whether, after it was framed, it was fairly submitted to the people and fairly ratified. We know that the constitution of California was formed by a convention that was not called together in pursuance of an act of Congress. Such was the case, I believe, in Michigan, and perhaps in other States. It makes no difference how the constitution is formed; but the material question is whether it has been subsequently ratified by a majority of the people. If it has, that makes it all right.

Now, sir, there is one question that I want to submit, and I think there is something in it. This constitution was ratified three years ago. We are told by the friends of the admission of Colorado that there has been a large immigration to that Territory since. The people who have gone there since have had no opportunity of expressing themselves on the question. Three years is a long time in the life of a Territory.

Mr. NYE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. Has anybody who has gone to the State of Indiana since the adoption of the constitution of that State had the privilege of expressing his sentiments on the question of that constitution?

Mr. MORTON. I do not see that that bears any relevancy to this question. When a constitution is once formed and goes into operation it continues in operation in the State until it shall have been properly changed. But, sir, it is proposed now to force upon this State a constitution ratified, it is said, three years ago, which is a long time in the life of a Territory; and for the purpose of procuring the admission of Colorado we are told that from forty to fifty thousand people have gone there in the last three years; the Territory is growing rapidly in population; and yet this large body of people who have gone there since, have had no opportunity of expressing themselves on this question. There would be propriety from this consideration alone, if there were no other, in again submitting it. If the constitution had got every vote in Colorado in 1865, and a large population has gone there since, it ought to be submitted again in all propriety. Who can deny it? I again ask my friend from Nevada the question, if there is any doubt about a majority of the people being in favor of this constitution why do you hesitate a moment as to submitting it to the people? It makes no more delay than you are already proposing to make.

There is another consideration about this vote. I have the aggregate vote both for and against this constitution in 1865, and I believe it is fifty-eight hundred and ninety-five. How many votes were cast for it in 1865? I am told the majority for the constitution is only three hundred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One hundred and fifty-five is the exact number.

Mr. MORTON. One hundred and fifty-five; so that the constitution got less than three thousand votes in 1865. Think of it, sir; a constitution being fixed upon a Territory by less than three thousand votes, a fundamental law, especially when we are told that such a large population has gone in there since that time!

I have not a particle of feeling on this subject. I should like to admit Colorado, if she were ready for it; and if the circumstances are proper I prefer to do it. I am not enlisted on either side of this question. But, sir, if things are right, I ask my friend what objection there is to submitting this constitution again, especially when it makes no more delay than you are already providing for by holding another election? Think of it; this constitution, having less than three thousand votes, is now to be imposed upon a Territory which, it is said, contains a population of from seventy-five to one hundred thousand. It does not look well. It looks as if there was something weak about this transaction in some quarter, and it could not stand the test of another election.

Now, Mr. President, one word in regard to submitting these questions to the Legislature. We are told that if the people do not want this constitution they will elect members of the Legislature who are unfavorable to it. Is not that a very imperfect way of submitting a question of this kind? There are a thousand considerations that enter into the choice of members of the Legislature, and it is not a fair way of submitting the question. We recognize the great principle that when it comes to the forming of a fundamental law it is not to be submitted to a Legislature, and the question is not to be determined by selecting members of the Legislature, but it is to be determined by submitting it to the people themselves.

Let us, then, submit this constitution to all the people of Colorado. Gentlemen say a large addition has been made to the population of that Territory in three years. Three years in a Territory, as I before remarked, are equal, perhaps, to twenty-five years in a State. It was so in California and other Territories; and if gentlemen are right in their statement, the past three years have made a greater change in the ratio of population in Colorado than the next fifteen years will. If this constitution is the choice of the people, they will say so when the election is held that you already provide for.

Besides, Mr. President, notwithstanding the vote on the Arkansas bill, I must be allowed to say that in my opinion the Legislature of a State is not the proper body to ratify and establish fundamental conditions. It is against the theory and the practice in the formation of State governments. In the older States, and in nearly all the new States, we have required the fundamental law of the State to be submitted to the people and not to a Legislature. Here you make important changes in the constitution of Colorado, changes that I agree to, that I am in favor of; but it ceases to be the same instrument, and the people have just as much right in their primary capacity to pass on those changes as upon any provision in the constitution. Now, when that is so easy, when it takes no more time than what you already provide for by this bill, as the bill provides for a general election, why not submit this constitution, together with these fundamental conditions, to the people? There can be but one reason, in my judgment, for not doing it; and that is the expectation that it will be voted down.

Mr. YATES. I hardly understand the last remark of the Senator who has just taken his seat. I can assure that Senator that so far as the committee were concerned the question whether the constitution will be voted up or voted down was not taken into consideration; and I am sure that not one member of the committee acted upon any such ground in the decision to which they came.

A plain statement of facts will sometimes do away with a great deal of mystery and remove apparent difficulties. Congress passed an enabling act in March, 1864. If there was any question as to the population of Colorado it was for Congress to determine it at that time. Whether there was population sufficient in Colorado to justify her admission as a State into the Union was a question decided by Congress at the time that enabling act was passed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Allow me to make one suggestion to the Senator in regard to the point he is now on. The information that the Senate then had, as is shown by the debates, was the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Territories at that time, the distinguished Senator now presiding over this body; and as I now recollect, the statement was that the population was then about sixty thousand, and was so rapidly increasing in that Territory that it would very soon be above one hundred thousand. That is my recollection of the statement, and I think the debates will show it. When this bill came up two years ago that same distinguished Senator said to the Senate that he was misinformed in regard to the population; that it was not near as large as he had supposed, and that it had not increased as the evidences before the committee at that time had induced him to believe it would increase.

Mr. YATES. As I said, that question was passed upon by Congress in the passage of the enabling act in March, 1864. It is true that when submitted to the people the constitution formed by the convention called under that act was rejected, and rejected by a very small majority, rejected by a party vote. I believe the facts will bear me out in that statement. The testimony before the committee—and we have received several petitions on the subject, and a memorial from the territorial Legislature—is that after this rejection all parties came to the conclusion that it would be better to have a State organization, and the chairman of the executive committees of the respective political parties agreed to publish a call for a convention. That convention was held, and adopted a constitution. That constitution thus formed was submitted to the people without any opposition from any quarter whatever, and it was ratified by the popular vote.

This is a plain statement of the facts of the case, and is a complete answer to the argument both of the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from New York, and I ask now what sense or propriety there is in having this constitution submitted for the third time to the people of the Territory, especially when, I repeat, not one single objection from any quarter whatever has come from the Territory against the constitution itself. Why, then, require the people to decide upon that question again? That question is not in issue, I repeat. There were some minor questions, and there was some party opposition, and there was some personal opposition to the Senators who were elected taking their seats; but all difficulty on these points is removed by the amendments we have made; and I think that if we now leave it to the people there through their Legislature to decide in effect whether they will be admitted as a State into the Union upon the constitution as adopted, and ratify the constitutional amendment, and accept the conditions here provided, there can be nothing whatever unfair in it.

The Senator from Indiana makes a grave charge against the adoption of this constitution, that there were only six thousand votes polled, when it is a matter of fact, and a matter of record as, Senators will see, if they will examine the debates which have preceded this debate on this very question, that Kansas was admitted into the Union when only forty-six hundred votes were polled in favor of her constitution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the general practice?

Mr. YATES. I do not say it is a good general practice; but I do not see why the Senators from the eastern States now, when we propose to admit another Territory as a State into the Union, should adopt a step-mother policy which they did not adopt in the case of Kansas and other Territories.

Mr. MORTON. Allow me to ask my friend from Illinois what objection there is to taking the vote of the people on the constitution at the same time that they are to elect a Legislature? It costs nothing.

Mr. YATES. I will state candidly that I have no sort of objection individually to that proposition; but the committee cannot see the propriety of having the constitution for the third time submitted to the people. The question was not made before the committee; but some of the committee here now cannot see the propriety of having this constitution again submitted to the people. They think it an unnecessary act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why should it be submitted to the Legislature again, if not to the people?

Mr. YATES. That question was decided by the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. Why submit it to the Legislature?

Mr. YATES. That is not the question now. The only census we have recourse to with regard to the population in Colorado is one that was taken in 1860, and according to that census there were in that Territory at that time eighteen thousand male adult inhabitants over the age of twenty-one years. When Vermont was admitted into the Union as a State she had a population of fifty-five thousand; and will any one pretend to say that Vermont at that time contained eighteen thousand adult voters?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; I will.

Mr. YATES. The Senator answers that he will. We have his statement for the fact, but I doubt it. If the population was only fifty-five thousand I doubt whether there were eighteen thousand adult voters in that State. It would not be according to the laws of population, to say the least. Now, in relation to the vote which has been polled in Colorado, let me say that there were nearly ten thousand votes polled in the election of 1867. If we allow a population of only five persons to each voter this would show a population of nearly fifty thousand in Colorado.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What did my friend say just now was the population of Vermont when she was admitted into the Union?

Mr. YATES. Fifty-five thousand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was eighty-five thousand four hundred and sixteen by the census of 1790, one year before she was admitted.

Mr. YATES. If we suppose there is a population of five persons to each voter, the population of Colorado in 1867 was fifty thousand. That is not quite so large a population as Ohio had when she was admitted, but larger than Illinois, and much larger than many other States had when they were admitted into the Union. But the response is that these ten thousand voters did not represent fifty thousand people, because most of the emigrants to that Territory were male adults. My answer to that is that in these far-off Territories it is often the case that one fifth of the people do not go to the polls. Especially in mining regions, where there is great interest and excitement, and where the success of an important enterprise depends upon a day's time, men will not throw down their implements which they are using in their business and go to the polls at remote distances; and we have it from the statements of persons there, from the Senator from Nevada, who was in Colorado at the time, that there was a population of at least fifty thousand there then.

But, Mr. President, I have forbore to trouble the Senate, and I shall not now pursue my remarks on this bill, for I wish to obtain a vote upon it. I shall not personally make any strong opposition to the amendment which is suggested; but I have had no conference with the committee on the question, and I see no propriety in it, except to load the bill with useless lumber and to submit to the people a question which has been already decided, and upon which there is now no controversy or difference of opinion among them. I hope, therefore, that as all questions now are decided in the Territory, and the people are almost universally anxious for admission as a State into the Union, the Senate will give us a vote and allow us at once to dispose of the matter. I wish also to remark, that unless the bill is passed now it may fail for want of time in the other House.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois whether I am correct in supposing that he has accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. YATES. That has been decided.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. With the acquiescence of the committee?

Mr. YATES. Not with the acquiescence of the committee, but the committee did not object to it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It seems to me that that settles this whole question. It is an amendment not resisted by the committee, which makes this a mere enabling act, and not an act to admit a State. This State, by that amendment, is to have further action before it can be admitted. It is to exercise its will whether it will come in or not. That is to be exercised by the Legislature, according to the amendment. Then the only question submitted to the Senate is, which is the proper mode for a State to exercise its will in adopting a constitution, by its Legislature or by the people.

Mr. YATES. Will the Senator allow me to say that the first section of the bill declares that "the constitutional State government the people of Colorado have formed be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed;" so that constitution is accepted when these conditions are complied with by the Legislature.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Subject, however, to the exercise of the will of the State through the Legislature according to the amendment. Now it does seem to me there cannot be any question as to which is the proper mode for a State to exercise that will. When legislators are elected, they are elected with some reference to that expression of will; but every legislator when he votes on that question is voting himself in or out of office, and therefore he is not an impartial and unbiassed legislator. It is a question with him "to be or not to be," and the legislators in all probability will have reference to still further offices to be enjoyed in the State. But here an election is to take place where the subject can be directly, without expense or inconvenience submitted to the people, which is the true republican mode of settling this question. I hope the amendment of the Senator from New York will prevail.

Mr. WILSON. Unless the vote can be taken pretty soon I must call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I wish to answer a position assumed by the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON], and I want to ask the Senate a question at the outset. Why do they prescribe a different rule for the admission of Colorado from that which they applied to Nebraska or Nevada? Both of those States came here by the invitation of the Government. Colorado, too, was invited to come, but she did not get in so early. The honorable Senator from New York tells us that when they failed upon the first election the power of the enabling act was spent, and that all proceedings after that were irregular, as not being within the scope or under the direction of that enabling act. That position I entirely deny. If it is true of Colorado it was true of Nebraska, for she did not come by the first invitation. If the power of the enabling act is exhausted upon Colorado it was exhausted upon Nebraska, and she is here without right. Now, sir, what have the people of Colorado done that they should be subjected to a different rule than either of her sisters that were to come in on the same invitation were subjected to? In the name of the citizens of Colorado I protest against it. Mr. President, this opposition is technical and factious, and the honorable Senator from New York seizes upon these technicalities for no other purpose than to keep Colorado out.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does the Senator from Nevada say that to submit this constitution to the vote of the people will keep Colorado out?

Mr. NYE. No; Mr. President, I hope the honorable Senator from Indiana will keep still a moment, and then he will be able to hear what I say on this subject. I have been this morning two or three times on my feet, and on each occasion at least three Senators at a time have been after me. Now, I beg Senators to let me alone for two minutes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I disclaim any purpose to interrupt the Senator. I simply wanted to know his view on the point I suggested.

Mr. NYE. I answer the honorable Senator from Indiana now, that this constitution has been submitted to the people, and by them it has been ratified. My friend from Indiana

[Mr. MORTON] says that there was a small vote. Suppose it was a small vote, was that Colorado's fault? No, sir. In obedience to the request of this Government, in obedience to its command, she gave the vote she had for that purpose. My friend from Indiana says that it was so small that it cannot be presumed to be the voice of the people now. My answer to that is threefold. First, the citizens of Colorado were not at all to blame that there were not more inhabitants there when this constitution was adopted; second, she is not to blame that more of her citizens did not vote; third, she is not to blame at all, because she has provided for that very thing, and if gentlemen will read the constitution of Colorado they will find that if the Legislature desires an amendment to the constitution provision is made for it.

But my honorable friend says, why not submit it? I say it is trifling with the people. The real objection to Colorado is that she is not as large as New York or Vermont or Massachusetts or Rhode Island in population. The real objection is that she would have two Senators upon this floor. I hope that no such narrow-mindedness will pervade this Hall, that no such littleness will govern the action of men here. What is the exact location and condition of Colorado at this time? She has adopted this constitution; she desires to live under it; she has elected her Senators and sent them here; they have waited two years and we have kept them out; and now, at the end of two years, it is proposed to send them back with another enabling act. Why should we do it? In the hour of the necessity of the Government you passed an enabling act for Colorado with other Territories; she has responded to that invitation; and now you propose to send her back with another enabling act. Why? If gentlemen are right in supposing that there is not population enough there for a State, why give them another enabling act? Is it to further trifle with the rights and feelings and interests of the citizens of Colorado, so that when they come back here again it will be said by my friend from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] that there were not enough people to make their election an expression of their sentiment, to make it emphatic enough. Suppose the people of Indiana to-morrow should revise their constitution and submit the revised constitution to a popular vote, and there should be one majority in favor of adopting it, would not the honorable Senator hold that that constitution was adopted? Would not the law hold that that constitution was adopted? It is the will of a majority of those who participate in the transaction that governs. There was only one hundred and fifty-five majority, gentlemen say, for this constitution. I submit to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate, that that is as emphatic as though it was one hundred and fifty-five thousand.

The honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS], if he should happen to have one hundred and fifty-five majority for Governor of Indiana this fall, or if he should have a majority of one electoral vote for President, would certainly claim to be elected. I think so; and if anybody attempted to say that he was not elected because his majority was so small that it was not emphatic, I would help to resist that assault upon his rights. One hundred and fifty-five majority, I repeat, for all the purposes of this enabling act, and for the purposes of these people who stand here asking to be admitted, is as good as one hundred and fifty-five thousand; and the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] is not at liberty to say that the voice of that majority shall not be heeded. The majority is certified by the proper officers of the Territory, and my honorable friend from Indiana is estopped from alleging that it is not enough majority to decide the question. The will of the majority is the great democratic rule to which I always bow with respect. The honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] claims to be a simon-pure Democrat; that is his boast; that makes him conspicuous among his people; makes him a great leader. Now, I want to know if he is going to deny that a majority of one hundred and fifty-five is good. A majority has spoken, and their will must be obeyed. Let the Senators from New York, Vermont, and Indiana beat the bill, and say to the people of Colorado, "We will not have you, or let you have your constitution as you have adopted it." That is the real point.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President—

Mr. WILSON. I have been giving way, supposing that a vote would soon be reached.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot get a vote within several hours.

Mr. YATES. I know no one who wishes to speak except the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] and I hope while this is pending we may get rid of it.

Mr. DAVIS. I intend to speak.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NYE] has said that the opposition to this bill was technical and factious. I do not know, sir, upon what state of facts he is authorized to make that statement. His position, in my judgment, is technical, because the merits of the case are not with him. He stands upon one single proposition, that the Congress of the United States is now bound to admit this State because the enabling act was passed in 1864. That is the technical ground upon which he bases all his argument, and that ground being taken from under his feet he does not stand. Now, how is it in that regard? The enabling act provided for the selection of delegates to a convention; the delegates had their qualifications defined; the qualifications of the voters were defined; the time of the meeting of the convention was fixed. An election of delegates pursuant to that law was held; the convention met; a constitution was agreed upon by the convention; it was submitted to the people, and it was condemned by the people; and beyond that the people of Colorado have not pretended to act under any act of Congress. Then, I ask Senators, in what regard is the Congress of the United States bound by this irregular, most irregular action subsequent to the rejection of the constitution? How was the convention called that framed it? By the chairman of the political parties of the Territory. How were the delegates selected? Not by ballot, not by viva voce vote; by no election, but by such irregular mode as is usually adopted in the selection of delegates to a political convention. It had none of the forms, none of the assurances of right which generally accompany elections. Then the convention, thus selected, assembled and agreed upon a constitution and submitted it to the people. And what number of the people of Colorado have said that they wanted this as their form of government? How many of the people of Colorado have indorsed it? Understand from my colleague—at one time I knew accurately, but I do not now recollect—less than three thousand voters have said that this was to be the form of government and a constitution for them. We are told here to-day that there are nearly one hundred thousand people there; and it is a matter of technicality, it is a matter of faction, when any Senator objects that three thousand men cannot decide upon a State constitution and form of government.

Mr. YATES. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? To save all further remarks on that point, I desire to state that the committee will not object to the amendment of the Senator from New York. They do not see the necessity of it, but they do not object to adopting it, and letting the constitution be submitted to the people.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am very glad the chairman of the committee has now agreed to accept the proposition that far. It is well. If I had to-day to vote as an independent proposition upon an enabling act for this Territory I should not vote for it, because I do not believe there are more than forty thousand people in Colorado to-day. I do not believe there is evidence before the Senate that there is more than that population; and I do not think it is technical, I do not think it is factious opposition when a Senator here refuses to give the same political power in the legislation of this country to forty thousand people that is given to a million and a half in Indiana. It is not factious when I say that a million and a half of people in the State of Indiana are not to be balanced in this body, where political power is concentrated, by forty thousand people in Colorado. It is of substance I say to the Senator from Nevada, and he cannot get away from the substance by any play upon the position, political or otherwise, of any Senator. I will tell the Senator when a majority is conclusive upon me as a Democrat it is when that majority is expressed according to law.

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to ask the Senator from Indiana if it is any greater hardship for forty thousand people to be allowed to balance Indiana in this body than it is for a million and a half in Indiana to balance three or four millions in New York.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the original compact.

Mr. HOWE. I know; but I am speaking of the question of hardship, the equity to which the Senator was addressing his remarks.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The question of hardship and of equity is increased, the wrong is increased as the disproportion is increased. As between the million and a half in Indiana and the three and a quarter millions in the great State of New York the disproportion is not so great as between the little number of forty thousand in Colorado and the million and a half in the State of Indiana.

Mr. HOWE. The difference between the vote of Indiana and New York is greater than the difference between the vote of Colorado and Indiana.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir; by no means. Indiana casts three hundred thousand votes. The highest vote Colorado has ever cast is but ten thousand, and she cannot cast it to-day; she has not cast it since the war. In 1861, when the first current of population set into that Territory, and it was supposed the mining there would be easy and profitable, the population was swollen very much, and she cast a vote of a little above ten thousand.

Mr. HOWE. I believe the population of New York is about four millions.

Mr. CONKLING. And the vote eight hundred thousand.

Mr. HOWE. Certainly the difference between a million and a half and four millions must be greater than between a million and a half and any less number.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not understand the Senator's mathematics. What is the difference between ten thousand in Colorado and three hundred thousand in Indiana? It is thirty times. In the Senate of the United States ten thousand voters in Colorado would be equal to three hundred thousand in Indiana, so that one man in Colorado would exercise in the Senate of the United States the power of thirty men in Indiana. As between the State of New York and Indiana, one man in Indiana would have the power of a little more than two in New York.

Mr. HOWE. There is no difference between the Senator from Indiana and myself, except that he is talking about ratios and I am talking about population. I say there is a greater difference between four millions and a million and a half than there is between a million and a half and forty thousand. I am not speaking about proportions or ratios; and if the Senator will stop long enough to subtract he will see that I am right.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understand that there is a difference of more people between a million and a half and four millions than there is between forty thousand and a million and a half; but I am speaking of the exercise of political power. I do not think that it is technical when I question the right of one man in Colorado to exercise in this body a power equal to that of thirty men in Indiana. That is of substance.

Mr. NYE. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. I ask how much Indiana is to suffer, if the only question is the difference between sixty thousand population now and one hundred and twenty thousand in Colorado, which would give her a right to a member in Congress? If the population of Colorado, supposing it to be one hundred and twenty thousand, was in the State of Indiana, it would give Indiana another Representative in Congress; but how much is Indiana injured, and how much is New York or Vermont, by the mere matter of the difference between sixty thousand and one hundred and twenty thousand? When they come to have one hundred and twenty thousand the proportion would be fifteen to one; and yet I suppose there would be no power to keep them out then.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The practice of the Government has recognized this proposition, that when a Territory has a population that entitles her to a Representative she may properly be admitted as a State. That has been the usage of the Government. That has been an accepted habit, though departed from sometimes. It is a good rule. I do not know any better rule. When Colorado has one hundred and twenty thousand people she will then have power enough in proportion to her numbers. Quite enough; but as that has been the habit of the Government, I do not object to it; I am satisfied with it; but I do not want one third of the representative basis to have a Representative and two Senators. If you were to throw all the population of Colorado to-day into Indiana it would not give Indiana another Representative. The entire forty thousand in Colorado to-day put into Indiana would not give Indiana another Representative, much less add two Senators to her political power.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana one question. He was speaking just now of the majority rule. I desire to inquire if he is in favor of the two-thirds rule?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have not been discussing the two-thirds rule. I believe that a majority controls in a decision upon a constitution. That is what I am now discussing. I do not see either the logic or the wit of the Senator's question.

Mr. HOWE. The question now has come down to this: whether the population of Colorado is sufficient to warrant Congress in admitting that State into the Union. There are no longer any objections to be urged or suggested on behalf of Colorado. To my thinking, when we have the question of the admission of a State before us there are just two questions to be answered, first, whether the people of the Territory desire to be admitted, and secondly, whether we are willing to admit them.

I had, when this subject first came before us, an honest doubt, from the controversy which had prevailed, upon the question as to whether the people of Colorado desired to be admitted; and I wished the sense of the people, as they stand to-day, to be expressed in some form or other. I was entirely content to take the expression of their representatives, elected for that particular purpose, and such was the provision which I moved myself, and which was adopted by the Senate. Other Senators preferred that you should have the voice of the people themselves spoken upon that question directly, and now the Senator from Illinois, who has charge of this bill, has consented to a modification of it so that you will have the express decision of the people upon that question.

Now the only question left is, are you willing to take Colorado? and there is no objection made to her except that her population is not adequate. Is not adequate to what? The Senator from Indiana says that there is not that population in Colorado which, under the present apportionment, would entitle her to a Representative in the lower House. That is a fact, I guess. We have not any very positive evidence upon it, but I am not going to dispute that statement. There is no law in the world, either constitutional or statutory, which requires that she should have that number of people or any particular number.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But is it not justice?

Mr. HOWE. There is no justice in it, nor the semblance of justice. There is no sort of equality between the States that now exist; there never has been any; there never has been any settled attempt or purpose to enforce it; there never should have been; and the Constitution never designed that there should be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not in the House of Representatives?

Mr. HOWE. Not in the House of Representatives, so far as the question of admission is concerned; but, after they are admitted, the Constitution does declare that representation there shall be in proportion to population, with this qualification, that no matter what may be the population of a State it must at least have one Representative. If it has not more than ten thousand people it must have one Representative in the lower House. That is the language of your Constitution. But it was never intended that you should stand and haggle with the people of a State as to their number when they came here and said they wanted to be admitted unless you had some objection to the character of the people. The makers of the Constitution never intended that you should quarrel about the numbers. That is my judgment, and the Congress of the United States never has made a serious question about it. Wisconsin refused to be admitted after she had a population which entitled her, not to one, but two Representatives in the lower House. You refuse to allow the people of Utah to be represented here to-day, and I suspect they have much more than the population that would entitle them to a Representative in the lower House under the present apportionment. For years you denied to the people of South Carolina and Tennessee representation here, when you knew that they had much more than the population that would entitle them to a Representative. Why did you refuse? Because you thought they were disloyal. You took objection not to their number, but to the character and sentiment and disposition of the people. That was a wise and just proceeding. You cannot urge any such objection to the people of Colorado. The Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] who stands here protesting against the admission of Colorado with a small population all sound to the core, has for years clamored in favor of the admission of Representatives from South Carolina and from Virginia and from Georgia, who are all rotten to the core with disloyalty and with treason. Sir, I wish to ask the Senate and the Senator does he not think, will he not agree, that forty thousand people who are loyal and true in their allegiance to the Government and to the Union add more to the strength of the Republic than four millions or ten millions who are disloyal and untrue? When they are disloyal, the more people you have in the State the weaker they make the Republic and the more they endanger it. They do not add strength to it.

Numbers, then, I insist, are not a sine qua non. If I resided in Colorado I should want to take the census; I should want to know how many I had to help me support the expenditures of the Government before I consented to be admitted; but standing here and voting to appropriate for the expenses of a territorial government, and not for a State government, I only want to know that the people themselves feel able to defray those expenses. You have an appropriation bill which you passed yesterday appropriating some thirty thousand dollars to maintain a government for Colorado which the people of Colorado tell you they will maintain themselves, and you say you will not let them do it, because there are not enough of them. They know better than you do. Let them try it. They are willing to do it. They know their own capacity, their own ability. I am willing to trust them. Smaller communities than they have maintained a State government. I must say with all deference to the opinions of others that I do not think it is magnanimous or generous to stand here in front of a loyal and honest people, who simply ask to be allowed to participate in the political power of the Government to the extent of giving two votes in this House and one in the other; and I see Senators recoil from that proposition as if it was a stretch of generosity and magnanimity to which they were altogether unequal. No, sir; it will not make you any poorer if you consent to let them in. I hope the Senate will now agree to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. WILSON. I must call for the regular order.

Mr. HARLAN. I move the postponement of the regular order for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the bill for the admission of Colorado. I think it ought to be disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. I have given way for an hour and a half already; but if the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his motion, I will consent to let the regular order be passed over until three o'clock.

Mr. HARLAN. I withdraw the motion for the purpose of passing by the regular order informally; but I am not willing to limit it to three o'clock. I do not wish to make any such bargain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the Senate have certainly full power over the subject under consideration. They may dispose of it as they please, and I think they ought to dispose of it upon considerations of justice and sound policy.

In 1864 a general enabling act passed to permit Colorado, Nebraska, and Nevada to form constitutions, with a view to their admission as States into the Union. Colorado had 84,227 population, Nebraska 28,841, and Nevada 6,857, according to the census of 1860, making an aggregate of 69,925 people. That was a very extraordinary proposition. Here were three Territories to become States that in the aggregate, according to the most recent and authentic accounts of population, had but a small fraction over half what was necessary to enable a State to have a single Representative in the House of Representatives. That bill passed.

Mr. THAYER. The Senator from Kentucky does not understand that in 1864 they only had that amount of population, but four years previous.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not assume that position; but, Mr. President, according to my recollection, when Nevada was admitted as a State into the Union there was no authentic information of the amount of population in that State; and so of Nebraska. We know the general fact that these are mining regions, and that the population of mining States is generally nomadic; they do not settle in cities with a view to permanent residence, and they do not settle on farms with a view of living upon them as a general rule and transmitting them to their children. The leading business of the mass of the population is digging for gold, and as more alluring prospects for digging profitably in other sections are held out to the population they move from one locality and one State and one Territory to another. The population, as I am informed by persons who have been among the miners, is, the larger proportion of it, nomadic. They move from location to location, according to the prospects of a remuneration of their labor in the work of mining for gold.

Mr. President, gentlemen who favor the admission of Colorado have attempted to illustrate this case by reference to the original States, and they have brought up the existence of Delaware and Rhode Island and other States. Those States were at the beginning of our system of government, and were parties to it. Each of those States was then a nationality, a distinct sovereignty. The thirteen States, though they were so different in size and in numbers and in wealth, had together fought the battles of the Revolution and had established a common independence for all the States. They had done it, not as a consolidated republic, not as a single nationality, but as thirteen independent States and nationalities. They formed a league, the old Articles of Confederation, as distinct and sovereign nationalities, in which each of those States was equal to the other and none greater as a State or as a national corporation than any other. It was then, in that state of things, when the league or confederation had proved insufficient for the purposes for which it was made, and the representatives of those States got together to form a more perfect union and government in fact, and not a mere league or confederation, that they were all invited to go into the work of forming a common government. They all went into it as nationalities, as separate and distinct sovereignties; and of course Rhode Island, Delaware, every State was a party to the Constitution by which the government was formed, and as a compromise for the unequal representation of the States in the House of Representatives they were admitted to equal representation in the Senate as States and as sovereignties.

There is no analogy between those cases and the present. Those cases furnish no argument whatever to illustrate and enforce the justice and sound policy of admitting Colorado as a State into the Union. Sir, no new Territory ought to be admitted as a State into the Union unless justice to the other States and sound and true policy require, it to be done. Here is New York, that had in 1860 three million eight hundred thousand people; here is the State of Pennsylvania, that had about three millions; Ohio, that had two million five hundred thousand; I do not speak with any exactness. Here are those great States, empires of themselves within a vast empire, that have the right but to two Senators in the Senate of the United States. Was it right, when this enabling act passed in 1864, to form three States of these three Territories which had but an aggregate of sixty-nine thousand nine hundred and twenty-five people by the census of 1860, and no doubt by their then actual population did not exceed one hundred thousand, and certainly were far below one hundred and twenty-seven thousand, which is the ratio of population for a single Representative under the last apportionment of Representatives? Was it just to the old and larger States, was it sound policy, that these three Territories with such a figment of population should be admitted as States into the Union, and each of them having a power and a weight in the Senate of the United States equal to the great States whose population is numbered by millions?

Mr. YATES. Will the Senator allow me to state that the population of Ohio when she was admitted in 1802 according to the census of 1800 was forty-five thousand?

Mr. DAVIS. I am much obliged to the honorable Senator for the suggestion. Ohio, it was known, was one of the most fertile of all the northwestern Territories; and at that time there were streams of immigration into that Territory that gave assurance that in a few years her numbers would be swelled largely beyond the ratio of representation at that time. So of all the States in the northwestern Territory.

Mr. YATES. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to make a statement in regard to the population of Colorado which is verified by the facts. During the war, from 1861 to 1865, and I may say until 1866, immigration was driven away from the Territory by Indian disturbances. The Territory is some five or six hundred miles beyond the Missouri river, and between the Missouri river and the Territory there were extensive hostile bands of Indians. The result of the disturbances was that immigration was entirely discontinued. I will say to the Senator that I believe—because I have seen the population moving westward—that since the war and since these disturbances have terminated population has been pouring into these Territories as fast as it originally did into the Territories of Ohio and Illinois. And now that the railroads are about to be completed, and these Territories are made accessible, in a very few years, beyond any controversy whatever, Colorado will be one of the most populous of the western States. There can be no question about that.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, we all know as a general fact that the mining portion of the country consists mostly of sterile mountains, that its real wealth is the mineral that is embosomed under the surface of the mountains. If it was not for the mines that are found in Colorado, Nevada, and Arizona there would have been comparatively no immigration there. The allurements, the inducements to immigration there are the metals that are found in those countries. We know that there is a traveling host of laborers who dig for metal. They go from one diggings, or one gulch, or one lode, to another; that those laborers are unsettled; they move about as in the olden country the men who tend flocks and herds move about for new and better pasturage. In relation to countries that are purely agricultural, from the possession of a rich and fertile soil and a salubrious climate, the fact is totally different. Who doubted the rapid and teeming population to which Ohio and Indiana and Illinois and the other northwestern States would attain very rapidly after they were admitted as States into the Union? Nobody could; and the event more than verified the prediction, because there was a growth of population, of resources, and wealth in those States that greatly surpassed any imagination. Not so with those mining States; there population is developed only by the development of their mineral wealth, and there is such a vast expanse of mineral country, so many points spread over the whole of the western continent where there are mining operations that are remunerative, that it is impossible for great populations to aggregate suddenly in any particular locality; they are spread over hundreds of thousands and millions of square miles. That is the reason why the population of these new States and Territories has been so slow in its increase. The statistics of votes read by the honorable Senator from New York illustrate the position. In 1864 the vote in Colorado was larger than it was in 1867. There was a gradual and progressive decrease from 1864 to 1865, to 1866, and to 1867; and in 1867 the aggregate vote amounted to only between five and six thousand, if I recollect his figures; and I once was familiar with them myself, and I believe they are about the truth of the case.

The inequality of representation of the States in the Senate was an original, inherent, and necessary objection to our system of government. It could not be framed upon equality of representation in the Senate according to population among the States. The little States rejected that principle wholly, and it was with difficulty that they could be brought in the formation of the Constitution to a proportion of representation in the House of Representatives according to numbers; and the only argument and consideration that brought them to accept that principle was that they should have an equality of representation in the Senate, no State having a less representation than two members of the Senate. Then there was an imperative necessity for adopting that rule of equality. It was impracticable, impossible to frame a union and a constitution of government upon a different principle. But now the state of the case is totally different. The new States come and ask to be admitted as States into the Union; and it is statesmanship and justice both for Congress before they admit new States into the Union to look to their populations, and to look to their relative political power when they are admitted as States into the Union, to the power of the old States, and especially of the large States. It is philosophy, it is justice, it is common sense to take that view of the subject.

Does not every Senator know, does not every intelligent man in the United States know, that it is a deep cause of dissatisfaction that New England should have six times as much political weight in the Senate as the State of New York, when the aggregate population of the States of New England is about eight hundred thousand less than the population of the State of New York? That is not justice. It is not right, abstractly; but it is a condition of things that circumstances force upon the American people; but the necessity and the force that established that state of things then does not exist now in relation to the new States. Why, sir, when you provided for admitting these three new States into the Union, you gave them three times as much weight in the Senate of the United States as the great State of New York had. Was that statesmanship? Was it justice? Was it not a great wrong? Sir, this inequality in relation to the original States must exist; the same necessity that forced it upon the acceptance of the people at the beginning will continue it; but that, instead of being a reason for accumulating this inequality and injustice, to my mind furnishes a forcible argument why it should not be extended further.

Mr. President, I have no idea that there are fifty thousand people in Colorado to-day. I have inquired among gentlemen who come from that region of the United States, and I am informed by intelligent men who have made inquiry into the matter that the population of Colorado is between forty and fifty thousand; that the population of Montana is between fifty and sixty thousand. Now, let me put a case. Montana has a Delegate in the other House, and that Delegate has introduced an enabling bill that she shall be allowed to form a constitution, with a view to admission into the Union as a State. He tells me that he has not been able to turn a wheel in that House in favor of his bill. I have no doubt myself, from all the information I have, and which I deem reliable, that Montana has a larger population than Colorado. How is it, then, that Colorado shall be brought, irregularly, against the decision of the people, with a small, if not a smaller population, as a State into the Union, and Montana cannot advance one step in that direction?

Mr. President, here is the fact in relation to this Territory of Colorado, as the Senator from Indiana expressed it, in a few lucid words: her people called a convention under the enabling act of 1864; that convention framed a constitution within the time to which the people had been limited and restricted by the terms of the enabling act; and that constitution, when formed, was submitted to the people of Colorado, and a majority of them voted to reject it and not to become a State in the Union. As he stated, the leading men in the Territory who want to be Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, and who wish to be marshals and district attorneys, and to fill all the offices of a new State, get together, and they give the impulse to the people informally to vote upon the same constitution. I believe they did vote on the same constitution that had been previously rejected. An informal and illegal election is held without authority of law. I maintain that the enabling act was exhausted when the people rejected the constitution that had been prepared and submitted to them under its provisions. The law became a dead letter then, and before they could legitimately or properly proceed to the formation of another constitution, or to the adoption of that one, they should have had another enabling act; but they did not choose to submit themselves to that regular mode. They got together informally. All stayed away who chose. There was no legality or binding effect in the movement. Men did not know that it was to be obligatory upon them. They did not know that if they stayed away from the election and declined to vote on the adoption of that constitution it could be forced upon them, because they saw that it was a proceeding without authority, without the sanction of the law of Congress. They stayed away, many of them. The diminished vote proves it from the time the constitution had been previously submitted to the people. There were no officers of law, responsible to law and to punishment for conducting that election unjustly, irregularly, not according to the law. There was no law to regulate it. The election had no legal sanctions at all; and I maintain that under that irregular, informal, and unconstitutional mode of coming into the Union there is no obligation whatever upon the Senate at this time to admit Colorado as a State.

Mr. President, if gentlemen want to deal justly by these Territories, I have laid upon the Clerk's table an amendment in the form of a substitute. That substitute is an enabling act, authorizing the people, both of Montana and of Colorado, to form constitutions as preliminary to their admission into the Union as States. I ask the honorable Senator from Illinois if Montana has not as much population as Colorado? The bill, as now modified with the consent of the honorable Senator, amounts only to an enabling act. I have taken up the original enabling act of Colorado, and I have taken the enabling act for Montana that has been presented by her Delegate in the House of Representatives, but which he has never been able to move there, and I have combined them into one enabling act, to permit both of these Territories to go fairly, legitimately, according to practice and precedent, before the people of their respective Territories, and submit distinctly and expressly the proposition to the people of both of these Territories to vote for and against becoming States in the Union. There cannot be any objection to the enabling act I offer as it relates to Colorado, because I have adopted it literally as it passed in 1864.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to ask the Senator how he will obviate this objection to his proposition: how does he know that there is a sufficient population in Montana to justify the formation of a State government? There has been no census taken, and the former practice was to take a census before the enabling act was passed.

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer my honorable friend thus: I do not know, and I do not believe there is sufficient population in either of these Territories to admit them as a State into the Union. I believe that no Territory ought to come into the Union as a State with a less population than the ratio that entitles a State in the Union to a Representative. I am as well satisfied in relation to Montana as I am in relation to Colorado, that there is a larger population in Montana than there is in Colorado. My principle, which I have always advocated, would be to exclude them both until both should come here with a population entitling them to a Representative according to the ratio of representation. I believe that is the true principle; and when we connect with that principle the other, that all States are to have an equal representation of two in the Senate, how unjust, numerically, it will be to the old and populous and large States. That Territories, as the honorable Senator from Vermont said a few days ago, that have not yet put off their swaddling clothes, should be putting on their father's hats and pantaloons and stalking into the Senate and House of Representatives as States, is grotesque and ridiculous. If that was the least objection to it I would not make it at all; but it is flagrant and outrageous injustice to the old and larger States.

But, Mr. President, I suppose it will be done. The honorable Senator from Nevada, [Mr. NYE,] in his usual eloquent and impressive style, referred to that great necessity of State and of putting down rebellion and preserving the Government that forced the enabling act to admit these three Territories as States into the Union. No such necessity as that, according to my comprehension, existed; but there was a great impending party necessity. It was necessary for the party to get two thirds of both Houses. It was necessary that they should have two thirds of both Houses to pass bills over the veto of the President, and to pass outrageous amendments to the Constitution of the United States. It was not the necessity of the nation, of the Government, of the system, but of the party, that forced that enabling act through Congress at that time. And that necessity forced the majority into other acts. It forced them to expel Senator Stockton, a Senator elected in literal conformity to the law of his State, who was reported in favor of by a unanimous vote of the Committee on the Judiciary, with one solitary exception, and that was Mr. Clark.

The same necessity that called up these infant States in their swaddling clothes, that had not yet learned to crawl, much less to erect themselves with the port and the strength of manhood, and brought them as States into the Union, with two representatives here each in the Senate, and that required the expulsion of Senator Stockton for the purposes of party strength and the passage of party measures, in derogation of the rights of the people and in revolution of the Constitution of the United States and its principles, may force, and will force, Colorado sooner or later into the Union. The approaching presidential election will create another party necessity that will bring in Colorado as another State to cast three Radical votes. But if Colorado comes Montana ought to come. If Montana is kept out Colorado ought to be kept out; for their populations are about equal.

I propose, then, to submit an enabling act that amounts to nothing; it commits Congress to nothing; it just authorizes the people to get together and hold their election and elect members of a convention to frame a constitution, and after they have done that work, and presented their constitution with the numbers for and against to the Congress of the United States, it will be the free will, the sovereign will and pleasure of the Congress of the United States, to admit or to reject them. That process would demonstrate clearly and satisfactorily how many people there were in Colorado, and how many in Montana, and whether the people wanted to come in as States or not. The idea that when a Territory was offered a chance to become a State, and rejected it, and rejected it by a much larger positive vote than that which afterward passed it, it can afterward be received as a State under that irregular mode of proceeding, in my judgment ought not to be entertained a moment. When the proper time comes I will ask a vote on my bill, which proposes an enabling act to authorize the people both of Colorado and Montana to vote upon the question of forming constitutions with a view to their admission into the Union as States. I think that it ought to pass, because the question of numbers, and the justice and sound policy of admitting those Territories as States into the Union, would be better shown by proceedings and elections under a new enabling act than we can possibly understand them to be now.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, it has been asserted here with great earnestness that there are but forty or fifty thousand people in the Territory of Colorado, and that has been urged as a substantial reason for not passing this enabling act. I have seen no evidence to justify me in coming to the conclusion that the population is so small. It is said that the last vote that was taken was but about nine thousand; and some Senators estimate five people to the voter, and on that data conclude there are only forty or fifty thousand inhabitants there. Why, sir, those of us who have been brought up on the frontier know that there are always a large number of people in a new community who are not eligible to vote under any of the election laws. In the first place, there is always a large per cent. of the people from other countries, foreign-born people, who cannot vote usually until after a residence of five years, and many of them reside in the Territory longer than that period before they conform to the requirements of the naturalization laws. Then all of these new communities have local laws requiring a residence of a longer or shorter period of time which excludes a considerable per cent. of their population from the right to vote; in some instances it is six months; in others one year; and in some even longer. So that these facts in connection with the extent of the Territory, justify, as it seems to me, any one acquainted with frontier life in the belief that the population must be much greater than that which has been stated by the Senator [Mr. DAVIS] who has just taken his seat.

It was stated here, I think by the chairman of the Committee on Territories, that he had an estimate made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in which that official stated the population to be but little less than one hundred thousand. I would take the judgment of that officer in preference to the loose statements of Senators here which seem to be sustained by no evidence whatever. It is made his duty under our laws to know the condition of the Territories. He has under his control the disposition of the public lands, and now under the recent laws, the disposition of the mines; and in this way he is necessitated to know much more of the condition of the population on the frontiers than it is probable any Senator on this floor would be likely to know. I do not think, therefore, that the statement that the population is small, is a sufficient reason to justify a refusal to pass this bill.

I agree, substantially, with the remarks made by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.] It is far more important to ascertain whether the people there are in a condition to sustain a stable government than to ascertain the exact number of the inhabitants. If they are civilized people; if they have local interests in the Territory that will induce them to remain there; if they have sufficient cultivation and intelligence to enact just laws, and capacity to enforce them, so as to secure the safety of life and property, and are willing to sustain the expenses of a State government, why should they be excluded? Senators say because the population of that Territory is not equal to the population of some of the older States. Why, sir, there has never been any rule of population adopted for the admission of States. It has been talked of frequently; it has been mentioned often in debate; but never has a rule been adopted, either in the form of a statute or by custom, requiring a given population before a community should be admitted as a State. Congress has always been controlled, as I suppose, by the reasons to which I have referred. Is there a sufficient population within the limits of that Territory to sustain a State government? Are the people willing to take on themselves the burdens of a State government, and thus release the United States from this unnecessary expense? Have they the capacity and ability to enact and enforce local laws for the security of life, liberty, and property? If all these questions can be answered in the affirmative, then they may be admitted, if the latter reason, disparity of populations, is not to be conclusive, if it is not now imperative on Congress to establish a uniform rule on this subject as a condition for the representation of States in this Chamber. The Senator who has just taken his seat [Mr. DAVIS] has admitted that that is now impossible; that it was impossible in the origin of the Government; that it was necessary then to establish a rule which cannot now be set aside. Then, sir, if it is impossible now to establish uniformity of representation, as measured by population, in this Chamber, why plead that as a reason for the exclusion of the people of Colorado.

But the Senator stated that the people in this Territory were a floating community, were nomadic in their habits, and that their chief interest was mineral. The Senator has doubtless been misled by a failure to bring to bear his usual industry in examining this question. That was once supposed to be the great interest in Colorado, and it is a great interest now; but Colorado has the elements of a great agricultural community. I think I risk nothing in saying that there is more fertile agricultural land in the Territory of Colorado than there is in the State of Kentucky. It is true the mode of cultivation will have to be different in some parts of that Territory; it will be necessary, perhaps, to irrigate the land; but, sir, the Territory of Utah, where irrigation is more absolutely necessary than it would be in Colorado, where they do not labor in the mines to any considerable extent; where the production of metal is not a great interest; where their interest is peculiarly and almost exclusively agricultural, is now sustaining, as we all know, a population of between one and two hundred thousand. To those acquainted with the character of the country in Colorado, as are the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the members of the Committee on Territories, it is not questionable that it will become one of the great agricultural States in this country. Why, sir, that soil will produce to-day more bushels of wheat per acre, perhaps, than any land this side of the Missouri river. It will produce as many bushels of wheat per acre as will the fertile valleys in Indiana of corn, and with less cultivation.

But the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] insists that this amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] ought to be adopted unless the friends of this measure are afraid to test the question of the acceptability of the constitution to the people. If I should propose that the title of that Senator to a seat in this Chamber should be settled by another election by the Legislature of Indiana, would it be a sufficient answer, if he should object, for me to say, "Does the Senator fear to resubmit the question, lest he might not be elected a second time?" Here action has been had on that precise question by the people of the Territory, and decided in the affirmative, and well they may wish not to have their feelings trifled with. Why, sir, it is an implication, as has been observed heretofore, that fraud has been perpetrated, that the election was not a fair election, if the Senate in this mode set it aside.

But what is the object of resubmitting the question whether this constitution shall be adopted or not? For the purpose, it is said, of ascertaining whether the people of that Territory are willing to live under this particular constitution, as if it were a law like that of the Medes and Persians, to be unchangeable forever. It contains within its own provisions a mode for its own amendment. If hereafter it should prove in any particular to be unsatisfactory to the people of that State they will be competent to change it, and in that mode conform it to their judgment of right and of their interests. Never heretofore has the admission of a State been rejected on a reason so trivial. Why, sir, if not to the same extent, the same reason would apply to the application of the people of every Territory for admission into the Union, for some time must necessarily elapse after an election shall be held for the adoption or rejection of the constitution before action can be had on the admission of the State by the two branches of Congress, and in these new communities the population is constantly changing, and it is not probable that precisely the same result, measured by the same number of votes, would be attained at any two elections, because of such changes.

I do not perceive, therefore, that this objection is a sufficient reason for the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. Besides, I always have a suspicion when amendments are proposed to a bill by the enemies of the bill itself. If a majority of the members of the Senate of the United States are willing to pass this bill, which is now but little more than an enabling act, I see no reason why they should apply to the enemies of the bill for amendments on points that are purely trivial in their character; for, as was shown by my friend, the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. Tipton,] the question is submitted in a different mode in the election of the members of the Legislature. The bill now provides that they shall decide when they convene whether the Territory shall be admitted into the Union or not; and if they decide not to be admitted into the Union then this law becomes a nullity; and it is purely immaterial whether the provisions of the constitution are acceptable in all respects to the people or not, if it is to become nugatory and void. But if they decide in favor of admission, and there should be found to be provisions in it, as I have before remarked, that are not acceptable to the people, they will have the power to change them, for the constitution itself provides the mode; and if it did not thus provide a mode for its own amendment, I apprehend no Senator here would contend for a moment that they would not inherently have the right to amend their fundamental law.

If then, Mr. President, there is probably a sufficient population in this Territory to sustain a government; if they are willing to do so; if they probably have the capacity to enact and enforce laws for the protection of life, liberty, and property, to make these reasonably secure, and if they will have the opportunity to amend their constitution in all these minor respects, if they choose to do so, as seems to me to be obvious, what reason is there for refusing to permit them to come into the Union as a State unless it be placed on the ground purely of inequality of representation, as measured by population, in this Chamber?

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRY. There is now placed upon this constitution one condition which it is not in the power of the people of Colorado to change; so that upon that provision no expression of the will of that people has ever been had.

Mr. HARLAN. That will be had by them in the election of members of the Legislature. If they are not willing to live under the constitution with this clause in it, they will vote for members to represent them who will vote against its adoption.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask him if he ever knew or heard of an instance where a question of this kind was submitted to a Legislature instead of to the people when it was going to be submitted at all in the admission of any State before this one?

Mr. HARLAN. Was it not so in the case of Nebraska?

Mr. TIPTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir.

Mr. HARLAN. I understand from the Senator from Nebraska that a similar question was submitted to the Legislature of that State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Permit me to correct the Senator. It was not submitted to the Legislature of Nebraska whether they would be admitted into the Union or not. It was submitted to them to ratify the perpetual condition we imposed upon them.

Mr. TIPTON. That was the only condition on which we were admitted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; but here this proposition is to leave the Legislature to decide yea or nay whether they desire to be admitted into the Union at all; and my question was whether there was ever a case of that kind before.

Mr. HARLAN. This is more technical than real, for if the Legislature of Nebraska had failed to ratify that fundamental condition they were not to be received; they were not to be a member of the Union. It was for the purpose of settling the question whether they were to be admitted that that fundamental condition was submitted. On its ratification by the Legislature their constitution was declared to have been adopted, and they entitled to representation in this Chamber and in the other branch of Congress. But, sir, as it seems to me, with great respect for the Senator from Vermont, it is a puerile question, to say that delegates may make and ratify a constitution and members of a Legislature may not do so. Who are the delegates in a Territory but the representatives of the people, elected at the polls for a specific purpose, for the purpose of framing and adopting a fundamental law. If you call them members of the Legislature, elect them in the same way, and clothe them with the same power, have you not achieved substantially the same thing; that is, a fair representation of the will of the people?

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. A convention is elected specially to frame a constitution. A Legislature is elected to do no such work, and therefore cannot legitimately make or adopt a constitution.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir; and that is purely a name. You call one a convention, and you call the other a Legislature. Suppose you reverse the names; would it change the substance? Suppose you call one legislative body; that is, a legislative body composed of but one house a Legislature—and I suppose it would be competent for the people of a State to have a Legislature of but one house—then it is in identical form a convention. Does it change the substance to have two houses? Could not the people of a new community call a convention of that form? Could not Congress do so? Could not they provide that members of a convention should be elected to two branches, one to be composed of a certain number of members, and another to be composed of a smaller number of members, and that before a constitution should be adopted it should receive the assent of both of these houses? Why, sir, with great respect, this is a mere play of words. What you desire in the ratification of a constitution to be the fundamental law of a State is to ascertain that it proceeds from the mind of the people themselves; that it is the expression of their will. It has not been usual until recently in this country to submit laws, fundamental or statute, directly to the people for ratification.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not constitutions?

Mr. HARLAN. Not constitutions. Few, if any, of the constitutions, at least of the old States, that were in force at the organization of this Government, were submitted directly to a vote of the people. I am informed by my friend, the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Drake,] that not one half of all of them now in force have ever been submitted directly to the people. To say that a people have not power to clothe their delegates with authority to make a fundamental law that will be binding on them without first submitting it to a vote of the people is a new doctrine in this country.

Sir, this is a representative Government. Your laws are made, not by the people, but by representatives of the people. They are adjudicated, not by the people en masse, by the people at the polls, but by the representatives of the people on the judicial tribunals. Your laws are enforced, not by the people en masse, by their votes, but by their representatives in the executive offices of the State and of the nation. This, therefore, is a representative Republic, and the people may, if they choose, clothe their delegates with authority to settle finally the question of the adoption either of a fundamental or a statute law. With great respect, therefore, I conclude there is nothing in the objection submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

But, sir, Senators argue as if this Senate was organized for the division of spoils, and not to make laws; that if there are four million people within the limits of the State of New York and one million in the State of Iowa, New York ought to have four times as much plunder as the people of Iowa, and to secure this should have a corresponding representation. Sir, this is not, although it is frequently asserted to be, a body composed of representatives of States. We do not vote here as representatives of States; we vote as Senators of the United States. Neither the State of New York as a State, nor any other State in this Union, casts a vote as such. Why, sir, how frequently are the two Senators from any one State divided in their votes? Not frequently do the two Senators from Indiana vote on the same side of a great political question, and very frequently do they differ on questions of mere expediency, questions even of local policy; and so with the Senators from each of the other States. The roll of States is never called in this Chamber. That is only done in the other branch of Congress. It is only the Representatives of the people in the other House that are called by States to express their voice in this manner, and then only in a possible case of disagreement in the Electoral Colleges in the selection of a President of the United States. There is nothing, therefore, in this idea of this body being composed of representatives of States.

Sir, we are representatives of the United States, and the moment a Senator-elect walks to that desk, and takes on himself the solemnities of his oath of office, he ceases to be the official representative of a State as such and becomes a legislator for this nation, and is bound under his oath of office to do justice as much to Iowa as the Senators from that State are to do justice to the people of his State.

It is important, however, that these local communities should be represented here in order that we may be well informed as to the local necessities of the people of this great country. It is important that their representatives should be here to inform this body of the necessities of the communities among whom they live, as well as to give the Government the aid of their counsel and advice in the passage of measures pertaining to the general welfare.

Now, sir, in the Territory of Colorado the people of this nation have larger interests as a nation than they have in New York or Kentucky. They have a vast public domain to be disposed of; they have vast mineral interests, and the people of that locality are in immediate contact with independent tribes of people over whom this nation exercises a kind of guardianship, but nevertheless are compelled, by the usages, at least, of the nation, to treat as independent communities. Now, I inquire whether we do not need the advice and counsel of representatives from that community in this Chamber in order that our votes may be intelligently cast in relation to the disposition of that vast public domain stretching from the northern border of Mexico up to the British possessions, covering what in any other country might be carved up into a home for several great and powerful nationalities? Here in this Chamber you have no representative of that vast region. You have delegates in the other House without a voice—legalized lobbyists; nothing more. Sir, we need a representation from these large Territories and from these vast and expanding interests in order that we may enact the necessary laws to develop them in an intelligent and enlightened manner. It is not for the purpose of parceling out goods and chattels that Senators come to this Chamber, I suppose, but for the purpose of lending to the nation their advice and counsel in the management of the vast interests submitted to our control; and in order that this may be done intelligently I submit that it is important at this time that that vast country and that growing community, very soon to be a great agricultural community, shall have a voice in this and the other Chamber.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a very few moments in stating one or two points. I have no objection to the amendment resubmitting this constitution to the people of Colorado. Believing that that people are anxious for admission into the Union, I feel confident that they will readily adopt the constitution; and believing, as I do, that their population is much larger than it is represented to be in this Chamber, I am anxious that they should have an opportunity to be admitted, and for that reason I shall not oppose the amendment.

As bearing upon two important points in this case, that of population and that of the capacity of this Territory to support a State government, I beg leave to read a passage from the last report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, made to the Secretary of the Interior. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is the gentleman whose capacity and industry was so largely commented upon in this Chamber yesterday. In his report he says:

"The elements of an agricultural character are as yet variously reported, but unquestioned facts represent enormous yields of cereals from imperfect agricultural enterprise. Sixty bushels of wheat to the acre is a crop well attested in several localities. The mineral wealth of the country is enormous; the yield of gold in 1862 was reported at $12,000,000. Silver has been mined on Snake river which produces $600 per ton. Large tracts of bituminous coal are also reported. The population in 1860 was thirty-four thousand two hundred and twenty-seven; in 1863 it was eighty thousand; the present population is a matter of conflicting estimates. It is probably near one hundred thousand. The immigration is rapid. The completion of the Pacific railroad will soon enable it to reach a still higher aggregate. Denver City, Central City, Colorado City, and Nevada City are the principal towns. The public lands undisposed of in Colorado are over sixty-two million eight hundred and fifty thousand acres."

Turning now to the report of the surveyor general, the local officer in that Territory, I read as follows:

"My predecessor in his last report estimated the number of acres of land capable of cultivation in the Territory at four million acres."

I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to that fact.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator from New Hampshire tell me how many million acres of land there are in all in the Territory?

Mr. CRAGIN. About one hundred and five thousand square miles.

Mr. DAVIS. Then there are about one hundred times as many acres of land in all as there are acres of arable land?

Mr. CRAGIN. Of course it is well understood that this Territory is largely mountainous; but I am speaking about its agricultural resources. The surveyor general says:

"My predecessor in his last report estimated the number of acres of land capable of cultivation in the Territory at four million acres. It is a fact that all the land that can be irrigated is susceptible of cultivation, and produces well. The mountain streams fall very rapidly, and thus can be carried by irrigating ditches to cover immense quantities of land, and I am led to believe that at least ten million acres of land can be cultivated. The crops last year were good. It was the first year, I am told, that sufficient produce had been raised to supply the demands of the Territory."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does he give the number of bushels of wheat and corn raised?

Mr. CRAGIN. I think not. He continues:

"The present year farming is being carried on with success, the grasshoppers, the great dread of the farmer, having done but little damage to the crops. Wheat, oats, barley, corn, potatoes, &c., all look well and promise an abundant yield, and I predict that it will be but a few years until this Territory will produce more than enough to supply her wants."

I propose to refer to two other points as showing the population of this Territory. As I stated the other day, in speaking on this question, in 1864, when the enabling act passed, authorizing this Territory to form a State government, the receipts of the Post Office Department for postage in that Territory were $16,000. The receipts in 1867 were over thirty-two thousand dollars, more than double what they were in 1864. I adduce these figures as evidence of an increase of population.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was the Army there last year?

Mr. CRAGIN. No, sir. I refer, also, to the receipts of internal revenue. In 1864, at the time the enabling act was passed, the whole amount of internal revenue collected in this Territory was $41,781 05. In 1867, last year, the amount of internal revenue tax collected from this Territory was $151,686, being more than five times what it was at the time of the passage of the enabling act. This also goes to show a large increase of population.

I desire to say to the Senator from Kentucky, who has been telling us that Montana has a population equal to Colorado, that the evidence is the other way. So far as the receipts from postage and the receipts from internal revenue are concerned they are not one fifth as great as those derived from the Territory of Colorado.

I wish to make this point again, and clearly, to the Senate: that in 1864, when Congress passed the enabling act inviting this Territory into the Union, the receipts from postage in that Territory were only $16,000, and in 1867 they were over thirty-two thousand dollars, more than double—to my mind demonstration conclusive that the population has largely increased. Then there is the further fact, that the internal revenue tax collected last year, when the receipts generally fell off, amounted to $151,000 as compared with $41,000 in 1864—a larger amount of receipts for postage, and also for internal revenue, than was collected from several of the States now in this Union and represented in this Chamber. The receipts of one half of all the other Territories in the Union combined did not equal the receipts from Colorado alone.

As I remarked the other day, I am entirely satisfied that there is a population in this Territory of from seventy-five to one hundred thousand. I am entirely satisfied that the resources of this Territory are vast, and rapidly being developed; that the population will increase, and rapidly increase; and I am in favor of the admission of the Territory as a State into the Union. Congress once invited this Territory with two others to come into the Union. The other two have been admitted. There is no reason that prevailed in the case of Nevada or Nebraska which does not equally prevail in the case of Colorado. I believe that the population of this Territory is larger than the population of Nevada to-day, or the population of Nebraska at the time she was admitted. I hope, sir, that Colorado will now be admitted into the Union.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I look upon this as an entirely different question, so far as it relates to this Territory, and as a new question, one over which we have complete jurisdiction, and one in respect to which our decision, and that of the people of that Territory, if they vote to come in, will be final. It cannot be repealed as a law can; if we make a mistake in passing it, there is an end of it.

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose the Senator desires to address the Senate at some length, and if he will give way I will move an executive session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; I will give way.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do not force me to go on at this time.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator says, "Do not force me to go on at this time." I hope he does not contemplate making a speech on this subject.

Mr. POMEROY. I understand that the Senator from Vermont desires to discuss this matter at some length. He certainly has the right to do so.

Mr. CAMERON. I think we had better adjourn. It is now nearly four o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield for the purpose of an executive session.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONNESS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. All this day we have wasted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to any debate on this question.

Mr. CONNESS. It is for the Chair to object, not the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; it is for me to object also.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll on the motion for an executive session, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Davis, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ross, Sprague, Sumner, and Vickers—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Conness, Cragin, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Howard, McDonald, Nye, Ramsey, Stewart, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Cattell, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Morrill of Vermont, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, and Van Winkle—16.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before declaring the result of the vote, the Chair will lay before the Senate certain matters now on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a communication from General Stoneman, commanding the first military district, relative to a proposed election to be held therein, together with the draft of a bill based on the recommendations of said communication; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating a report of Thomas Murphy, superintendent of Indian affairs, central superintendency, relative to affairs in his superintendency; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1027) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Black river, in Lorain county, Ohio;

A bill (H. R. No. 1322) for the relief of Major F. F. Stevens, assistant paymaster United States Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 1824) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Harris, of Oregon;

A bill (H. R. No. 1825) for the relief of Benjamin B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 312) relative to the pay of the Assistant Librarian of the House;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 313) respecting treaties hereafter to be made between the United States and the Indian tribes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 314) for the relief of George D. Blakely, late collector of the second district of Kentucky.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 367) for the relief of Albert Grant;

A bill (S. No. 452) for the relief of Parker Quince;

A bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of Captain Dan. Ellis; and

A bill (S. No. 251) for the relief of Captain Charles N. Goulding, late quartermaster of volunteers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 367) for the relief of Albert Grant;

A bill (S. R. No. 454) for the relief of Captain Dan. Ellis; and

A bill (S. No. 452) for the relief of Parker Quince.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 1027) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Black river, in Lorain county, Ohio—to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A bill (H. R. No. 1322) for the relief of Major F. F. Stevens, assistant paymaster United States Army—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. No. 1324) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Harris, of Oregon—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. No. 1325) for the relief of Benjamin B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 313) respecting treaties hereafter to be made between the United States and the Indian tribes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 314) for the relief of George D. Blakey, late collector of the second district of Kentucky—to the Committee on Claims.

ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN OF THE HOUSE.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 312) relative to the pay of the Assistant Librarian of the House was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senate to hear a statement, and by unanimous consent to allow that resolution to pass at the present time. It is to give execution to a resolution of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we are not going into executive session, I want to go on with my remarks.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well; let the resolution lie on the table. I will call it up again.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STEWART. I ask leave of absence for Mr. RICE, of Arkansas. I should like to have the leave of absence extended from the 23d of this month to the 10th of July. He was necessarily called away.

Leave was granted.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1073) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1869, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 573) to provide for a life boat to be stationed on Narragansett beach, Rhode Island, reported it without amendment.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPRAGUE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRINTING OF A DOCUMENT.

Mr. RAMSEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand additional copies of Executive Document No. 240, H. R. parts one and two, be printed for the use of the Senate.

EXHIBITION OF STEAM-PLOW.

Mr. SPRAGUE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture inquire into the expediency of procuring the best steam-plow and apparatus for exhibition on grounds of the Department of Agriculture.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of going into executive session the yeas are 22, and the nays 18; so the motion is agreed to.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 27, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. A. L. LINDSLEY, of South Salem, New York.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PAY OF ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN.

Mr. BLAINE. A resolution in regard to the pay of the Assistant Librarian in charge of the Hall Library, was passed yesterday, by mistake, as a simple House resolution. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as a joint resolution, and sent to the Senate for action.

No objection was made; and accordingly, by unanimous consent, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 312) in relation to the pay of the Assistant Librarian of the House was read a first, second, and third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF BOUNTIES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the resolutions of the House of Representatives of the 15th and the 22d instant, a report from the Paymaster General as to the number of bounties paid under the act of July 28, 1866, since the 1st of July last; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OFFICERS IN QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, concurring in the recommendation of the Quartermaster General and the General of the Army, relative to majors and captains in the quartermaster's department, for the repeal of the act of July 28, 1866, reducing the number of said officers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN DELAWARE RIVER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition from the Board of Marine Underwriters, &c., of Philadelphia, with a report by the chief of engineers, for an appropriation of $6,000 for the removal of certain obstructions in the Delaware river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT BLACKROCK, CONNECTICUT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Light-House Board, relative to a light-house at Blackrock, Connecticut, recommending its erection; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH A. BRIGGS.

Mr. PAINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1316) granting a pension to Sarah A. Briggs; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

E. R. CAINE.

Mr. PAINE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1317) granting a pension to E. R. Caine; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. JUDD. I desire to say that I have received a letter from my colleague, [Mr. Cook,] saying that he is too unwell to return at the time he had expected. I ask an extension of his leave of absence for four days.

Leave was granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has been called home by sickness in his family. He desired the Chair to ask indefinite leave of absence for him.

Leave was granted.

The SPEAKER also asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for Mr. McCORMICK.

TREATIES WITH INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 313) respecting treaties hereafter to be made between the United States and the Indian tribes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire that this resolution shall be considered at the present time.

The joint resolution, which was read, recites in the preamble that sundry treaties between the United States and different Indian tribes have heretofore been concluded, by virtue of which large bodies of land have been transferred to individuals and corporations in contravention of the spirit and policy of the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States; and that the lands now known as Indian reservations, on the extinguishment of the Indian title thereto, should become the property of the United States and a part of the public domain thereof, and cannot rightfully be disposed of otherwise. The joint resolution therefore provides that in any treaty which may hereafter be concluded between the United States and any Indian tribe, by which the title of such tribe to their lands shall be divested, the same shall be conveyed directly to the United States, and shall thenceforward be subject to the authority of Congress in the same manner as all other public lands.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBECCA J. SHEPPARD.

Mr. MYERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1318) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a new bond to Rebecca J. Sheppard, of Philadelphia, in place of one destroyed by fire; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the reference of the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this bill should be referred to the Committee of Claims, that committee having a number of similar cases under consideration. It is proper that some uniform rule should be applied in these cases.

Mr. MYERS. This bill appropriately belongs to the Committee of Ways and Means. It has heretofore been considered by that committee and passed by the House, but the Senate failed to pass it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist on the reference of the bill to the Committee of Claims, though I think that is the proper reference.

The bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAPTAIN DAN. ELLIS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 474, for the relief of Captain Dan. Ellis, with the recommendation that it be passed.

The bill was read at length. It appropriates the sum of $3,060 to Captain Dan. Ellis, of Carter county, in the State of Tennessee, in compensation for his services as scout, pilot, and recruiting agent, volunteered in the cause of the Government from 1861 to 1865, during the late war.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PARKER QUINCE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 452, for the relief of Parker Quince, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to allow to Parker Quince, in the settlement of his accounts with the Government, $1,608 97, for his salary as collector of customs for the port of Wilmington, North Carolina, and acting collector of internal revenue from September 13, 1865, to May 14, 1866, in addition to the sums already paid him for salary for that period.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOLDSMITH BROTHERS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back adversely Senate bill No. 151, for the relief of Goldsmith Brothers, of the cities of San Francisco, California, and Portland, Oregon, brokers; and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES HOOPER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 436, for the relief of James Hooper, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Hooper the sum of $16,000, being the value of his vessel, the bark General Berry, which was captured and destroyed at sea on the 9th day of July, 1864, while in the military service of the United States, by the rebel steamer Florida.

Mr. HOLMAN. That bill should go to the Committee of the Whole House, as it makes an appropriation. I think it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that this bill, making an appropriation, it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The Chair sustains the point of order. It will, therefore, be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

ALBERT GRANT.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 367, for the relief of Albert Grant, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It appropriates $30,000 to Albert Grant, in full satisfaction of all demands against the United States on account of the construction of buildings numbered twenty-nine, thirty, and thirty-one, at the Norfolk navy-yard, by Albert Grant and H. A. Pierce, who were partners, doing business under the name and style of A. Grant & Co.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That makes an appropriation, and should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. It does make an appropriation, and if insisted on must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COBB. I do not see why it should be referred to that committee.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I renew the point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Does not the renewal come too late?

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations covered the point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let us have the question stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the condition of the bill. When it was reported the gentleman from Missouri made the point of order that it contained an appropriation and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House. The gentleman from Massachusetts moved at the same time that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Missouri then withdrew his point of order, and the gentleman from Massachusetts stated that he intended his motion to cover the point of order. The Chair thereupon entertained the point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I submit to the House whether these bills should all go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] was on the floor. Of course the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] could make his point of order, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] did not yield to his colleague to make the motion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that when the point of order is made that a bill contains an appropriation it is in order for any member to move its reference to any other committee than the Committee of the Whole. That motion was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The only doubt the Chair has is whether that motion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations should not stand instead of the objection to its consideration in the House.

Mr. COBB. I am satisfied with the ruling, but—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule that the gentleman from Massachusetts, having made a motion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations, that motion must stand; and if rejected, the point of order comes too late.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Let me say that the Committee of Claims have no particular interest in this matter. The committee have spent considerable time in examining this bill, which has passed the Senate by the unanimous recommendation of the Committee of Claims there, and have reported it to the House without a dissenting voice. Now, if it is the desire of the House to refer all the bills that the Committee of Claims have reported to the Committee on Appropriations, then I have nothing to do but to submit. But there is no reason why this bill should be referred any more than others that we have examined, and unless there is some special reason given for its reference I trust it will not be referred. I would like to hear my colleague state any reason he may have for its reference.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The reason why I named the Committee on Appropriations was that the bill contains an appropriation of money. I do not desire to make any opposition to it. The Committee on Appropriations can report at any time, whereas the bill might be lost if it is referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAINE. The Committee on Appropriations can report at any time only for reference, not for action.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. They cannot report private bills at any time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I only wish to state that the reason my colleague assigns applies to every bill reported from our committee. I do not know that there is a bill that we report which does not contain a greater or less amount of appropriation, and he has stated that there is no reason for the reference of this bill except that it contains an appropriation. I do not wish to take up any further time, and therefore I move the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If my colleague says he has examined this case, and knows it is right, I have so much confidence in him that I withdraw my objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABEDNEGO B. ROWDEN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1319) for the relief of Abednego B. Rowden, late second lieutenant eleventh Tennessee cavalry; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs that there be paid to the applicant the pay of second lieutenant from August 31, 1863, to December 5, 1864, deducting such sum as may have been paid him in a lower grade of military service for that period, he having performed the service after promotion, but, having been captured in the line of duty and imprisoned, he failed to be mustered in.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the general bill which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs the other day and printed will not cover this case?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know. I will state to the House the action of the Committee of Claims on this case, and another which we have like it, and if it is covered by the general bill referred to by the gentleman we shall not ask its passage. It is a case in which an officer of the Army was commissioned to a higher rank, and his commission was sent to him, but before he was mustered in under that commission to the higher rank he was taken prisoner and lay in a rebel prison for several months. He was afterward released and returned to his regiment and was mustered in, dating from the time he returned. Under these circumstances the committee thought it was not fair that because of his misfortune in being taken prisoner he should lose his pay for the rank which he would have filled if he had not been taken prisoner.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state in a few sentences the provisions of the general bill which the Committee on Military Affairs have prepared and are only waiting to be called to report, and the gentleman can see if it covers this case.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Well, if there is no objection to this bill, let it pass.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say that there are fifty or sixty of these cases before the Committee on Military Affairs, and we concluded to draw up a general bill very carefully to cover such cases as ought to be covered rather than to pass special bills. We have drawn up a bill to this effect: that a commission shall be considered to have been received when it reached the headquarters of the regiment or corps in which he was serving, and if he was on the duty of the rank to which he was commissioned at the time the commission was received and was captured and taken away he shall be mustered in as of the date when the commission was received at headquarters. I think that perfectly covers these cases, and I hope the gentleman will let this bill lie over until action can be had on the general bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I will ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee of Claims, with the privilege of reporting it back at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that will be done, and then if our bill does not cover this case the gentleman can report the bill back.

There was no objection; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee of Claims, with leave to report it back at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have a bill of the same character for the relief of Charles C. McCreary. I ask that it be placed on the same footing.

There was no objection, and leave was given to the committee to report the bill at any time.

MERCHANT AND ROSECRANZ.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1820) for the relief of L. Merchant & Co. and Peter Rosecranz; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Leander Merchant, of the firm of L. Merchant & Co., the sum of $109,412 81 for certain cotton, the property of said firm, taken erroneously and without due authority by agents of the United States, the civil and military authorities at Mobile, Alabama, in the month of April, 1865, shipped to New York, sold by the United States, and the proceeds thereof paid into the Treasury, the charges and expenses of the United States having been deducted therefrom. It proposes further to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Peter Rosecranz the sum of $39,253 10, the proceeds of the sale of forty-one bales of cotton, the private property of said Rosecranz, taken, sold, and appropriated at the same time and place and in the same manner, the charges and expenses of the United States having likewise been deducted therefrom.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I make the point of order on that bill that it makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The bill contains an appropriation, and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS.

Mr. WASHBURN of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, also reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, Senate bill No. 307, for the relief of certain Government contractors.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MAYNARD. I raise the point of order that this is an appropriation bill, and must, under the rule, receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURN of Massachusetts. I wish the gentleman would withdraw his point of order for a moment until I can make a statement in regard to this bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman should make his statement; but I would suggest to him that he will be merely consuming so much of his morning hour.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will renew the point of order, no matter what explanation may be made.

Mr. WASHBURN of Massachusetts. The House will understand that if this bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole it will be laid up for this session, as it is not likely that it can be reached.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think it ought to be laid up for this session; I think that would be the proper disposition of it.

Mr. MAYNARD. There is but little on the Private Calendar, and we can soon dispose of the matters there.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES N. GOULDING.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee of Claims, reported back Senate bill No. 251, for the relief of Charles N. Goulding, late quartermaster of volunteers, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to allow and place to the credit of Charles N. Goulding, late captain and assistant quartermaster, in the final settlement of his accounts as such officer, such amounts and sums as he shall satisfactorily prove to have been captured, either in money or vouchers, by the enemy in the month of August, 1862, while on duty in the army of Virginia, under Major General John Pope; provided that no greater amount for losses shall so be passed to his credit than the balance now appearing against him on the books of the Government.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. COBB. There is no report in this case.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will make some explanation of this bill.

Mr. COBB. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] and of the House, that this gentleman, Charles N. Goulding, was first chief quartermaster under General Rosecrans; then chief quartermaster under General Fremont, and afterward chief quartermaster under General Pope. During the time he was serving in these several capacities he paid out, under competent authority, for the purchase of forage, horses, &c., $108,162 44, for which he took the proper and necessary vouchers. He had these vouchers with him in his safe on the 22d of August, 1862, at Catlett's Station, Virginia, when the headquarter's train, including the quartermaster himself, his safe, and all the property, public and private, in the safe, was captured by the rebel General Stuart. In the safe, besides the vouchers for the amount I have named, were Government funds to the amount of $4,844 57. These vouchers were for property for which money was paid, the property having been turned over to other officers, and has been accounted for in their returns.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does this bill include the $4,000 in money?

Mr. COBB. It was in his safe, and was taken out by the rebel Stuart, as is fully proved by witnesses.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is not that establishing the principle of paying for money captured by the rebels?

Mr. COBB. I do not know that that question was ever raised where proof of the capture was clear and conclusive.

Mr. PAINE. I do not understand that this money was the private property of the officer.

Mr. COBB. By no means; it was Government funds.

Mr. PAINE. Then it does not come under the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

Mr. COBB. These charges are made to the debit of this officer on the books of the Government. In addition to these vouchers there was captured a large amount of Government property, for which this officer was responsible. The Department has allowed for the Government property, but the money and money vouchers cannot be allowed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am sorry the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COBB] has not put his explanation in the shape of a report to go upon the records of the House. I think in all these cases there should be a written report setting out fully the principle upon which the claims are allowed.

Mr. COBB. I assure the gentleman that the Committee of Claims are not inclined to be very liberal in allowing claims.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is unnecessary for me to say that I have the utmost confidence in the Committee of Claims; but I think the suggestion I make is one worthy of being entertained by that committee.

Mr. COBB. I have no doubt it will be considered by them.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE D. BLAKEY.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee of Claims, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 314) for the relief of George D. Blakey, late collector of the second district of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit George D. Blakey, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Kentucky, with such sums of money, not exceeding $1,445, as shall appear from evidence to be submitted to the proper accounting officers to have been taken by robbery by armed bands of rebel guerrillas from Elias Dunbar and Dory Nell, deputy collectors for Blakey in the counties of Russell and Monroe, in the months of February and April, 1865.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUSAN CARSON.

Mr. BAKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1821) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Carson; which was read a first and second time, and referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MAJOR F. F. STEVENS.

Mr. HARDING, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1822) for the relief of Major F. F. Stevens, assistant paymaster United States Army, Wisconsin volunteers; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the proper accounting officers of the Paymaster General's office and the Treasury Department, in the settlement of the accounts of Major F. F. Stevens, late an assistant paymaster of the United States Army, credit him with $3,078 63, as of the 1st of April, 1867, that amount of money being in his hands on that day and lost by the burning of the steamer Alabama on the Mississippi river; provided that in the opinion of the accounting officers the allowance should be made.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WALTER D. PLOWDEN.

Mr. HARDING, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1823) for the relief of Walter D. Plowden; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the proper officers of the War and Treasury Departments to allow and pay to Walter D. Plowden $1,000 for services as a scout spy, and in consideration of his long confinement in rebel prisons for being a Union man.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the bill be modified by striking out the words "proper officers of the War and Treasury Departments" and inserting "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. HARDING. I have no objection to that. I yield for three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HAWKINS. An examination of this case reveals this state of facts: this man went into the Army, not into the service of the United States, but as the servant of an officer, and, after remaining in the service of that officer for some time, and with other officers in the same capacity, in 1862 he went into one of the hospitals as steward or waiter or in some position of that kind. He never served as a soldier. While about the hospital he was sent once or twice into the rebel lines and brought back contrabands, sometimes one thing and sometimes another. There was no evidence that he was regularly employed as a spy. This is to give him $1,000, when he was never in the Army as a soldier. He was there as a servant, not as a soldier. It will be unjust to those who did serve as soldiers to make this appropriation, and I hope it will be rejected.

Mr. HARDING. The gentleman is mistaken. His remarks do not apply to this man. There is nothing in reference to this man having been in the hospital. He has reference to some other man.

Mr. HAWKINS. I have reference to this identical man. There was a paper showing his connection with the hospital, but I do not know whether it is there now or not.

Mr. HARDING. We have the testimony of Major General Hunter and of other officers in favor of this man. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HARDING, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the memorial and evidence of Walter D. Plowden, makes the following report:

That claimant, who was born a slave in Washington county, Maryland, emancipated in early life, found his way to the city of New York, and, in 1861, at the breaking out of the rebellion, accompanied the forty-third regiment New York volunteers as servant to Major White, surgeon of the regiment, into South Carolina.

After the discharge and muster out of Major White, with whom he had gained a large experience with the colored people and the troops on the coast, he was employed by Major General Hunter, then in command of the Federal forces at Beaufort and Hilton Head, as a scout and spy, and as a guide in various expeditions from the coast into the interior of the State.

In the spring of 1863 he was sent by night on a secret expedition, with a row-boat and eight colored men, up the Combahee river one hundred and thirty-one miles to the crossing of the Charleston and Savannah railroad, in the vicinity of the Pocotaligo, from which he returned in five days, reporting the condition of the bridges and trussel work, and the strength of the military guard of the enemy at that crossing.

Immediately following, he accompanied the well-known expedition of Colonel Montgomery, thirty-fourth United States colored troops, against Pocotaligo, as a guide, which was successful in the destruction of the railroad bridge and the release from slavery and the service of the enemy of eight hundred colored men and a large amount of property, which were used by the United States Government. Soon thereafter, in May, 1863, he was sent on a third expedition as a scout and spy to the Coosawatchie river, with a boat and five colored men, with orders to cut the telegraph on the Savannah and Charleston railroad at Gardner's Corners, the crossing of the railroad over the Coosawatchie. This bridge was so strongly guarded that after several efforts, by night, to cut the wires, the attempt was abandoned, and the expedition was unsuccessful.

In June following he was sent up the Ashepoo with a boat and eight colored men, and was perfectly successful in setting the bridge of the Savannah and Charleston railroad on fire and burning it up. The rebel guard attacked his little crew in their flight, and they barely made their escape.

In July following he was sent up the Broad river with a boat and eight colored men, making progress by night, and scouting out into the country to the camps of the enemy by day, taking observations of the location and strength of picket posts, and the position of military forts and works of the rebels. He returned with all this information to General Hunter. Immediately thereafter he accompanied General Benham's expedition up the Broad river to Chisholm's Landing, as guide and spy. The force was four gunboats and a brigade of troops, which inflicted serious punishment for two days to the rebels, capturing prisoners and destroying military works and material of war.

After his return from this expedition he was sent ten miles within the rebel lines from the main land at Hilton Head, and returned bringing information to General Saxton, by which he captured the rebel pickets on the next day.

In September following he was sent as foot spy to Bluffton, within the rebel lines, and returned with the information which led to its immediate capture by General Hunter. He accompanied the troops as guide to Bluffton.

In December following he was sent as spy up Stono inlet to Waupo cut for information as to the condition of the rebel ram there building, and which was expected to come out of the inlet very shortly. On this expedition, for want of sufficient force to out-row the rebels, he was captured in his flight from Waupo cut, when he was almost within shot of the Pawnee the Federal man-of-war, to which he hoped to escape, lying at the mouth of the inlet.

He was put into prison at Charleston, January 2, 1864, and closely confined, without food but just sufficient to support life, for more than fifteen months, and was released when General Sherman's army marched into South Carolina.

In this service he invariably reported to General Hunter, General Saxton, General Benham, or General Terry, and received nothing as pay except the necessary outfit of arms and subsistence.

The committee have carefully collected this history from Major General Hunter himself, from General O. O. Howard, and from Chaplain Mansfield French, who was present and had knowledge of the circumstances here detailed.

At the time when this claimant was employed by General Hunter that officer states that he had not in his possession secret service money in order to pay him, and that he is well aware that he never was paid for the important services thus rendered.

Owing to his captivity the claimant lost his health and strength, and now remains broken and almost physically incapacitated from manual labor.

From these considerations, the committee recommend that a bill be passed for his relief, appropriating $1,000 in compensation for his services as scout and spy in South Carolina during the war for the suppression of the slaveholder's rebellion.

Mr. HARDING. I now ask the Clerk to read the letter of General Hunter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEAR GENERAL: The bearer, Walter D. Plowden, a colored man from South Carolina, was in my employ as a spy when I commanded during the rebellion in that State. He was sent a number of times within the rebel lines, always bringing valuable information, until he was finally captured and detained as a prisoner. Plowden never received compensation for his services, and is now an applicant to Congress for remuneration. I do not know of any more just claim against the Government; and if you can assist him you will greatly oblige me, and confer a great favor on a very worthy man.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

D. HUNTER.

Brevet Major General United States Army.

General A. C. HARDING,

United States House of Representatives.

Mr. HARDING. I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 42.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HARDING were appointed.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 51.

So the House refused to second the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the bill be recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING. I move that the report be printed in the Globe.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY HARRIS.

Mr. HARDING, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1824) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Harris, of Oregon; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out of any money not otherwise appropriated the sum of $786 30 to the applicant, widow of George W. Harris, late of the State of Oregon, in her own right, for supplies furnished and services rendered volunteers in the Oregon Indian war of 1856.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

B. B. FRENCH.

Mr. MERCUR, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1325) for the relief of B. B. French; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to B. B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings, for service performed from the 2d to the 14th days of March, 1867, inclusive, for which he has not been paid, the sum of eighty-five dollars.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Read the report.

Mr. MERCUR. There is a report, but I will state the facts in a word. On the 2d of March, 1867, Congress passed a law abolishing the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings, but no military officer was detailed to take charge of the office until the 14th of March. The Secretary of the Interior requested Mr. French to retain possession of it during that interval, which he did. The Secretary of the Treasury declined paying him for that service. This bill proposes to pay him for those twelve days' service. I demand the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I raise the point of order that this contains an appropriation, and must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. The objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that the objection comes too late.

Mr. UPSON. I desire to ask the gentleman what service Mr. French performed.

Mr. MERCUR. He took charge of the records and continued to discharge the duties of the office for twelve days.

Mr. UPSON. I understand the duties were simply nominal.

Mr. MERCUR. He was requested by the Secretary of the Interior to retain possession, and he did, so far as he could, discharge all of the duties during the interval. The sum appropriated is a very small one, a meager pittance only, being the amount which his salary would amount to for so many days.

Mr. MAYNARD. It seems to me if the Chair will consider a moment his ruling, he will find that it prevents any bill from being sent to the Committee of the Whole, because if the point of order must be made before anything is heard on the subject of the bill no objection will be likely to be made. It is only after we have heard a bill explained a little that we must decide whether it should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman renews the point of order. The Chair again overrules it on the ground that the point must be made when bills are reported at the Clerk's desk. After debate has commenced, if it is only one sentence, it is too late. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MERCUR] rose to explain the bill, and proceeded some time before the gentleman made the point of order.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the previous question will not be sustained.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MERCUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MERCUR, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following cases, and the same were laid on the table:

The petition of Howland Hemphill, for relief;

The petition of James Crux, for compensation for property taken and destroyed by the Army of the United States;

The petition of Thomas H. Mules;

The petition of John H. Garges;

House bill No. 709, for the relief of Margaret Ward;

The petition of J. S. Jackson;

The petition of Mary G. Williams, of Cumberland county, Kentucky, praying for compensation for a horse pressed by the United States authorities; and House joint resolution No. 76, for the relief of Gallus Kirchner.

ANTHONY BUCHER.

Mr. HARDING, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1326) for the relief of Anthony Bucher; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

EXCUSED FROM COMMITTEE SERVICE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ROBINSON was excused from further service on the Committee on Foreign Affairs and on the Committee on the Expenditures of the Treasury Department.

ANDREW S. CORE.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. No. 522) to authorize the Commissioner of the Revenue to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core.

The bill was read. It proposes to authorize and direct the Commissioner of the Revenue to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Virginia, now West Virginia, upon the principles of justice and equity.

The amendments reported by the Committee of Ways and Means were, in line three to strike out the words "Commissioner of the Revenue is" and insert in lieu thereof the words "proper accounting officers of the Treasury are," and to make a corresponding amendment in the title.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will not take time to explain the facts. I will merely say that the Committee of Ways and Means were unanimous in the recommendation that the bill pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House the amount of public money on deposit in national banks at the end of each month from October 31, 1867, specifying the total amount so deposited at the end of each month and the amount in each bank at the same date.

Mr. POMEROY. I object.

TAX ON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. BROOKS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1327) to amend an act entitled "An act to exempt certain manufactures from internal tax, and for other purposes," approved March 31, 1868; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

PURCHASE OF RUSSIAN AMERICA.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I gave notice to the House some days since that after the tax bill was disposed of I should move to take up the bill appropriating money for the purchase of Russian America. The gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WASHBURN,] one of the minority of the committee opposed to the passage of the bill, has been appointed by the Speaker to some service which requires his absence on Monday, and he desires that that bill may not be taken up until Tuesday; and, with the consent of the House, I should be glad that it may be postponed for his accommodation until Tuesday next.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. The bill is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and can only be reached by a vote passing over all the other business which has precedence. It has been said that the enemies of this bill intend to make factious opposition to it, and, if possible, pass it over until the next session of Congress. So far as I know anything on the subject they have no such intention. They desire to meet the question now, and to meet it upon its merits. As was stated by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I expect to be absent for a day or two, and as I understand from him that he does not intend to call the previous question until those who are opposed to the bill shall have had an opportunity to be heard, I shall make no opposition to the bill coming up on Tuesday or on Wednesday; I would rather say Wednesday.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope Tuesday will be the day agreed upon, and for this reason: I hope on Monday next to be able to report from the Committee on Appropriations the deficiency bill, and I will ask that it be made the special order for Wednesday next. Therefore I hope it will suit the House to make the Alaska bill the special order for Tuesday.

Mr. PAINE. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.] A proposition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs by the House to consider the claim of the estate of Mr. Perkins, who sold a large quantity of powder, of the value of several hundred thousand dollars, to the Russian Government during the Crimean war, for which no payment was ever made. It was thought the duty of the Government of the United States to look after the claim of a citizen of the United States against, not a citizen of Russia, but the Russian Government. Although I have very little knowledge concerning the case, it seems to me it is but fair that the committee should look into that matter and report upon it to this House, so that we may know whether we are in duty bound in this matter to protect the interest of a citizen of the United States. And I would ask whether it is the purpose of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to present to this House at the same time, or before they present the bill appropriating money for the purchase of Alaska, a report on this claim of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BANKS. It was the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that the claim referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] could not be offset against the money appropriated under a treaty, which treaty requires the payment of a stipulated sum and in a stipulated manner. And the representatives of the claim have presented to the committee a resolution the passage of which will be satisfactory to them. I think the committee will agree unanimously to report that resolution. I am willing to state, for the satisfaction of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that I will recommend the passage of that resolution; but I cannot agree to make it a part of this question.

Mr. PAINE. What I was most anxious for was a report as to the facts of the case. I do not know that I would vote for such a resolution.

Mr. BANKS. A report of the facts will accompany the resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] if he intends to call the previous question on the bill soon after it comes up?

Mr. BANKS. I do not; I desire to have the subject fully considered and discussed.

The SPEAKER. As the bill is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the previous question cannot be called on it until it has been reported to the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. What is the proposition now? To make it the special order for Wednesday or Tuesday?

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent that it be made the special order for Tuesday next after the morning hour.

Mr. ALLISON. If the river and harbor bill is disposed of before that time.

The SPEAKER. The river and harbor bill will take precedence if not disposed of by that time.

No objection was made; and it was ordered accordingly.

BLACK RIVER BRIDGE, OHIO.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce House bill No. 1027, to authorize the construction of a bridge over Black river, in Lorain county, Ohio, with a substitute. It is for an unimportant bridge over an unimportant stream in the State of Ohio.

No objection was made; and the bill was received.

The substitute was read. The first section provides that it shall be lawful for the county commissioners of the county of Lorain, State of Ohio, to build a bridge across the Black river, near the village of Black river, at the point where the county road leading east from the village crosses the stream; provided there shall be placed in said bridge a draw of not less than one hundred and forty feet in width, with a center abutment twenty-five feet wide and ten feet above the water line, having a passage on each side of the abutment of not less than fifty-seven feet in width, and so constructed as not to impede the navigation of said river, but to allow the easy passage of vessels through the draw. The second section reserves the right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of the river by the construction of the bridge.

The substitute reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended by the adoption of the substitute, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EGGLESTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—SWITZLER VS. ANDERSON.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to give notice that on Monday after the morning hour I shall call up the report of the Committee of Elections on the case of Switzler vs. Anderson, from the sixth district of Missouri.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. SPALDING. I give notice that at the first opportunity, after the river and harbor bill has been disposed of, I shall endeavor to bring before the House the two bills making appropriations for benevolent institutions in this District.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. DELANO. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill (H. R. No. 1046) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, and for other purposes. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce with instructions to report a substitute.

Mr. DELANO. I have made some slight modifications in my substitute. I ask the Clerk to read it as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: That the following amounts of money are hereby appropriated to be expended by the Secretary of War, under the advice of the Bureau of Engineers, for the repair and preservation of certain harbors, for the improvement of certain rivers, and for the protection of existing works of improvement from deterioration, and for such extension of the same and the continuation and completion of works under contract as the safety of commerce at their respective places may demand:

For the improvement of harbors on the northern lakes and for the St. Clair flats, $500,000.

For the improvement of harbors on the sea-coast, $150,000.

For the improvement of rivers, $1,300,000.

For the completion of reports, maps, and diagrams on bridges on the Mississippi river, $3,000, and for purchase and repair of instruments, $1,000, and for a survey for deepening the ship-canal at Sault Ste. Marie, $1,000.

And be it further enacted, That all work done under the authority of this act shall be performed under contract to be made with the Secretary of War, who shall prescribe suitable rules for issuing proposals for materials or labor, having regard to the most effective use of moneys hereby appropriated: Provided, That separate proposals and contracts shall be required in all cases when the same can be, in the judgment of the Secretary, judiciously and properly made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. DELANO. I will do so.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few remarks upon this bill and the proposition which has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] the more particularly as the remarks of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] have—I do not say intentionally—tended to prejudice the House in reference to my position on this subject. I do not think I can better state my position than by reading a brief extract from the views which I have heretofore submitted as expressing the reasons of my dissent from the opinions of my colleagues on the committee. Before referring to that document I will say a single word. I do not deny that this bill proposes appropriations for many objects which I think meritorious and worthy the approval of the House. But I am opposed to the measure as a whole; and although it contains items in which my constituents have the greatest possible interest, items of the greatest possible merit, yet rather than consent that those meritorious propositions shall be used to carry through all the riff-raff in this bill, I will vote against the whole bill and take the responsibility before my constituents.

In the statement to which I have already referred I said:

"My first objection is, that there is no money in the Treasury to meet the amount appropriated by the bill, and I am opposed to borrowing money for the purpose of meeting appropriations which are not absolutely required for the public interest. The amount appropriated and assumed by this bill is $6,150,500. With the reduction of taxes and the robberies of the revenue by whiskey, tobacco, custom-house, and other rings, the receipts of revenue must inevitably fall short of the amounts appropriated by Congress, and the credit of the Government will be ruined, and we will be disgraced as a nation.

Though it is a bad time for the Government to extend this system of improvement of rivers and harbors, I am willing to make reasonable appropriations for continuing operations on works of national importance, and for harbors of refuge for the protection of commerce. Many of the items in the bill are for merely local improvements, and in which commerce has no general interest, and I am opposed to taking money out of the public Treasury for the purpose of benefiting particular localities, and which would be no benefit to the public at large."

I now wish to call attention of the House to what we are entering upon if we pass this bill. I wish the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] would tell the House the amount of appropriations which we are committed to by the passage of this bill. The second item in the appropriation is $40,000 for the improvement of the Wisconsin river. Now, General Warren estimates that to complete the work will cost from two to three million dollars.

But look down a little further. "For improvement of the harbor of Ontonagon, Lake Superior, $20,000." It will take $292,000 to complete that work, and we shall have another appropriation to make at the next session, and so on session after session clear through. Then we have "for improvement of Pere Marquette harbor, Michigan, $20,000." It will take, according to the report of the engineer department, $385,000 for that.

But I cannot go through with all these items in five minutes. I wish gentlemen to look at the bill, and tell us if they can what they know about them. For instance, here is the harbor of Pere Marquette, in Michigan. Where is Pere Marquette? What interest have the people at large in making an appropriation of $20,000 for this harbor for a work which is going to cost $385,000? I believe there is scarcely a settlement at that place. We are appropriating money for a harbor for the benefit of parties interested and in which the public have no general interest at all. Again, where is Muskegon harbor? What do we know about that?

Mr. FERRY. Does the gentleman ask for information?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELIOT. I propose to answer the inquiries of the gentleman from Illinois as well as I can in the time allotted to me. He wants to know where the harbor of Pere Marquette is. Why, sir, in 1866 he had an appropriation in his bill for the harbor of Marquette, in the State of Michigan.

Mr. EGGLESTON. And voted for it, too.

Mr. ELIOT. And the gentleman last year and the year before voted for an appropriation for that same point.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is the gentleman certain of that?

Mr. ELIOT. Will the gentleman deny it? He will find if he looks at the records that he reported a bill—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I want to know whether the gentleman refers to Marquette or Pere Marquette?

Mr. ELIOT. I did not undertake to interrupt the gentleman when he was speaking, and I do not propose to be interrupted myself. I see in that "one-horse" bill which the chairman of the committee [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois] has reported no principle upon which it can be justified. If there is no money in the Treasury then let the bill which the committee has reported be laid on the table. If there is no money, and nothing can be appropriated, then let us appropriate nothing. But in reference to the bill which the gentleman himself has reported, after long deliberation, from the minority of the committee, there is no theory upon which it can be defended that will not also justify the appropriations asked for in the bill which the majority of the committee has reported.

The gentleman says we are entering upon a course of large expenditure. Do we not all understand that that must necessarily be so, and that it was so when we first determined upon these works in the Thirty-Sixth Congress? Do not gentlemen understand that the policy of improving rivers and harbors in this country must involve the expenditure of a large amount of money? I say we ought, as one of the natural, proper, and regular expenses of the Government, to appropriate some three million five hundred thousand to four million dollars annually for these works for some years to come. We are met every year with this same opposition.

I agree now that the judgment of the House may as well be ascertained upon this proposition to recommit as to go on and debate the bill item by item. I do not propose to tell the gentleman from Illinois where Pere Marquette harbor is until we come to the discussion of the bill in its regular order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. He cannot tell.

Mr. ELIOT. I will tell the gentleman more than he knows; and when we come to the discussion of this appropriation, if I cannot defend it let it be rejected. I do not propose to take the bill up now and undertake in five minutes to defend it item by item.

Mr. FERRY. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] and tell him where Pere Marquette is?

Mr. ELIOT. Why, I suppose the gentleman from Illinois really knows; I suppose he knows something. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRY. I can show him the locality of Pere Marquette, and the necessity for the expenditure.

Mr. ELIOT. Go on, sir, if you will take my time.

Mr. FERRY. I do not wish to take the gentleman's time, but at the proper time I will seek to answer the gentleman, and state to the House not only where Pere Marquette is, but show the necessity for an appropriation in order to keep up the works that have been started by the Government, and prevent the waste of the appropriations already made.

Mr. ELIOT. I believe that there is no appropriation called for here that is not needed by the general interests of commerce. The gentleman from Illinois has always been of the belief that he now is, as I understand from him in his report, that appropriations ought not to be called for where local interests, and local interests only, are involved. I agree with the gentleman fully, and I will undertake, as far as I may, to satisfy the House on each of the items I have recommended that the general interests of commerce require that the appropriations shall be made. Whether we ought to spend one dollar now or postpone the whole thing is a question for the judgment of the House. In my belief it would be a policy most disastrous to the material interests of the country, and mainly of the West and of the Northwest, to postpone the work which has been commenced under the care and jurisdiction of the engineer department. Sir, I do not think that it can be needful for me to say more at this time on the general question.

Mr. PAINE. I move to amend the substitute by striking out the last word. I wish to reply more particularly to the remarks which have fallen from the lips of my friend from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.] I have in my hand his bill, reported by the minority of the committee. I am opposed to it. I am in favor of the bill now before the House reported by the committee. He tells us that he has within his own district, and in his own State, interests of the greatest magnitude which he would be glad to see fostered if they could be fairly and properly fostered by such a bill as this. But he is unwilling to ask Congress to gratify or benefit his constituents or the people of his State at such an expense to the country at large as would be involved in the other appropriations embraced in the bill of the committee; he is unwilling to saddle upon the country such an enormous expense, even for the purpose of securing for his own constituents and the people of his own State appropriations to which he believes them to be justly entitled. He is not willing that his claims, which he believes to be just, should carry so many claims which he believes to be unjust. Now, I ask the House to look at the bill reported by the minority of the committee, that is to say, by the gentleman from Illinois, and see how he is inclined to sacrifice the interests of his State and district in order to avoid overwhelming the country with the extravagant appropriations made by this bill. The bill contains, among others, twenty-two small appropriations for twenty-two harbors on Lake Michigan. They are cut down, some one half, some three fourths, some four fifths below the appropriations recommended by the proper officers of the engineer department. But when the gentleman comes in with his substitute, with his minority report, he omits twenty of those, notwithstanding they have been reduced one half or two thirds or more, and all of the twenty that he omits lie out of his own State. He puts in the only one that lies in his State, the harbor of Chicago, and he puts it in for the whole amount estimated by the board of engineers. Chicago stands in his bill for an appropriation of $48,000, the entire amount recommended by the chief of engineers in his first report, the highest amount estimated in any report.

Then, sir, if you turn to the other appropriations for his own State, you will find that he allows for operating dredge-boats on the upper Mississippi river $36,000; for the improvement of Des Moines rapids $400,000; for Rock Island rapids $100,000, and for the purpose of completing the reports, maps, and diagrams for bridges on the Mississippi river, $6,000. Now, I should like to know what interest of his constituents he has sacrificed for the benefit of the country? The fact is, that while he has cast off all the rest of us, this self-sacrificing gentleman has taken pains, in his substitute, the provisions of which will be practically carried out if the instructions moved by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] prevail, to secure every interest of his constituents, which he professes himself to be so willing and ready to sacrifice for the public good. Sir, I would rather see the virtue of economy exhibited in this House in some other direction and in some other spirit than that which will take away everything which my constituents and the people of my State need and turn it over to the people of a State so well represented by that distinguished gentleman. I make no complaint of the gentleman for seeking to promote the interests of his constituents and of the people of his State; but I do find fault with him for undertaking to secure for his constituents, and for the people of his State, under the specious guise of a public economy, all that he wants for them, and at the same time strip from us all that we want and which we so imperatively need.

Mr. PILE. The precise question before the House, as I understand it, is the substitution of the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] for the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce. Now, I am opposed to any such substitution, and I rise to oppose the amendment for the purpose of making a few remarks on the general question.

I wish the House to bear in mind that the question before them is not the adoption of the substitute in whole, or the adoption of this bill in whole. If there are items in this bill which are not meritorious, and for which no appropriation should be made, then as each successive item comes up and the facts are stated it can be retained or stricken out by the House acting on the bill as in Committee of the Whole, according as the merits of each case may seem to require. And if it be true, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] says, that there are some items in that bill for which appropriations ought not to be made, as may be the case, he and other gentlemen can oppose them, and when the facts are stated the House can act upon them. But if the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] is adopted, and this bill is recommitted to the Committee on Commerce with instructions to report a bill in accordance with the substitute he has proposed, the effect will be to confine the committee and the House to the subjects embraced in that substitute when it is brought back into the House. Now, I want to know if the House cannot judge as well of each successive item in this bill as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] or the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN]?

But I have another objection to this substitute. It proposes to appropriate $1,300,000 for rivers and for Hell Gate; that is, for all the rivers of the United States; and leaves it discretionary with the Secretary of War where the appropriation shall be expended. Now, we do not know, judging from our experience in the past, who will be Secretary of War in one, two, or three months from this time. Every dollar of that appropriation may be expended upon some single work, in this or that locality, to the injury of public works now in process of completion, and which will be destroyed unless work upon them shall be prosecuted during the coming season. Cannot this House judge where appropriations are needed, and what amounts are required? And is it not far safer to discuss the different items here and make the specific appropriations than to make in a single gross sum an appropriation for all the rivers of the country, leaving it to be expended here or there, its disposition to be affected by the influence and log-rollings that may be brought to bear upon the Secretary of War through the Bureau of Engineers. I think that this House, upon the information furnished by the Committee on Commerce, who have gone over this whole field and understand all the facts, ought to decide upon and designate specific appropriations for each public work, as the necessities of the case may require. We should not make one general appropriation, embracing the whole river improvements of the country, leaving that appropriation to be expended upon one or two works to the exclusion of all others.

I hope, sir, that the motion to recommit will be voted down. The Committee on Commerce have gone over this whole subject, and they have brought in a bill giving the items of appropriation—such a bill as they believe is required by the country for the completion of works of improvement already in progress, and for the commencement of new ones.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAILEY. I move to amend the substitute so that it shall read as follows:

One million dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys not already appropriated, for the preservation of public works commenced, for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and for the performance of contracts heretofore legally made by the Government for such works, which money is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment with an earnest hope that the House will adopt it. It seems to me the alternative now presented to us is this: either we must pass this bill with its appropriations to the amount of six millions and more, or we must mutually agree that the whole subject shall be postponed. On this point I fully concur with the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELLOR.] I do not believe any other proposition can prevail. If this bill is postponed, my own State must suffer from such a course more, perhaps, than any other State; but unless we are willing thus mutually to give up what we want, we must pass the whole bill. I therefore say that we had better give up the bill. Most assuredly, sir, this House ought not to pass this appropriation of over six million dollars. The money is not in the Treasury. Every penny of every dollar of this $6,000,000 must be drawn from the productive industry of the country by taxation. In the present circumstances of the country there is absolutely no justification for any appropriation of money except under the plea of absolute necessity.

Sir, I am not opposed to internal improvements; I know how desirable many of these works are; but I submit that that is not the question now to be considered. Other considerations imperatively demand the attention of Congress and of the country. When we shall have reestablished the material prosperity of the land; when we shall have restored the credit of the Government to its normal position, then, and not till then, ought we to undertake works like these. This is no time, Mr. Speaker, to talk about liberality and generosity. There is no liberality, no generosity that wants the element of justice; and will any one tell me that it is at this time just to tax our people to the amount of six or seven millions for the commencement of works of internal improvement? No, sir; it is not just, and the people will never so regard it.

Now, I insist that, as a practical question, we must either pass this bill, embracing appropriations of $6,000,000, or we must agree to postpone the subject, and merely—

Mr. EGGLESTON. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. The bill does not appropriate $6,000,000.

Mr. BAILEY. It appropriates over six million dollars.

Mr. EGGLESTON. Only $4,580,000.

Mr. BAILEY. I have not time to permit myself to be interrupted. I desire to ask members of this House when they intend to begin to practice economy? We are always willing to apply our economical principles to something indefinite, something not immediately before us; but when shall we apply them to an actual case? Here is a case in which we can, without injury to the public interests, save the country at least $6,000,000. Shall we do it?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to a statement made by Governor Seymour in his recent speech at the Cooper Institute in the city of New York. In arraighing the Republican party for extravagance he makes the following declaration, as reported in the New York World, which I hold in my hand:

"Since the war closed in 1865 the Government has spent for its expenses, in addition to its payment on principal or interest of public debt, more than one thousand million dollars. Of this sum there has been nearly eight hundred millions spent on the Army and Navy and for military purposes. This is nearly one third of the national debt. This was spent in time of peace."

The charge thus brought by Governor Seymour is that in the three years that have transpired since the war closed our Army and Navy have cost us eight hundred million dollars, or at the rate of nearly two hundred and seventy millions per annum in time of profound peace. The statement is cunningly made with the evident purpose of misleading the public mind, for while it is quite true that the military and naval expenses since the close of the war have been eight hundred million dollars, it is absolutely untrue that they have been two hundred and seventy millions per annum.

When the war closed by the surrender of Lee on the 9th of April, 1865, the armies of the Union bore the names of nearly a million men on the rolls, and our Navy in its vast and widely-extended duty of blockading three thousand miles of coast, had nearly five hundred vessels in service, with a corresponding number of men. The first result of Grant's magnificent series of victories and final triumph over the rebellion was to muster out these countless hosts which had borne our standard with such glory on the land and on the sea. Months of pay were due to more than half the Army; the well earned closing bounty was due to all, and the sailors, besides their back pay, were to receive millions of prize money honestly their own. The vast and almost incalculable amount needed to be provided for these purposes must be had at once, and thanks to the patriotism and the wealth of our people it was had at once. I have this morning visited the Treasury Department, and by the official statements which I hold in my hand it appears that the disbursements for the Army and Navy for the one hundred and seventy-four days following Grant's closing victory amounted to six hundred and twenty-five million dollars. Hence it will be seen that more than three fourths of the eight hundred millions so triumphantly paraded by Governor Seymour as the War and Navy expenses of the past three years were really disbursed almost in one sum at the close of hostilities as the necessary expenses of mustering out our enormous military and naval forces. To supply this vast sum the current receipts of the Government were consumed, and the people directly advanced five hundred and thirty millions by subscribing that amount to the ever-memorable seven-thirty loan.

Do Governor Seymour and his friends find fault with the expenditure thus incurred in mustering out the Army? Do they begrudge the soldiers their back pay and bounty, and the sailors their hard-earned wages and their prize money? If not, let them cease to attack the Republicans for promptly discharging the honorary debts of the Republic, for thus gladly paying the men who risked their lives to save the life of the nation.

Six hundred and twenty-five millions of Governor Seymour's eight hundred millions being thus expended in mustering out the volunteers, his own figures show that the current and legitimate expense of both Army and Navy for the past three years of peace have been but one hundred and seventy-five million dollars, or a little more than fifty-eight millions per annum for both branches of the service. The Governor's figures thus reduced are not far from the truth, and they show a degree of economy quite unknown in Democratic times. Take the year 1858 for example, in the administration of Mr. Buchanan, and we find that the expenses of the Navy were fourteen millions, and of the Army nearly twenty-six millions—for the two well nigh forty millions—and that was in gold, and with an Army and Navy of less numbers than have been deemed necessary for the security of the public peace during the past three years. Taking the difference in the amount of force and the fact that the expenditures of Mr. Buchanan's administration were in coin and the present expenditure in paper, it will be seen that the result shows strongly in favor of the economy of Army expenses as administered by General Grant. The Army to-day in fact costs much less per regiment in paper than it cost per regiment in gold under the last Democratic Administration. So much for Governor Seymour's figures.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend by reducing the appropriation $5,000. In the first place I desire to refer to this matter of Pere Marquette, upon which I was so flatly contradicted by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT], who said that an appropriation for Pere Marquette was in the last river and harbor bill passed by this House, and that I voted for it. I have that bill before me, and I can find in it no such appropriation; and more than that, I was not in the country when the bill was passed.

Mr. ELIOT. I referred to the bill passed when the gentleman was in the country.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let the gentleman produce the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. Why does the gentleman refer to a bill which he knows is not the bill I referred to?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman wishes to have it understood that the appropriation for Pere Marquette was in a bill for which I voted. Such is not the fact.

Mr. ELIOT. I did not say the gentleman voted for a bill passed when he was on the other side of the Atlantic.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I wish to reply to my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.] I was astonished that, in alluding to this matter, he should evince an unfairness which does not belong to his character. Why did he not tell the House that Minnesota and Iowa and other States have just as much interest as the State of Illinois in the improvement of the Des Moines and Rock Island rapids? Why did not the gentleman tell the House that in the bill of the committee there is appropriated $1,100,000 for those two works? And why did he not tell the House that in the bill proposed by me I cut down those appropriations to $500,000?

Mr. PAINE. I would simply say, in answer to that remark, that while the gentleman cut them down, he did not serve them as he did the appropriations for harbors on the lakes, for those he cut out altogether.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. One million dollars have been spent upon that work which is now in progress, and there must be an appropriation to carry it forward, or we shall lose to a great extent what has already been expended. Now, sir, I do not pretend to be indifferent to the interests of my own State; but I believe that my course heretofore has shown that I am as quick to resist an appropriation for my own State as for any other State when I believe the appropriation is not demanded by the public interests.

I wish I had a little more time to refer to the specific appropriations proposed in this bill. Here is one for Pentwater harbor, Michigan. Where is Pentwater (I hope some member from Michigan will tell us) for which we propose to appropriate $25,000 now, and $327,000 hereafter? Where is the harbor of Aux Becs Seies, for which we are to appropriate $10,000 now, and $146,000 hereafter? Where is Saugatuck harbor, for which we are to appropriate $30,000 now, and $212,000 hereafter? Where is St. Mary's river, for which $20,000 is appropriated, and for which will be required hereafter $324,000? Sir, I repeat what my friend from New York, [Mr. BAILEY,] said: where are we going to stop? Do gentlemen expect to get this bill through both Houses? I tell them if they do get it through it will meet with a veto from the President, and he will antagonize us before the people, and have the advantage of us.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I ask the gentleman by what authority he says this bill will be vetoed?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have no authority for it, but I believe that such a bill as this ought to be vetoed, and I shall sustain the veto if it is. Look at the third section of this bill, which provides "that the sum of $450,000 is hereby appropriated toward completing the Louisville and Portland canal."

You assume an indebtedness of $1,567,000, making $2,017,000 appropriated. You assume that liability in one fell swoop and no report is before us from the Committee on Commerce, and we have no information on the subject.

Mr. EGGLESTON. There is a full report from the engineer, and the gentleman had it a few minutes ago on his desk.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There is no report from the Committee on Commerce in regard to this appropriation of $2,017,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. Speaker, in the few moments allowed me for the discussion of this important question I shall endeavor to answer some of the objections that have been urged against the bill as reported by the majority of the Committee on Commerce; for I assume that the supporters of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] are opposed to any appropriation whatever for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. The Committee on Commerce has devoted several months to the examination of this subject, availing themselves of the reports of the engineer department and of the opinions and judgments of the Representatives of those sections of the country where the improvements sought to be made are located, and have presented their report—or a majority of that committee—recommending the appropriation of about six million dollars for the continuation and completion mainly of works already commenced, and which they believe to be of national and not local importance. The substitute of the gentleman from Ohio simply makes an appropriation of about two million dollars, leaving the expenditure, both as to amount and locality of the work, entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of War. It is not, I apprehend, expected or intended that the House shall adopt this substitute for the careful and well-considered bill reported by the committee; but it is introduced rather as an indirect, and, I submit, not very fair, way of defeating any appropriation for these works at this session. I hope, therefore, that the House will regard the vote upon this substitute as a test vote as to whether any appropriation shall be made, and I doubt not it will.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the objections urged against the bill reported by the committee? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] say that there is no money in the Treasury, and that they are opposed to making these appropriations for that reason; that we must wait until the Treasury is replenished. I answer those gentlemen by saying to them and to the country that there is as much money in the Treasury to meet the appropriations made by this bill as those already made by this Congress for the support and perpetuation of the Freedman's Bureau, and other similar political objects. Congress has the power not only to make appropriations but to provide the means wherewith to pay; it has the control of the various expenditures of the Government, subject only to constitutional restrictions. But the opponents of this bill say, let us wait another year, or until a more propitious time. This is a most dangerous argument, and I warn the true friends of river and harbor improvements that if listened to it will inevitably postpone these works for the next ten years, and perhaps overthrow the system of internal improvements by the Government. Will the Treasury be any better supplied next year, or within the next ten years? Will the people be any better able or more willing to pay taxes hereafter than now? Judging from our experience for the past three years, no sane man can doubt that the revenues of the country will diminish rather than increase for many years to come; and if we neglect to make the appropriations for the continuance of these works this year there will not be another dollar appropriated for them during the next ten years, and when the work is again resumed the amount of money required simply to repair the damage and loss occasioned by the suspension will be sufficient to pay the interest upon the whole cost of their completion without delay. It is a false economy, dangerous to the commercial, agricultural, and manufacturing interests of the whole country; and if this Congress shall refuse to make these necessary appropriations at this session I want the country to understand that the responsibility of such refusal rests with the Radical majority in this House.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition to this bill is not in the interest of economy or of the country, but in the interest and for the benefit of the Radical party. This was not only admitted but boldly avowed by one of the ablest and boldest leaders of that party in this House. Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, in his speech in opposition to this bill last week, said:

"I ask my friends from the Northwest which would they rather do—have these rivers improved this year, and upon the charge of extravagance which will be made against us in the country, have power pass out of our hands, and so prevent future improvements?"

If, therefore, this bill shall be defeated the people will understand by whom and for what purpose it was done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. It must be very plain to the House that this whole question lies in a nutshell. The proposition is simply whether we will take up the bill with seventy-three items in it, and consider them one by one, and strike out what are wrong and retain what are proper, or take the bill of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO]—I do not know what to call it; not an "omnibus bill," for it is not worthy to be called by that name, but a bill which appropriates in a lump so much for harbors and so much for rivers without saying where they are. The gentleman's substitute does not even say that the rivers are in the United States of America. It appropriates about two million dollars without saying even that it is to be expended on the continent of America. Is the House prepared for that? I think they are not prepared for it. I think that the common-sense way to manage this matter is to take up the bill as reported from the Committee on Commerce, after having been considered and fully digested by them, and which was reported unanimously, with one exception, and go through it item by item; and if it cannot be shown that each item of appropriation called for by the bill is required, strike it out. We shall know, then, what we are doing. But the substitute, as I said, does not even say that the rivers on which the money is to be expended are in America. It appropriates so much money for rivers. It may be expended on the Amazon; it may go to the Nile or to China. That is an additional reason why I am opposed to it. If we take the substitute we go in the dark with our eyes shut, without knowing where the money is to be appropriated, to what uses it is to be applied, or what improvements are to be made. But the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce is a plain, common-sense business transaction. It is a bill of particulars, and you can take up its seventy-three different items one by one, and if they are all right and proper, pass them; and if they are all wrong, refuse to pass them; or if any of them are wrong, we can strike them out and pass the balance. I undertake to say that there is no other straightforward, matter-of-fact, common-sense, business way of transacting the business except to take the bill as it comes from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FERRY. I rise to oppose the amendment. I would not now occupy the attention of the House again upon this subject, for I alluded to these matters sufficiently, as I supposed, when the specific appropriations were severally passed upon and adopted when the bill was up before; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has not only stepped out of his State, but out of his geographical knowledge, to put the interrogatories, "Where is Manistee harbor?" and "Where is Pere Marquette?" and I should be negligent of my duty if I did not give the gentleman the necessary information. It is not strange that the gentleman is unable even to pronounce the names of some of the harbors in the bill, not having given attention to the geography of the points proposed to be benefited by the pending measure. If the gentleman had been as much concerned in the wants of the eastern coast of Lake Michigan as the people of that coast are interested in his own State he never would have put the questions I am now called upon to answer. It is not the first time this sort of tactics is employed to prevent a just judgment and defeat a meritorious measure. The gentleman has a wonderful faculty of understanding what he wants to know and feigning ignorance where he does not wish to know. This House will have no difficulty in seeing through the transparent animus of this paterfamilias.

To the pending bill reported by the committee the gentleman has offered a substitute, and huris his invective at the equitable distribution of appropriations covered by the bill and presses instead appropriations that upon their face exhibit local unfairness and partiality, and brings to their support violent appeals for the exercise of public economy and dismal forebodings of a depleted Treasury. Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I reply in the vein of the gentleman, for I do not fear a comparison, and many times like is the very best cure for like. When he puts the inquiry, where is Pere Marquette harbor, with $20,000 appropriation, I reply where is Rock Island in his substitute with $100,000 appropriation? To his inquiry, where is Manistee harbor with $25,000? I retort, where is Des Moines canal in his substitute with $400,000? And when he says where is Aux Bees Scies—the name he could not utter—with but $10,000, I answer where is Chicago, with $48,000 provided for in his substitute, making, as the House will see, $548,000 proposed in that substitute for three places in the interest of the State which he in part represents, while the three places in the bill which he has by an assumed ignorance attempted to ridicule into insignificance aggregates but $55,000—a difference against his three points, and in favor of my three, of $493,000, which I ask him to reconcile with his gloomy fears for an empty Treasury. In that labor, and the investigation of localities of which he professes such ignorance, he will, no doubt, do greater justice to his geography, and, at the same time, I commend him to the study of another invaluable book—a higher source of wisdom—whose injunction he would do well to ponder when he seeks so carefully the interests of Illinois and so carelessly regards those of sister States: "First cast the beam out of thine own eye, then shalt thou see clearly to take the mote out of thy brother's eye."

I would be very glad to take a more comprehensive view of this subject of river and harbor improvements, and show how States not immediately proximate to the points of expenditure are largely concerned in those improvements; how, in fact, citizens of the various States are more or less interested in the opening and improvement of these great public channels of commerce, and how their prosperity is concerned by easy and safe facilities of transportation; but the time allotted me will not permit general observations. I am necessarily confined to the improvements proposed in my own vicinity, and a just defense of these will prove no obstacle to a proper estimate of other sections which other gentlemen, in their turn, will more ably defend. In answer to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUMPHREY,] that we should exercise a proper economy in the legislation of this country, let me show him how those who are in favor of these appropriations have paid attention to that suggestion by initiating economy at this time and upon this very bill; and to illustrate, let me refer to the items relating to places in my district.

The first recommendation by the Engineer Bureau for the harbor of Grand Haven, where I reside, was for $75,000. That has been cut down to $20,000, a saving of $55,000 in that one item. In the case of Pentwater the estimate was for $100,000; that is reduced to $25,000. At Pere Marquette $75,000 was estimated, and $20,000 reported. In the case of Aux Bees Scies, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] was so puzzled to pronounce, the estimate was for $48,000, and $10,000 recommended. For Manistee $60,000 was estimated, and $25,000 reported. In all, the estimates for my district aggregated $433,000, and the bill proposes only $185,000, or a reduction from the original estimates of $248,000.

Mr. SPALDING. Are all these points on Lake Michigan?

Mr. FERRY. They are. These points are all on the eastern coast of Lake Michigan. Everybody conversant with the commerce of the lakes knows that winds prevail from the westward on that lake; and every one familiar with the subject also knows that the east coast of Lake Michigan is the most dangerous one upon the whole chain of lakes. This brings me to notice the fact that the opinion is so largely shared by the people of Illinois that Chicago, its commercial city, has, through its Board of Trade, passed resolutions recommending appropriations for harbors of refuge along this coast, and those resolutions have been presented to Congress. Citizens of that State and city well know how the safety of their shipping depends upon good harbors along this perilous way. All the western grain-growing States are interested in good and capacious harbors. To move their millions of bushels of cereals with safety, celerity, and cheaply every precaution should be taken by a fostering Government to guard against peril and loss. The value of these products on the sea-board depends in great measure upon these securities. The greater the peril the higher the rates of transportation and insurance, so that the consumers upon our eastern boundaries, and all over the States I might add, are taxed by this lack of foresight to make adequate provision for easy and safe transit.

Until the Thirty-Ninth Congress the Government had failed to make appropriations for this coast of Michigan, much as it was needed. By urgent appeals I succeeded in directing proper attention to the great necessity for good harbors and light-houses there, and Congress made surveys and appropriations. Thirty thousand dollars was appropriated for a large light-house at Big Point au Sable, and to-day it stands a beacon for the guidance of commerce and a monument of the wisdom of the Government.

Carrying out this wise policy Congress also appropriated for the improvement of the two harbors of Manistee and Pere Marquette, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] will now take notice that I place the localities of these harbors for his especial information as well when I state that one is north and the other south of Big Point au Sable. On the direct course from Chicago to the straits it will be readily appreciated how necessary it is that this salient, dangerous point should be guarded by a good light-house and harbors on either side, so that sailing either way vessels failing to weather that point may have a safe harbor of refuge whether bound up or down the lakes.

The bill before the House does not propose appropriations for any new harbor, but alone for those where the Government has already expended money, and for harbors that had already been more or less improved by private means and the enterprise of local citizens. In this, sir, they stand far ahead of Chicago, and it is due the energy and perseverance of citizens who have contributed of their means so liberally for the general good that their laudable efforts should at last be recognized.

I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] to the fact that within my knowledge and recollection, and I am not an old man, the harbor of Chicago was so poor and shallow that vessels with only seven feet draft could not enter it. By appropriations from the General Government it has now become one of the best harbors on the lakes, and the people of my district have rejoiced that the Government made liberal provision for that harbor. It is a pleasure for me to support to-day additional appropriations for it, and Michigan will never cease to lend its aid for the perfection of that place of commercial refuge. All that I ask for the harbors in which my people are more immediately concerned is, that appropriations for the improvement be made where private enterprise has made a depth of water of more than seven feet to begin with, that have a greater depth of water than Chicago originally had, and for appropriations to so deepen these harbors on the east coast of Lake Michigan that they may become harbors of safety and refuge to general as well as local commerce. I was surprised at the persistent efforts of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] to depreciate the importance of these harbors when all of them pour into the lap of Chicago, the city of his State, millions in value of their products. The harbor of Muskegon is, I may say to him and the country, the greatest lumber manufacturing place of any one point in the world. Its shipments will rise to two hundred million feet. Here, let me add, its citizens, with a liberality unparalleled, have taxed themselves for the worthy purpose of making a good and safe harbor of entrance and refuge. Building two piers with slabs from their busy mills they have by their own toil and money deepened the water of that harbor from seven to twelve feet. Now, they ask that the Government would appreciate their labor and share with them in such further expenditure as will insure a permanent and ample harbor for the vast shipping that seeks ingress and egress at that industrial point. I will not believe that their appeal will be in vain.

Manistee, also, is no insignificant point, as the gentleman [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois] would have the country suppose. The same energy and enterprise is apparent there. From a shallow depth the citizens of that thriving place have by their own means increased it to eight feet, and now they, too, justly ask of the Government to come to their rescue in their attempt to make this an excellent harbor. I reiterate it cannot be possible that this appeal be made in vain. So, Mr. Speaker, I might speak of the same laudable efforts made at Pentwater, White River, and Grand Haven. Conversant as I am with what has been done by private means at all these points, and knowing full well what obstacles citizens there have had to encounter, the storms that beat, the disasters they suffer, the losses of property they incur, and life jeopardized and lost, I cannot forbear the expression that if the Government is, in the face of all this, to idly survey their struggles and mock at their appeals by turning them back to their own resources for help, it falls far below its high duty, and justly merits the criticism of an enterprising and faithful people.

Mr. PRICE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last two words. I rise for the purpose of opposing this substitute. I am in favor of the original bill. I think the interests of the country require that we should take it up and act upon it. If it contains any improvident or unnecessary appropriations, strike them out; if any provident and necessary appropriations are omitted, insert them. And I will say to the gentleman that I am perfectly willing to appeal to the people to sustain any legislation that I may think proper and wise to support in their name. I have none of that fear of the frown of my masters which makes me shrink from what I regard as high public duty. I have confidence in the American people, in their sound common sense, and in their ability to see through the thickest as well as the flimsiest disguises, and to discover when public men shirk their duty through unworthy motives as well as when they unwisely or improvidently attempt to perform it. They are far more likely to withhold approval from the timid, cowering public servant who, through fear of doing wrong does nothing, than from him who goes forward boldly and honestly in the discharge of his duty even though he should fall into occasional errors. Condemnation was reserved for him who hid his own talent in the napkin; and his fear of a hard, exacting master, so far from being accepted as an excuse, was held to aggravate the offense. Gentlemen need not hope to escape censure by abandoning their post and running away. Deserters are always to be shot, and everybody holds that they deserve it. Cowardice is a terrible offense in a public man.

But even if I were opposed to this bill and in favor of recommitting it I should not be willing to recommit it with the instructions proposed here. What is the proposition? To place a sum in solido—I have not calculated how many millions—practically and really in the hands of the President of the United States, to be expended under contracts with whom he may please and for whatever works he may see proper. A generous confidence, truly! It is proposed to appropriate $1,300,000 "for the improvement of rivers." What rivers? In what part of the country? On this point the proposition is expressively silent. It gives not a whisper of information. The money is to be placed in the hands of the President, leaving him to contract with whomsoever he may select, and to expend the money on works anywhere from the Passamaquoddy to the Rio Gila. [A voice. "Perhaps the Tennessee."] The Tennessee river is not named in this proposition; no river is named; but $1,300,000 is to be turned over to the President to improve the rivers of the United States—Fishing creek or Goose creek or Duck river, perhaps. Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] may have that unbounded confidence in the President which his remarks seem to imply when he tells us the President would certainly veto this bill, because it ought to be vetoed, and that he would sustain him in it. The gentleman may possibly be willing to place this sum of money in his hands, to be used during the coming summer in contracts and generally for the good of the public service. I say frankly I am not.

Without any disparagement of the chief Executive, or of any of his subordinates, I declare that I am unwilling to put this sum in the hands of any man to be expended under no other restrictions than those embraced in the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.] In my judgment this proposition ought not to be entertained for one moment. It is altogether improvident. It proposes to disburse the public money in a manner which we, as legislators, ought never to tolerate; for it is our duty to designate the specific use to be made of the money which we appropriate. If this bill is not acceptable, then we ought to adopt some other bill. If the appropriations proposed are not wise, then we ought to make such as we think wise. If we believe the commerce, the internal communication of the country, requires nothing in the shape of public improvements, then let us pass no bill. But such a proposition as this I can look upon as nothing short of a monstrosity in legislation. I cannot imagine what public policy, what sense of statesmanship—I will not say what political strategy, what party tactics—would ever put such a sum as this into the hands of the chief Executive to be disposed of as this proposition contemplates.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and for reasons which I think of great weight, especially in reference to my own district. Like my colleague, [Mr. FERRY,] I do not propose to interfere in reference to appropriations for districts represented by other gentlemen, presuming that they understand better than I do the necessities of their own localities. Now, when the gentleman inquired a few moments ago where the port of Ontonagon was, I felt that if he had put that question to my friend from Indiana [Mr. COVERN] he might have had an answer that he would not soon forget. In 1863 I happened to visit that distant point in the State of Michigan, some four or five hundred miles from where I live. I escaped but a few moments taking passage on board the steamer Sunbeam. The honorable gentleman's brother, unfortunately, took passage on that steamer, which was lost on the coast of Ontonagon because there was no place there to escape from the violence of the storm. The steamer sank with all on board. It lay off the coast for some fourteen hours, and might have been saved if there had been a place of refuge. That port is the first point where copper was discovered on Lake Superior. A mass of copper was found there at one time weighing five hundred tons. That was given to the commerce of the world in exchange for money. At no point on that great lake is it so important, not even, perhaps, at Marquette itself, to appropriate the small sum named in this bill. The War Department, without any interference or suggestion from any Representative from the State of Michigan, has recommended these appropriations for a few points in my district in order to keep the improvements in repair. I hope the House will not commit so great an act of injustice as to refuse a sufficient appropriation to keep these works in repair and moderately progressing. I understand the gentleman from Ohio has named a few points in his substitute for which he proposes appropriations.

Mr. DELANO. No, sir.

Mr. DRIGGS. I thought he had; it seems I am mistaken. Now, sir, without opposing any other appropriation, the harbor of Marquette has more commerce in one day than the harbor of Michigan City in a year. And yet I intend to vote for both. I have seen eighty sail waiting to load with iron. The Government has commenced a break-water. I think it proper to commence with a small appropriation, and if every point is as well guarded as this point in my district, no wrong, but great benefit will accrue. I hope the substitute will not pass, but that we shall take up the original bill and consider each appropriation carefully and pass those items that are necessary.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman withdraws the amendment, and I renew it for the purpose of expressing in a few words my views. I do not yield to my colleague in desire or in zeal for economy in the public expenditure; but there are certain appropriations as necessary to the business of this country and its successful prosecution as nourishment is to the human system. A wise and prudent statesmanship would recognize this, and not by a blind opposition to every thing proposed endanger or cripple the commerce of the country and its safety; nor do I yield to him at all in the strength of my conviction that it is imprudent, impolitic, and unwise in the present condition of our finances for us to enter upon new enterprise or to make any sort of appropriations to begin new or experimental works of public improvement, even though our convictions might be that the public interest would be served by such works. Instead of this bill, I think real statesmanship would require that each appropriation should stand upon its own merits in a separate bill. But I do think, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] is vicious in the extreme degree. It not only fails to indicate the individual work to be done, so that the House may judge of its propriety, thus making it an omnibus bill, but also transfers to a single officer supreme control over these millions in their expenditure and application—and I will say to him very frankly that I have tried to satisfy myself that this mode of legislation was not dangerous in order that I might vote for his proposition, but I cannot bring my judgment to the support of his amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for the harbor of Chicago is embraced in all the bills; both that of my colleague [Mr. WASHBURN] and that of the committee, and the appropriation is $48,000. That appropriation is required for a work that is now actually in progress under contract, and the safety of the commerce and navigation upon the upper lakes absolutely demands the expenditure of that money. It is an appropriation to complete a contract now in the progress of being carried out.

Now, sir, when neither any member of the committee or any member upon the floor of this House doubts for a moment both the propriety and necessity of this expenditure, can I go home to my people and say that I have consented to abandon all control over the application of the moneys that we vote, and without any guarantee that the money will be applied to really proper purposes, but trust entirely to the discretion or interest or prejudices of officials in Washington. I say to you let us discuss each item of appropriation in this bill upon its merits, and reject all that the public necessities do not absolutely require, having in view the principle that no new works are to be entered upon, only the preservation of those now in progress. But I concur with the gentleman from Buffalo [Mr. HUMPHREY] in saying that we must understand here and now whether the Government is to abandon, as some years since it did, the protection of commerce on our western lakes. Why, sir, in 1852, this principle of refusing to make appropriations for necessary work was adopted, and it is within my recollection that all the Government property that was used for Government work upon Lake Michigan was sold at auction, and when appropriations were again made Government was compelled to buy anew all the material and machinery, dredge-boats, and all that kind of machinery which is absolutely necessary to carry on such works. The abandonment of this class of appropriations threw burdens upon the local community that properly belonged to the General Government. My own city, to save its harbor, expended some eighty thousand dollars, which the Government has constantly refused to refund. It is not our harbor, Mr. Speaker, it is the outlet for a large portion of the country and the receiving point for an immense trade, and no man can reasonably say that a local community should bear these burdens.

Now, sir, the commerce and navigation of Lake Michigan are less protected and have had less money appropriated to that end than any similar extent of commerce and navigation within the territory of the United States; and so impressed were our people with that fact that our board of trade instructed me to vote for, and aid and assist in the passage of the appropriation discussed by my friend from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] for the harbors of Lake Michigan, and I tell you that there are no set of men who pay more taxes or who look more carefully at the expenses of the Government than that class of gentlemen I represent; and they have said that it is my duty, in the public interest and in the interest of commerce, to vote for these specific appropriations for harbors of refuge on Lake Michigan. Sir, it is as necessary that these expenditures should be made which are intended to protect and guard the commerce of these lakes and the business of the country as it is that a man should repair his own homestead when it is falling into decay. And how can any man go home and say to his people that he ran the risk of placing this money in the hands of an officer in Washington, and authorizing him to expend it for this work, or for politics, or in any other way that he saw fit? I tell you it is false legislation to trust this discretion to any officer when the legislative power can control the manner in which the expenditures are to be made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARNES. I am very glad to hear expressions in favor of economy from the other side of the House, and I do not care where it comes in; but I do not see the economy of neglecting a private estate or a public estate as is proposed to be done by the amendment now before the House. We have a proposition to emasculate this bill in a manner which leaves the appropriations to be expended where they may not be wanted, or in insufficient sums where they are distinctly required.

There is an appropriation in this bill of $300,000 for the improvement of the East river, near the city where I reside. It is estimated that $15,000,000 of commerce pass through Hell Gate in one day, and in a single day I am informed that seven wrecks have occurred at that point. The amendment does not propose to appropriate any particular sum for this purpose, but a less sum than $300,000 would be inadequate to protect what might be denominated the majority of the commerce of this country. And the whole amount proposed to be appropriated is entirely inadequate to develop and protect the resources of the commerce of the country. So far as the means of the country to supply the wants here demanded are concerned, I undertake to say that the policy now indicated by the majority of gentlemen on the other side would, in a very few years, leave the country without a commerce; would leave the cereal crops of the country without a market; would allow our piers to rot, our docks to decay, and our vessels to seek foreign ports. We are as competent to-day to invest five, ten, or even twenty million dollars in erecting piers and docks, and in creating harbors for the development of the industry and commerce of this country, as we ever have been. No gentleman who has an estate, however rich he may be, can afford to allow that estate to remain unfenced and untilled. But that is the policy now proposed in emasculating these bills, in cutting down these appropriations, and leaving the country without the requisite means in the way of harbors to afford due protection to ships and to life, to develop commerce and the resources of the country, and to afford markets for our products. Each separate item should be taken up and decided with reference to its own merits. It is not sufficient that an appropriation of so many millions or so many hundreds of thousands of dollars should be made for one class of improvements, and so many hundreds of thousands of dollars to be expended in another section for another class of improvements. This House, when a particular improvement is brought before it, is competent to judge what is required; and the more money that can be appropriated for any specific improvement, such as the good sense of this House will say is a necessity, so much the better for this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JUDD. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I renew it. The question before the House is the recommitment of a certain proposition to the Committee on Commerce with instructions to report a bill that will appropriate $1,300,000 for the improvement of rivers, $500,000 for the improvement of lakes, and $150,000 for the improvement of harbors.

Now, sir, the Committee on Commerce, I think, have been laboring about as hard as committees ordinarily labor, with the exception of the Committee of Ways and Means, for some four or five months past to prepare and bring forward a proper river and harbor bill. They have reported a bill, after getting all the information they could from the engineer department, which bill proposes that certain sums be appropriated for improvements in certain localities throughout the length and breadth of the United States.

A member of the House who has probably given the subject no consideration at all jumps up and says that the best way to deal with it is just to allow the Secretary of War to have a couple of millions of dollars and distribute it wherever he pleases, for the improvement of such harbors and rivers as he may think proper to improve. I ask that gentleman why he did not the other day, when we were considering the internal tax bill, get up here and say that the best way to deal with the subject is to send out certain officers in the country with instruction to exercise their own judgment and collect so much money in any way they may think best? How much easier that would be than to come here and sweat over that bill night and day for a week. And why not say, instead of making specific appropriations for the several Departments, that the Secretary of the Treasury should have so much money, thirty, forty, or fifty million dollars to carry on his Department as he may deem best? Why not say in regard to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy that fifty or a hundred million dollars shall be appropriated, with which they may go out and buy such ships as they may need and employ such men as may be required for the Army? In that way the business of legislation in Congress might be dispensed with entirely, and we could leave the whole administration of the affairs of the Government to the heads of the various Departments. I am astonished at a proposition of that kind coming from my intelligent colleague [Mr. DELANO] in regard to a subject of this magnitude.

I do not wish to say anything about the particular items in this bill. When we come to any I think I should speak about I may then say something. But I think we should not recommit this bill with the instructions proposed. If the House should decide to recommit this bill, with instructions to the Committee on Commerce to bring in a bill with just three items in it, $1,800,000 for rivers, $500,000 for lake harbors, and $150,000 for harbors on the ocean, I would inquire how we are to get the money for our respective improvements? My friend from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], who is so well acquainted with this subject, may have a better hold on the Secretary of War than I have; and he may understand better how to deal with the Secretary of War than does the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ROBINSON.] He may stand better with the Secretary of War than my friend from New York, and may get the whole appropriation for the improvement in his locality. Nine hundred thousand dollars is asked for the improvement of Des Moines rapids; and I want to vote for it. Two hundred thousand dollars more is asked for the improvement of Rock Island rapids, and I want to vote for that. What locality would come in next I cannot say.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, representing, as I do, a commercial city on the Atlantic coast, my constituents have very little interest in the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, and they have no interest at all in the substitute which has been presented by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], as the minority of that committee. The substitute contains appropriations for specific improvements in the western and northwestern waters, but only two items for improvements upon the Atlantic coast. While it proposes to appropriate in the aggregate $1,657,000, the only appropriations for the Atlantic coast are $300,000 for removing obstructions in East river, including Hell Gate, and $50,000 for the preservation and improvement of Boston harbor. Thus it is proposed to appropriate $1,307,000 exclusively for the western and northwestern sections of the country, and only $350,000 for the eastern and northwestern portions. Sir, I am opposed to thus taking money out of the pockets of the people of one section of the country and putting that money into the pockets of the people of another section, under whatever pretext that operation may be justified.

One of the subjects to which reference has been made, and which I presume has occupied, to a large extent, the attention of the Committee on Commerce during the present session of Congress, is the depreciation, the decay, and in fact the almost absolute ruin, of the American ship-building and shipping interests. During the short session of last July I had the honor to introduce a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, instructing that committee to inquire particularly into the causes which had produced that decline of our ship-building and shipping interests, what portion of it was owing to defective or injurious legislation, and to what extent it could be remedied by congressional enactment. In connection with this subject it has been repeatedly stated on this floor that so great has been the decline of the interests I have named that there is not at this time a single line of ocean steamers, American built, plying between the port of New York and any foreign port. But in the discussion of this question gentlemen have overlooked the fact that there is one city upon the coast which has supported for the last two years and more two lines of ocean steamers, American built and American registered, supported them in spite of difficulties and discouragements, in spite of injurious legislation, in spite of competition from our own country and other countries; and that city is the one which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor. Yet that city, with its harbor, one of the most important upon the coast, is, by the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois, utterly ignored. Although there has been laid upon the desks of members an estimate from the War Department, calling for an appropriation of $125,000 for deepening the channel and removing shoals in the harbor of the Patapsco river, not a single cent does the gentleman from Illinois propose to appropriate for that object.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DELANO. I move that all debate upon the pending proposition be closed in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot permit the vote to be taken without saying one word in opposition to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio. I object to it upon principle. I think Congress should determine what improvements should be made; that is, what particular rivers and harbors should be improved. If $1,000,000, for instance, is to be appropriated for rivers, I know personally that there are two improvements now in progress which will require $1,000,000 during the next year. I say to the gentleman from Ohio and others who oppose this bill that there can be no expenditure of money so profitable to the great consuming and producing interests of the country as the works to which I allude. I speak of the improvement of the Mississippi river. Now, my friend says he has reduced the appropriation to $500,000. I ask him of what avail is it to reduce that appropriation when the whole expenditure must in fact be made? I, for one, am not willing to allow it to go to the people of the country that this great work of improving the two rapids on the Mississippi river is to be suspended by a half appropriation. I am not surprised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAILEY] should oppose these appropriations. The gentleman did not tell us that the people of the great West are ground to powder by being subsidized by the State of New York, which has a canal system collecting millions of dollars from the honest toil of the West in the shape of tolls. We want other means of communication. We want competing lines, so that we may have a reduction of the rates of fare to the Atlantic ports.

Mr. BAILEY. Did not the State of New York build its own canals?

Mr. ALLISON. They built them on credit, and they are taxing the country to-day to pay the debt, instead of taxing their own people to pay it. Now, what we want is an outlet by the way of the Mississippi river, and one appropriation in this bill for that purpose is $900,000. I know nothing about numerous other appropriations made here. Some may be just, others unjust; but I cannot consent that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio should prevail, because there is not enough in it. It is false economy and unjust to the people of the country to make these half-way appropriations when we have necessary improvements that must go forward. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. I can say all I have to say in one minute. The proposition in the substitute is to give $1,800,000 to the western harbors and $300,000 to the entire Atlantic coast. I trust that substitute will not prevail. I am willing to vote any amount that is necessary for the improvement of western harbors; but to make provision for nearly $2,000,000 for them, and only $300,000 for the entire Atlantic coast, seems to me so one-sided that I wonder it is entertained by the House.

One word more. If the entire appropriations made in this bill, as reported by the committee, which are about four million dollars, were expended upon the improvement of the harbor at New York, in removing obstructions from Hell Gate, it would be wisely and well expended and for the benefit of the whole country. If I have any time left I yield it to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MULLINS.]

The SPEAKER. There is half a minute remaining.

Mr. MULLINS. I can only say in that brief time that I am opposed to the substitute and in favor of the original bill, properly analyzed, and making appropriations as the necessities of the case require. That is economy, and nothing more—to appropriate what the public demand should be done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DELANO. The direct question before the House is the comparative merits of the substitute and the original measure. I will, as well as I can in the five minutes allowed me, draw this comparison. I say in advance that I do not regard the substitute as being free from objections, but I do regard it as preferable to the original measure. You can offer nothing of this kind, probably, that would not be objectionable to some.

Now for the comparison, and I want gentlemen to understand me. The original bill introduces a system of internal improvements embracing within its scope some eighty different localities. It inaugurates a theory of internal improvements that will draw from the Treasury annually not less than $10,000,000, if it be undertaken. It is undoubtedly made to cover so much in order to give it strength, to get into it enough to make votes enough to carry it. It is vicious in itself, even if we were prepared now to enter upon such a system, and embraces within its scope places like Little Sodas, and others that have been exploded long ago, and that ought never to have appropriations from the General Government.

And now, sir, at the close of our war, when the nation, as I have had occasion to say before, groans under the debt contracted to save its life; now, when, as has been said, we are starting out upon a campaign for the election of a President—although that has nothing to do with the question—you propose, when the country is thus embarrassed, to enter on this magnificent scheme of plunder for the benefit of localities. That is the outline of this original bill.

Now, let me illustrate the truth of these remarks. You begin with an appropriation for the improvement of the Wisconsin river, which is a small appropriation now, but you are told by the Bureau of Engineers that it looks to a ship-canal between the Mississippi river and the lakes by the way of the Wisconsin river, and this scheme will lead to immense amounts of annual expenses.

Mr. ELIOT. I would like to ask the gentleman if the appropriation for the Wisconsin river is not in his own substitute?

Mr. DELANO. No, sir.

Mr. ELIOT. It was.

Mr. DELANO. It is not.

Mr. ELIOT. It was, but the gentleman struck it out.

Mr. DELANO. I am not talking of what was, but of what is.

Mr. PILE. May not the Secretary of War include the Wisconsin river?

Mr. DELANO. I cannot be interrupted. I have not time to analyze the original bill and show what it would lead to. The substitute is predicated upon the policy of preserving the works now in existence and in progress that was adopted during the war. It proposes limited appropriations less than $2,000,000, about one million eight hundred thousand dollars for that purpose, to take care of places that demand attention now, that in consequence of contracts or of great necessities deserve to be immediately attended to. What are the objections to it? Why, it is said that it will not do to leave the matter to the Secretary of War, who is at the disposal of the President of the United States. It is left to the direction of the Secretary of War, under the advice of the board of engineers; and without any disrespect to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] I venture to say that every specific appropriation which he reports in this bill was inserted under the advice of that bureau. It knows best where appropriations ought to be made, and the information on which the original bill was prepared came from that source. I am authorized to say, by gentlemen who were in the House when this policy of preserving our works was first inaugurated, that no appropriations were ever better disposed of or better applied than those that were applied during the war under the same system that I propose now. It is all gammon, if I may use a vulgar term, it is all an appeal to prejudice, to say that it will not answer to leave this at the disposal of the Secretary of War for this single year. I would prefer myself that this whole matter should go over to another and better time, but I prefer the measure that I have introduced to the inauguration of this broad scheme of plunder and of expenditures which will burden this nation, already overburdened by taxation upon taxation.

[Here the hammer fell, the time allowed for debate having expired.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 279) for the relief of William Henry Otis, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Messrs. BROOMALL and WARD obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of indisposition.

Mr. SCHENCK also obtained indefinite leave of absence.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

The SPEAKER announced the following appointments to fill vacancies on committees: On the Committee on Foreign Affairs—Mr. PRUYN.

On the Committee on Expenditures of the Treasury Department—Mr. HINDS.

Mr. PRUYN. In view of my appointment as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I ask to be excused from further service upon the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

There being no objection, Mr. PRUYN was excused.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 367) for the relief of Albert Grant; and

An act (S. No. 452) for the relief of Parker Quince.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CAKE. I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the interests of the people at large are not being subserved by the consideration of the river and harbor bill at this time; and that with due deference to the interests of commerce, and in view of a depleted Treasury and a languishing home industry, it should follow the tariff and tax bill into the next session of the Fortieth Congress; and that therefore the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the first Monday in December next.

The SPEAKER. The whole resolution is not in order, but the motion to postpone, with which it concludes, is in order and has priority.

Mr. BALDWIN. I move that the bill and pending amendments be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table takes precedence of the motion to postpone.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 27, nays 98, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Baldwin, Beatty, Benton, Brownell, Cake, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Delano, Eckley, Ela, Ferriss, Golladay, Koonz, William Lawrence, Marshall, Mercor, Niblack, Orth, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Van Auker, Van Wyck, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Baker, Banks, Barnes, Beck, Blair, Boles, Boutwell, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Cary, Cobb, Cornell, Cullom, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Hinds, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Kelsey, Ketchum, Loan, Loughbridge, Lynch, Maynard, McCormick, McKee, Moorhead, Morrill, Mullins, Munger, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Poley, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Robertson, Robinson, Sawyer, Scofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Thomas Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—69.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. CAKE, to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the first Monday of December next, after the morning hour.

Mr. WARD and Mr. CAKE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 38, nays 89, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Boyer, Brownell, Benjamin F. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Kelsey, Kerr, Ketcham, Kitchen, Knott, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Logan, Mallory, McCarthy, McCormick, McCullough, Miller, Moore, Morrissey, Nicholson, Nunn, O'Neill, Perham, Randall, Raum, Roots, Ross, Schenck, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taber, Taylor, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—67.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. BAILEY to amend the instructions moved by Mr. DELANO, so as to instruct the committee to report a substitute to read as follows:

One million dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not already appropriated for the preservation of public works commenced for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and for the performance of contracts heretofore legally made by the Government for such works, which money is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire. Is it in order to move an amendment to the amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire. Then I move to amend the amendment so as to instruct the Committee on Commerce to report back this river and harbor bill amended by striking out all relating to the Louisville and Portland canal, and reducing the respective items of appropriation one half. And now, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The House has closed debate.

Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire. I merely wish to say that if this motion be adopted I shall ask the House to give unanimous consent that the committee may report the bill at any time.

The amendment of Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire, to the amendment of Mr. BAILEY was not agreed to, there being—ayes thirty, noes not counted.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. BAILEY, it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. DELANO, to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to report the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: That the following amounts of money are hereby appropriated to be expended by the Secretary of War, under the advice of the Bureau of Engineers, for the repair and preservation of certain harbors, for the improvement of certain rivers, and for the protection of existing works of improvement from deterioration, and for such extension of the same and the continuation and completion of works under contract as the safety of commerce at their respective places may demand:

For the improvement of harbors on the northern lakes and for the St. Clair flats, $500,000.

For the improvement of harbors on the sea-coast, $150,000.

For the improvement of rivers, $1,300,000.

For the completion of reports, maps, and diagrams on bridges on the Mississippi river, $3,000, and for purchase and repair of instruments, $1,000, and for a survey for deepening the ship-canal at Sault Ste. Marie, $1,000.

And be it further enacted, That all work done under the authority of this act shall be performed under contract to be made with the Secretary of War, who shall prescribe suitable rules for issuing proposals for materials or labor, having regard to the most effective use of moneys hereby appropriated: Provided, That separate proposals and contracts shall be required in all cases when the same can be, in the judgment of the Secretary, judiciously and properly made.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I wish to inquire whether this question is divisible, so that we may have a separate vote on the question of reference.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit with instructions is not divisible.

Mr. DELANO. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 33, nays 103, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baker, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Boies, Benjamin F. Butler, Cake, Sidney Clarke, Culom, Delano, Eckley, Ela, Farnsworth, Garfield, Hulburd, Ketcham, Koontz, William Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, Mercer, Niblack, Orth, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Aaron F. Stevens, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, and John T. Wilson—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Banks, Barnes, Beck, Blair, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Cary, Chanler, Cobb, Coburn, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Golladay, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hinds, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—58.

So the motion to recommit with instructions was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House now resumes the consideration of the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, after line sixty-four, insert the following:

For increasing the capacity of the ship-canal at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, $50,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For improvement of Erie harbor, Pennsylvania, $50,000.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read "for improvement of harbor at Dunkirk, $25,000." I offer this amendment with the approbation of the committee. It is to continue a work already in progress at a harbor which is one of the most important on Lake Erie.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this amendment is offered with the approbation of the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. VAN AERNAM. The committee, after consideration, agreed that it should come in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I should like to know when the committee passed upon the subject.

Mr. ELIOT. I can explain this matter. The gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN AERNAM] called the attention of the committee to this question, and a sub-committee having the matter in charge examined the question. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EGLESTON], has in his hands a letter upon which the committee acted in agreeing that the gentleman from New York should have the opportunity to offer this amendment. It is not assented to as a part of the bill; but it has the approbation of the sub-committee; and it was agreed the gentleman should have the opportunity to take the sense of the House upon the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would like to know when the committee passed upon this question.

Mr. ELIOT. I have not said the committee passed upon this specific item.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. The Committee on Commerce permitted this amendment to be offered after due investigation. This harbor is fifth in commercial importance on Lake Erie, and when the railroads, that are now in rapid process of construction, are completed, it will be the fourth. I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE.
DETROIT, May 1, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of yours of 29th ultimo, relative to appropriations for Dunkirk harbor, and hasten to reply. You say your Representative, Hon. H. VAN AERNAM, informed you "there would be no trouble in securing this appropriation had you (meaning me) not recommended that there be none granted." Now, I am quite as much surprised at this piece of erroneous information as the citizens of his district can be. The honorable gentleman has undoubtedly been misinformed, and I regret the mistake exceedingly, as it seems to have placed me undeservedly in a position antagonistic to the interest of your harbor. The facts are these. In my very last annual report, made 15th July last, I recommended an additional appropriation of $50,000 to be made the present session of Congress for completing this work. That recommendation I have not retracted. The sum we already had, with an additional appropriation of $50,000, is all I need to complete the harbor upon the plan approved at Washington. I have advocated the completion, and shall continue to do so in all proper manner at my command. It is for your Representative to insist upon what I asked for.

It is possible that the error of your Representative may have arisen from another report I, as well as every other engineer officer, was called upon to make this last winter, namely, "To state the amount each would require to prevent injury to what would be done up to 30th June, 1888, from that time forward to 30th June, 1889, on each work under our charge." Now, in answer to this, I reported that Dunkirk would require nothing to be appropriated for this purpose, as we had more than enough already to prevent this injury. But no one has any right to confound this report and estimate, with my annual reports wherein I claimed $50,000 to be appropriated the present session for completing Dunkirk harbor.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. J. CRAIN,

Colonel Brevet Major General Engineers.
O. S. WINANS, esq., President of the Village of Dunkirk, New York.

Mr. ELIOT. I rise not to oppose this amendment, but to ask consent to make a single statement in regard to it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object. The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. VAN AERNAM, it was agreed to—ayes sixty-one; noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement of Olcott harbor, New York, $20,000.

For improvement of harbor at Charlotte, New York, $10,000.

For improvement of harbor at Little Sodus, New York, $10,000.

For improvement of Oswego harbor, New York, $37,000.

Mr. POMEROY. On behalf of my colleague, [Mr. CHURCHILL], who represents the Oswego district, and who is absent, I move to strike out "$37,000" and insert "$60,000." I am told that this is pursuant to the recommendation of the Bureau of Engineers, and is the revised estimate, being the lowest sum that has been named by the Department. I can state in one moment the object of this addition to the appropriation. The Committee on Commerce have reported only a sum sufficient for the purpose of repairing the walls of the harbor at Oswego. The harbor is simply the mouth of the river entering into the lake. Beyond that piers have been built of equal length. There is no extension beyond on the west and none on the east, except sufficient for a light-house to stand on. Now, everybody knows that the winds are mostly from the west. Consequently there is a constant drifting and accumulation of gravel against the bank, which has already filled up the space behind the light-house, crosses it, and is filling up the channel of the river. In reference to that I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the last report of Colonel Blunt.

The Clerk read as follows:

"In my last annual report, and in my letter of April 27, 1867, I have referred to this subject and expressed an opinion favorable to the proposed structure. Since then, with additional experience here, I have become still more convinced of the necessity of the desired extension, not only for the reasons assigned in my communications above referred to, but for two additional ones: First, the proposed pier will serve to arrest the eastward progress of the gravel drift, which now, in crossing the entrance, has a tendency to form a bar there; and second, it will decidedly lessen the risk now run by vessels entering the harbor during a gale, of being driven against the east pier; inasmuch as it will, by making a lee, cause smooth water between the two piers. Two vessels with valuable cargoes have been sunk this fall at the very entrance, which, it is most probable, would have got in safely had this proposed pier been built."

Mr. POMEROY. The losses last year were twenty times what is asked to continue this extension of the west pier, which is absolutely necessary if the harbor is to be entered with any safety. I have seen there myself in a storm a single vessel come in when people would be out by the thousand watching it with as much anxiety as they would watch a runaway thief on the street.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELIOT. I move pro forma to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$55,000." I do it not only for the purpose of drawing attention to this proposition but to the one previously offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN AERNAM.] In point of fact the committee some time ago took, under the direction of the House, the judgment of the Bureau of Engineers as to the lowest amount that could probably be called for at this time in view of the present condition of the works under the charge of that bureau. It so happened that in regard to the place of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN AERNAM.] spoke, the report of the engineer was that nothing was wanted this year, and of course in the bill of the committee there was no appropriation made for that purpose. By subsequent information from the War Department it turned out that they were under a misapprehension, and they satisfied the committee that, instead of no appropriation being proper the one which was called for ought to be made, and it has now been put in the bill.

Now, in regard to this appropriation, I am sorry that it has been brought to the attention of the House, because I do not want to appear in the position of one who admits an appropriation to be enlarged. And I do not propose to assent to it; but I do propose to state what the facts are that influenced the committee in making up this bill and reducing the estimate from the War Department. Gentlemen who will turn to the report will find that $60,000 was asked for for Oswego, New York; but on examining the reports that were submitted to us from the War Department, and making up estimates from them, we found that the sum of $12,000, and a further sum of $25,000, making $37,000, should be applied, and not $60,000. The committee accordingly reduced the amount from $60,000 to that now in the bill—$37,000. Reports from the engineer department, which were subsequently furnished to the committee, showed that the amount called for, $60,000, was the lowest sum which, under the circumstances, in view of the wants of the port of Oswego, ought to be appropriated. The gentlemen from New York [Mr. POMEROY] has therefore proposed the amendment, and although I do not assent to it, yet I have stated the facts to the House in order that they may see what the case is, and that the amendment ought, in point of fact, to have been originally $60,000, and not $37,000. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. POMEROY'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of line eighty:

For the improvement of the harbor of Wilson, Niagara county, New York, $10,000.

I will only say a word in favor of that amendment. I had not an opportunity at the proper time to present the amendment before the Committee on Commerce. I have, however, consulted with the committee and with the sub-committee, and all the members of the committee, I believe, except the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], have consented to this amendment. I therefore introduce it with the approbation of the committee, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. WELKER. I would inquire of the gentleman whether any one has recommended an appropriation to improve this harbor, or whether he makes the application, as I did mine the other day for a harbor in my district, on his own responsibility?

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I will say, in answer to the gentleman, that I introduced a resolution here at the beginning of the session calling on the Secretary of War for information with reference to this harbor, and the propriety of making an appropriation for it, and that there is an answer to that resolution on our files.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will my friend vote for the omnibus bill if his amendment is put in?

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. What do you mean by the "omnibus bill?"

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This bill. Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. Certainly I shall vote for it. I am in favor of appropriations for these purposes.

Mr. WELKER. I have not had an opportunity of reading the report the gentleman speaks of, and I want to know whether it recommends such an appropriation as this?

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. It does; an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. WELKER. Then why did not you ask for that?

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. Because the committee would not give it.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the amount $200, for the purpose of saying a word. If this subject had been presented to the sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce, at the time we looked over the other reports, we would have undoubtedly recommended this appropriation to the general committee. I am therefore authorized to say in behalf of the majority of the committee—of all of the committee, save one—that this appropriation should be made. It has been recommended, as has been stated by the gentleman from New York, and I believe it should be made. I shall cheerfully vote for it. I now withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, and it was agreed to.

The following was read:

For improvement of Plattsburg harbor, New York, $10,000.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move to amend by inserting the following after the paragraph just read:

For improvement of harbor at Whitehall, New York, $10,000.

I offer that amendment because the harbor at Whitehall is, perhaps, as deserving of consideration in an appropriation bill of this kind as almost any harbor mentioned in the bill. It is at the head of Lake Champlain, through which passes all the commerce between the Canadas and New York which passes along Lake Champlain and the Hudson river; and it will compare in importance with the majority of the harbors included in this bill. It is eminently entitled to consideration, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ELIOT. I rise to oppose the amendment. In doing so I must say that while I have no doubt that all the gentleman has said of the point named in his amendment is correct, yet the Committee on Commerce, after all that was stated by him, did not find that they could with propriety give the appropriation which he calls for. It is one of those cases which have not been so much under the examination of the War Department, and about which such surveys and recommendations have not been made, as to bring it within the rule adopted by the committee. Therefore, although the committee would have been glad to have acknowledged the correctness of what the gentleman has said, yet the case does not come within the rule proscribed, and it has therefore been omitted by them. This appropriation bill would have been doubled at least if the committee had not with all the power they possessed kept it within such limits as seemed to them proper, in view of the imperative demands of the commerce of the country.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. GRISWOLD; and upon a division there were—ayes 41, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GRISWOLD and Mr. ELIOT were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 49, noes 49.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes in the affirmative, and the amendment is accordingly agreed to.

Mr. PILE. I desire to give notice that I shall call for a separate vote on this item.

The SPEAKER. Upon the engrossment of the bill any member can call for a separate vote upon each paragraph or item of the bill.

The next clause was read, as follows:

For improvement of harbor at Burlington, Vermont, $40,000.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read "for improvement of harbor at Alton, Illinois, $56,000." I will explain briefly the grounds upon which I rest this amendment. I offer it upon its own merits, without any connection or combination whatever with any other appropriations in the bill. I make no question but what it is as meritorious, as just, and as proper as various items of appropriation contained in this bill.

In consequence of obstructions in the Mississippi river a process is going on, and has proceeded already to a very great extent, by which the entire harbor of Alton is being choked up. Major H. C. Long has made a report, under the direction of the Secretary of War, brief extracts from which I will read, and which will indicate the nature of the difficulty. He says:

"Very serious apprehensions are entertained by persons competent to give an opinion in such matters, who have watched the operations of the Mississippi in the vicinity of Alton for several years past, that at any of the annual floods such changes in the current and general course of the river may take place as to entirely prevent steamboats from approaching the landing during ordinary and low-water stages at least two thirds of the year, thus greatly injuring the commerce and consequent prosperity of the city."

"The dry bar A A (referring to a diagram published with the report) is about five thousand feet long by fifteen hundred feet in width, and nearly overlaps the head of the island below. It has been gradually working down stream, and it is feared that a connection will be formed with the island, and the water making its way behind both, the main body of the river and low-water channel will be permanently changed to the Missouri shore, the bar forced over toward Alton, and the city absolutely blockaded."

"This bar (BB) is encroaching rapidly upon the city landing, extending along its front and connecting with the main Illinois shore, until it has monopolized three fourths of the levee, entirely obstructing the low-water harbor for that distance."

These extracts will indicate pretty exactly the state of the harbor. To remedy this difficulty he proposes the following plan:

"The proposed remedy is a stone dike across the head of the slough, near the upper end of Billia's Island—the situation of the proposed dike is shown on the sketch—and a wing-dam or breakwater at the head of the dry bar A A. The exact location of this work to be determined by the United States engineer at the time of constructing them, and also the height which it is necessary to raise them."

"It is believed that the combined action of these structures by throwing the river over against and along the Illinois shore, will give a sufficient depth of water at all seasons of the year, and wash away the sand bar BB below the city, and from the strong and direct current thus produced have a tendency to modify the extensive abrasion going on opposite the mouth of the Missouri."

"At the locality last mentioned the Mississippi is rapidly encroaching on the American bottom, and working its way into a succession of lakes and bayous—old beds of the river—to such an extent that fears are entertained that the river will again pursue its course along the Illinois bluffs, and forsake its present channel in front of St. Louis."

The cost of this dike is estimated at $112,000. I have offered an amendment asking for just half the amount, assuming that the citizens of Alton will supply the balance. In recommending the appropriation Major Long says:

"I am not aware that Government assistance of this or any other sort has ever been extended to Alton, although for many reasons, arising from her geographical position, she may be entitled to it more than other cities of greater pretensions, who claim and receive it.

Alton lies on the left bank of the Mississippi river, about twenty-five miles above St. Louis, and three miles above the mouth of the Missouri river. It contains nearly sixteen thousand inhabitants. The importance of the city trade and commerce may be understood by a reference to the report of Messrs. Dobelbower and Frick, the committee appointed by the Board of Trade to procure statistics of the business of Alton for 1867, from which it appears that the business of the city for that period amounted to $12,673,734, and that the revenue collected and paid to the United States during the year was $180,000. (See report of committee, Appendix B.)

"While reserving to myself the privilege of a more extended treatment of the subject, and perhaps different opinions relative to the causes operating to produce the results complained of, after careful and comprehensive surveys I have no hesitation in view of the necessity of some determined action, in seconding the wishes of the citizens of Alton, by recommending the dike at the head of Ellis's Island as promising speedy and present relief sufficient for all practical purposes, and as an experiment that will be of value as a precedent in settling the many vexed questions relative to works of this character now agitating the public."

General Warren approves the report of Major Long. I will simply add that this is an improvement similar in principle to the improvements of some harbors upon the shores of our lakes, as for instance that at Oswego, where a pier is constructed for the purpose of deflecting the action of the water and preventing the sand from choking up the harbor. Here in this case a dike is proposed for the purpose of deflecting the action of the water and preventing the sand from blocking up the harbor. In the one case the improvement is made upon the shore of a lake, supplying several thousand miles of navigation; in the other case the proposed improvement is upon a river, also supplying several thousand miles of navigation. The principle appears to be the same with that upon which other appropriations in this bill are made. The case, in my judgment, presents as just a claim as these; and I therefore ask the House to sustain my amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER] has, I believe, on every proposition which has come before the House voted against this bill. He has voted to lay it on the table and to postpone it. All his votes have indicated a hostility to the bill which certainly does not, in my judgment, warrant that he should anticipate a very favorable reception for the amendment which he offers.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. I did not vote to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. ELIOT. I thought the gentleman did. Mr. BAKER. I did vote to postpone the bill; I did vote for the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO;] and I will add that I do not know why the rights or interests of my constituents should be prejudiced because I do not combine with the representatives of other interests on this floor.

Mr. ELIOT. I agree to that, and now as the gentleman has taken up quite enough of my time I will say a word as to the merits of his amendment. There is no such appropriation in this bill as that which the gentleman proposes. According to my recollection, no appropriation of a similar kind has ever been made. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURNE,] the chairman of the committee, informs me that there was once an appropriation of this character for Dubuque. If that is so, the case must stand alone. The appropriation now proposed is to make a harbor. It is not to improve navigation, but to benefit the town of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BAKER.] That town, it appears, is being injured by the water, and this appropriation is designed to prevent that injury. Now, sir, we do not propose to dig out any harbor in order that after vessels have got into the harbor they shall find sufficiently deep water. That is not the object of this bill. It is to improve harbors and to improve the navigation into harbors. The gentleman from Illinois brought this matter before the committee, and certainly there is no member on this floor whom personally I should be more desirous to accommodate than that gentleman. But for the considerations I have named—the importance of having this bill proceed upon a uniform and consistent principle and the necessity of keeping the appropriations within proper bounds—the gentleman's proposition would, I doubt not, have received more favorable consideration from the committee. But there is nothing in this bill to justify this amendment. It has no such claim to our approval as the appropriations contained in the bill. I hope, therefore, that the House will not adopt it.

Mr. CARY. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. EGGLESTON: The petition of Andrew Althausen and others, workmen in the manufacture of chemicals at Cincinnati, Ohio, representing that the depression of the manufacturing industry of the country affects disastrously every form of production and business, and must reduce the revenues and endanger the credit of the Government, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

By Mr. PETERS: A remonstrance of George Stetson and others, of Bangor, Maine, against a reduction of the tariff on lumber.

Also, the petition of Mahala Jane Robertson, for relief.

By Mr. POLAND: A remonstrance of J. J. Esty and 120 others, of Brattleboro', Vermont, against the extension of Howe's patent on sewing-machines.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 29, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. J. V. SCHOFIELD, of St. Louis, Missouri.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOWARD presented the petition of Dr. Robert Leiby, praying a removal of the civil disabilities imposed on him by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the petition of Professor Agassiz, of Cambridge, and a large number of others, professors of Harvard University, and also professors of the Institute of Technology in Boston, in which they plead that Congress take steps that the statute of the Legislature of California with regard to the Yosemite valley shall not receive the sanction of Congress. They say that it is inconsistent with the just fulfillment of the purposes of the original grant, and with an honest, patriotic pride; and they respectfully and earnestly protest against the ratification or confirmation by Congress of any conveyance of any part of the Yosemite valley by the State of California to individuals. I believe that this subject is under the consideration of the Committee on Private Land Claims, and I move the reference of this petition to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, presented a petition of citizens of Boston, Massachusetts, praying the passage of the House bill to encourage commerce and internal trade by facilitating direct importations; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, praying that the survivors of the war of 1812, whether soldiers or sailors, and the surviving widows of any who may have died or who may hereafter die, may be placed upon the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized, to report the same back with an amendment and recommendation that it be adopted. I shall ask the Senate to take it up and consider it to-morrow.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 567) relating to the Freedmen's Bureau and providing for its discontinuance, reported it without amendment.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 394) confirming title to Little Rock Island, in the Mississippi river, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 415) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Dakota, to be called the Pembina district, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 152) to extend the time for the completion of the West Wisconsin railroad; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Frederick Vincent, administrator of James Le Caze and others, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 580) for the relief of Frederick Vincent, administrator of James Le Caze, surviving partner of Le Caze and Mallet. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. THAYER, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 240) to amend section thirteen of an act entitled "An act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States," reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 65) for the relief of William McGarahan, reported adversely thereon, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 449) to revive and continue in force the act of the 29th of July, 1850, and the act amendatory thereof of the 2d of April, 1852, reported it with an amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 522) to authorize the Commissioner of the Revenue to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FUNDING OF PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to report from the Committee on Finance an amendment to be proposed to the civil or miscellaneous appropriation bill. I wish now to say to the Senate that this amendment, proposed by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Finance to be added to the civil appropriation bill, contains some important provisions in regard to funding the public debt. I submit it now, and ask that it be printed, so that their attention may be called to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it increase the appropriation?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no item of appropriation in it.

The proposed amendment was ordered to be printed.

INTEREST ON STATE BONDS.

Mr. MORGAN. If there be no further morning business, I ask the Senate to take up Senate joint resolution No. 94. This joint resolution was considered some time since, and debated, and laid aside at the request of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORRIS.] He has now, I understand, no objection to it, and I ask that it be taken up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is very desirable that the bill relating to the removal of causes from the State courts to the United States courts should be taken up and passed to-day, if it is to be passed at all; but I presume this resolution will occupy but a moment.

Mr. MORGAN. It will occupy no time, I think.

Mr. SUMNER. I am very desirous to move an executive session for some fifteen or twenty minutes, in order to act on a certain matter. I have a note from the Department of State in my hands expressing a great interest in a matter which is now pending before the Senate in executive session and inviting immediate action upon it.

Mr. CONNESS. That can afford to wait. There is no need of that.

Mr. MORGAN. I think we had better pass this joint resolution. It will take no time.

Mr. SUMNER. I will not interfere with the Senator.

The motion of Mr. MORGAN was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 94) directing the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever any State shall have been or may be in default for the payment of interest or principal on investments in its stocks or bonds held by the United States in trust, to retain the moneys due to such States from the United States.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know that I understand the force of the resolution that is before the Senate. My impression is, however, as I heard it read, that it may, perhaps, affect some of the interests of the State of Indiana, and I should like to have it read again.

The Chief Clerk again read the joint resolution, as follows:

That whenever any State shall have been, or may be, in default of the payment of interest or principal on investments in its stocks or bonds held by the United States in trust, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to retain the whole, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of any moneys due on any account from the United States to such State, and to apply the same to the payment of such principal and interest, or either, or to the reimbursement of any sum of money advanced by the United States on account of such interest.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope that resolution will not pass without some further consideration. The Government of the United States holds some of the bonds of the State of Indiana, issued about the year 1836. She has, as I understand, withheld upon these bonds the per cent. which was due to the State of Indiana upon the sales of the public lands within that State. I never knew that it had been proposed before that any other claims the State of Indiana may have upon the Government for advances should be withheld from these bonds. The truth is that the Government of the United States ought to acquiesce in the adjustment of the indebtedness of the State of Indiana made between her and her creditors in 1846. This bill will make it impossible, perhaps, to secure such an adjustment between the State and General Government. I know of no present necessity for the passage of it. I do not know enough about the measure to say very much, but I think it is not called for.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this joint resolution differs but in one particular from a law that was passed in 1845. Whenever a State does not pay the interest on its bonds in the possession of the General Government, and the Government is indebted to that State for any purpose, the accounting officers now feel authorized to retain, and do in fact retain, the money due by the State to the General Government; but inasmuch as the power to do that has been disputed, they ask for the passage of a measure of this kind. I send to the desk a letter from the Secretary of the Interior explaining the whole matter fully, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., January 27, 1868.

Sir: I have the honor to submit for the consideration of the Finance Committee the accompanying draft of a joint resolution.

It differs but in one particular from a resolution approved March 3, 1845, (Statutes-at-Large, vol. 5, p. 801.) The latter directed the retention by the Secretary of the Treasury of moneys due to a defaulting State on account of the percentage of proceeds of the public lands lying within her limits. This resolution makes it his duty to withhold any moneys due to such State from the United States on any account whatever.

The propriety of the original legislation has never been questioned. Its terms were limited, as at the time of its passage no moneys were due from the General Government to any State, except on account of such proceeds. It was in keeping with the provisions of an act approved September 4, 1841, (St. Id., p. 453) giving to certain States ten per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands within their respective limits. The fourth section provides that money due to any State on account of such proceeds should be first applied to the payment of any debt due and payable from such State to the United States.

Without such special provision it may be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, or of the accounting officers, in adjusting a claim by a State against the United States, to ascertain and withhold the sum due from the former to the latter. To relieve the subject of all doubts, I respectfully suggest, however, that a positive legislative direction in the premises, such as the joint resolution contemplates, should be given.

This Department is the depository of a large amount of overdue State bonds which the United States hold in trust for certain Indian tribes. The annually accruing interest for many years was unpaid by the respective States, but was advanced by Congress from the Treasury.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. BROWNING, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, Chairman Finance Committee,
United States Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I think there must be some mistake in that letter. It speaks of a State receiving ten per cent. on the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. The largest amount ever paid to any State was five per cent. The Clerk either made a mistake in reading the letter, or the Secretary of the Interior made one in writing it.

Mr. MORTON. I think it ought to be provided in this bill that there shall first be an accounting between the United States and the State as to what funds or moneys may have been withheld from the State on account of interest due on its bonds, or as to what money there may be in the Treasury due to the State on account of the sales of public lands. It is my understanding that for a time what was known as the two or three per cent. fund which was due to certain western States through which the national road ran was withheld from the States and applied to the interest of their bonds held by the General Government. Whether there has ever been a formal settlement on the books of the Treasury of those accounts I do not know; but as a matter of justice such deductions should be taken from what the Government owes the States. For example, the Government owes the State of Indiana a large sum on account of advances made during the war, and before the gross amount is deducted from the interest on the State bonds held by the General Government there should be an accounting as to what may have been withheld from the State on account of the sales of the public lands to pay the interest on those bonds. In a little time I will prepare an amendment to that effect, and then I shall make no objection to the passage of the measure.

Mr. MORGAN. This joint resolution was laid aside three months ago for the same purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is only proposed to be laid aside informally, to be called up again.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well; if it does not lose its place I shall not object.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that this matter be laid aside informally, and the Senate proceed to consider the bill (S. No. 402) for the removal of causes in certain cases from the State courts to the United States courts.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think that bill ought not to be taken up in the morning hour. It is not that sort of business which can be disposed of in a few minutes. It is a bill which ought to be fully and carefully considered by the Senate, as it is important in its nature and general in its character. It seems to me that what we have of the morning hour, after disposing of the regular business, ought to be devoted to such bills as excite no discussion. This bill will take up the whole morning hour, and two or three mornings, in my opinion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to occupy time on this motion. My friend from Indiana does not mean that the bill shall ever be taken up or ever passed. He is opposed to it. The rest of the committee are in favor of it. It is just like all the bills that are taken up in the morning hour and proceeded with as far as possible. I do not blame the gentleman for defeating it in this way if he can, but I hope the Senate will take it up.

Mr. DAVIS. When the honorable Senator from Vermont proposed to take up this bill a few mornings ago he said, with very distinct emphasis, that there was nothing wrong in it. I have seen no bill before the Senate at this session that has more of wrong in it, in my opinion. If the honorable Senator expects to pass this bill without discussion he is greatly mistaken. It is a bill that ought not to pass for many reasons, and he may expect a stubborn resistance whenever it comes up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I am ready for now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the bill for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 20, noes 9; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 402) for the removal of causes in certain cases from the State courts to the United States courts, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the question is taken, in printing the amendment reported there is a misprint in the fourth section, which needs to be corrected; and so I move to amend in line three, section four, of the amendment by inserting after the word "States" the words "while in the performance of his official duty;" and in line five, at the beginning of the line, before the word "every," by inserting the same words, "while in the performance of his official duty." These words were in the original report of the bill, but in printing they were accidentally omitted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee as amended.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, this bill proposes to extend very essentially the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States far beyond the warrant of the Constitution that creates and organizes the jurisdiction of the judicial department of the Government. The bill provides—

That whenever any civil or criminal suit (whether commenced before or after the passage of this act) may be pending in any court of any State against any person, in which suit such person shall intend to make any defense based upon the authority of any law of the United States, or upon the authority of any department of the Government thereof, or upon the authority of any officer acting under any such law or department, or upon any right exercised under, or title held in behalf of the United States, such person may, at any time before the final trial in such suit, in person or by his attorney, file a petition in such suit, &c.—

for the transfer of the case to a Federal court.

Now, Mr. President, so far as the Constitution confers jurisdiction upon any of the courts of the United States, it is already fully invested. The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States is defined by the Constitution in a few simple words, and so far as it is defined and ordained there are existing laws of Congress investing it to its uttermost limit. The measure under consideration proposes far to transcend the limits of the Constitution. It provides that if the defense is based "upon the authority of any law of the United States" it shall be transferred or may be transferred. That is very proper. There are existing laws of Congress that authorize the transfer of any suit in which the right of the plaintiff or the defense of the defendant results directly or by implication from a law of Congress. It is, therefore, not necessary to pass this bill to give the right to a party to transfer a case to a Federal court, either where his claim or his matter of defense originates under a law of Congress. Therefore, with a view to produce that result, this bill is unnecessary, because it is already fully done by existing laws. But the bill goes on:

Or upon the authority of any department of the Government thereof.

I ask the Senator from Vermont if Congress can pass a law authorizing the transfer of a suit brought in a State court to a Federal court on the ground that the matter of defense rests upon an order or direction by a department of the Government? Why, sir, the position is absurd and unsound in the extreme degree. A Department of the Government authorizes a totally illegal act; it authorizes a subordinate acting under the head of a Department to do an act of trespass or any other wrong to a citizen of the United States without any sanction of Constitution or law whatever; and this bill provides that if an officer of the Government has been proceeding to act under such an illegal order of a Department and is sued for trespass by the party injured, he may set up that he was performing that act under the order and direction of a Department, however illegal and unconstitutional that order of the head of the Department might be, and that state of case authorizes and requires the State court in which such a suit is pending to transfer it at once into the Federal courts.

That is only one class of the wrongful and enormous cases in which this bill would have application. There is another:

Or upon the authority of any officer acting under any such law or Department.

If, then, the head of any Department gives any arbitrary and illegal order to one of his subordinates, however that order may conflict with the Constitution and law, if the subordinate proceeds to do the act by the order and direction of an employé and subordinate in any particular Department, this bill provides that if he is sued for the wrong or the trespass he has done he may come into court and file his petition setting forth that the act was done by order of a subordinate of any Department of the Government, and thereupon the State court is required immediately to order the transfer of the case into the Federal court.

Sir, a more wrongful or enormous measure never was introduced into the Congress of the United States. The honorable gentleman is active in piling up measures of this character. He is exceedingly fertile and indefatigable in presenting them to the consideration of the Senate and urging with all of his accustomed zeal and ability their adoption. He and his friends are now in power; but if the tables should be turned upon them all the punishment that could be asked in reason and justice of him and his friends would be that the dominating party which supersedes his should just turn upon him and execute inexorably the measures and the perverted principles which he is now endeavoring to enforce under the provision of this and other acts of Congress that have heretofore been passed.

The honorable Senator is a lawyer and a constitutional lawyer, and he professes, I suppose, to be guided by the Constitution as the supreme law of the land, and to square the legislation of Congress and his own action by the principles of that instrument. Here, sir, is the provision of the Constitution that defines the jurisdiction of the judicial department:

"The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime juris-dition; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects."

The latter branch of jurisdiction has been abolished by a special amendment of the Constitution. Now, I ask the honorable Senator for his authority in the Constitution where a head of Department for providing that a man acting under the authority of a head of Department who has committed a trespass against the rights of a citizen without authority of the Constitution or the law may transfer that case from the State courts to a Federal court. For instance, the head of the War Department does an act that is without the sanction of Constitution or law, that is in flagrant violation of both; he presents himself in the position of a simple trespasser or wrongdoer, and he is liable to be sued and to be held to the same responsibility with any other trespasser; but the honorable Senator's measure provides that if the Secretary of War or any other Secretary commits an act thus without the sanction or authority of the Constitution or law, but in violation of both, and he or the person by whom he directs the execution of his order is sued, the party sued upon filing his petition in the State court where the suit is brought shall be entitled to have a transfer of the case into the Federal court. Sir, the Constitution vests jurisdiction in no such case or class of cases in the Federal judiciary.

The honorable Senator, though, proceeds a step further. The Secretary may choose not to become a trespasser in person; he may direct a subordinate officer of his Department to execute his order, and in that aspect it would be a double trespass. The Secretary would be a trespasser and the person by whom his order to do the wrong was executed would be a trespasser also. They would be co-trespassers, and would be liable to a joint suit by the party injured in the State court. The honorable Senator's bill provides that if the case be presented in that form, where the head of a Department authorizes one of his subordinates to do an act in contravention of the Constitution and laws of Congress, which amounts to a naked simple trespass without color of authority, without the sanction even of an unconstitutional law of the United States, if the party thus committing such a flagrant trespass shall be sued in a State court he by filing his petition is entitled to have the case transferred into the Federal court to be tried, in many States, at a great distance from the locality where the trespass was committed and where the parties and all the witnesses to the trespass reside.

The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States as defined by the Constitution cannot be enlarged by an act of Congress. The Supreme Court has settled that principle again and again, and no judicial decision was necessary to settle it. The Supreme Court has original jurisdiction in certain classes of cases, and it has appellate jurisdiction in other classes of cases, and the Supreme Court has decided that an act of Congress cannot increase its appellate jurisdiction. That court has filed decision upon decision establishing the principle that no act of Congress can enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and take them outside of that jurisdiction that is created and ordained by the Constitution itself. The honorable Senator proposes, then, to create two indefinite, undefined classes of jurisdiction wholly outside of the provision of the Constitution and of that jurisdiction in the Federal courts which is created by the Constitution. There is no principle in the provisions of the Constitution establishing the jurisdiction of the judicial department that authorizes a case of trespass that has originated under the illegal and unconstitutional act of a head of a Department to be transferred to the Federal courts. That is one class of the cases for which the honorable Senator's measure provides; but he is not satisfied with that; he goes a bow-shot beyond that limit, and he provides in the next branch of the sentence that where an act is done by anybody under an order of a Department, or of any person acting under an order of a Department, without regard to its legality, without regard to its constitutionality, without regard to the fact whether it is authorized by any law or has any color of authority whatever, though it may be as wanton, as unjust, as violent as a trespass can be, notwithstanding all these features of atrocity and illegality, still the party sued for such a trespass may, upon his petition, compel the transfer of the case from the State to the Federal courts. Sir, the proposition is an atrocity. There is no warrant for the passage of a law with such a provision. There is no warrant for the courts of the United States to take jurisdiction of the cases provided for in the language of this bill which I have been commenting upon.

The fourth section has been mitigated by the amendment suggested by the honorable Senator; but before he proposed that it should be thus modified, it was the most abhorrent attempt to impose a despotic exercise of power without authority of Constitution or law that ever was brought to the contemplation of my mind. I will read it as it was reported:

That if any person shall willfully and unlawfully impede, hinder, assault, or beat any officer under the United States, or shall willfully and unlawfully injure or destroy the property of any such officer, every such person so offending shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and be imprisoned not exceeding five years.

Was there ever such a proposition made in an assembly that professed to be governed by law? Was there ever anything more atrocious than this proposition brought to the contemplation of civilized man before? All the officers of the Government of the United States of every degree or class have this indemnity thrown around them by the provisions of this fourth section as it was reported by the committee. When any man shall unlawfully and willfully impede, hinder, assault, or beat any officer under the United States, or injure or destroy the property of any such officer, he is to be subject to the severe penalties denounced in the section. When a citizen meets with any officer of the Government of the United States and is grossly insulted by him, and he strikes that officer, not in the discharge of the duties of his office, not in his office, not in the place where his duties are to be executed, but anywhere, upon the public highway, at the residence and domicile, if you please, of the insulted man, if that man receives the grossest indignity and personal insult, and he resents it by striking the man who is covered with the panoply which is proposed to be manufactured by this bill, the person insulting him being an officer of the United States, he immediately subjects himself to a penal prosecution that may bring upon him a fine not exceeding $5,000 and imprisonment not exceeding five years. If that does not create an official oligarchy I do not know what measure would. Take the case of a member of Congress being insulted by one of the guard or other attendants who are doing duty around this Capitol. Stung with the insult he strikes the officer. Then, according to this bill, the officer makes complaint to Judge Carter or some other corrupt judge in the District and institutes a criminal proceeding, and that member of Congress is subject to be arrested and to be tried and have a judgment passed upon him that may subject him to the payment of $5,000 fine and imprisonment for five years.

Sir, how many officers of the United States are now in being in our vast land? The broad and correct definition of an officer is every man who executes any power or any duty under the Government of the United States; it makes no odds whether he is commissioned or not, or what the class or the creed of his office may be, whenever a man clothed with the panoply of an officer of the United States and of this law commits any trespass upon the property or upon the person of any citizen the citizen may be sued civilly, and in addition to that may be prosecuted penally and criminally in the courts of the United States and be subject to this punishment. Why, sir, I cannot express my disgust and detestation of a law or proposed law that has any such provision in it. I concede freely that an officer or a gentleman of the Government of the United States in the discharge of his official duties, and in their proper discharge, ought to be protected by the laws; and there are many laws in full force to embrace and protect all such cases. If the laws are defective supply their defects, and make the amount of protection that is given to every officer, without regard to his grade or class, sufficient to secure him in the proper exercise of his legal and constitutional duties. But to clothe a man, who is called an officer, any and everywhere with the protection which this bill gives him, both as to his person and his property, is the most extravagant and absurd and revolting attempt to exercise power that I have ever known.

If I understood the modification which the honorable Senator suggested, it was that this liability to suit and prosecution should apply only where the act done to the officer or to his property was while the officer was in the discharge of his duty. Even in that form the proposition is very objectionable; it destroys all proper proportion between the wrong and the punishment. I will give an example: in the southern States, if you please, a man goes to the polls to vote; there are negro officers of election; a negro officer who is presiding at the election sees this man approach; he knows that he is an anti-Radical, and he orders him away, saying to him, "Get away, you damned rebel; you are not entitled to vote here." The insulted man may strike him; he may spit in his face, or he may simply put himself in an attitude to strike without striking, and he will be held to have committed an assault. The honorable Senator's bill would permit that man to be prosecuted penally and criminally in one of the United States courts, and would allow that court, if it chose, to inflict punishment upon him to the extent of $5,000 of fine and five years of imprisonment. Does the honorable Senator maintain that between that offense and the amount of punishment that may be inflicted upon the trespasser or the wrongdoer, if in truth there was any wrong done at all, there would be any just proportion? No, sir.

Mr. President, I have been a great admirer of the legal acumen of the honorable Senator from Vermont, of the fertility of his invention in bringing up expedients to punish the rebels, to manacle the rebels, and this measure of his is only another device to impose upon them a grievous and most galling fetter. He anticipates that the coming elections may produce outbursts of passion and conflict, possibly, between the people of the southern States and the negro officers who are to conduct those elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of Saturday is before the Senate, being the bill (S. No. 11) to admit the State of Colorado into the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. The bill to establish rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States was under consideration, and was laid over informally for the Colorado bill. I desire now to call up that bill; I gave way all day on Saturday.

Mr. HARLAN. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that I understand an agreement has been made for a modification of the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] to the Colorado bill, which I suppose will be satisfactory all around the Chamber; and if it shall prove to be so, a vote can be had in a very few minutes on that bill. I shall be glad, therefore, if the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senate would consent that we should go on with that bill.

Mr. WILSON. I am willing to give that bill fifteen minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I have not been any party to the alleged agreement, I do not want to consider myself bound by it until, at least, I know what it is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 818, which is the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the unfinished business of Saturday and all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill mentioned by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope that will not be done. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will give us at least fifteen or thirty minutes for the consideration of the Colorado bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would not object to giving fifteen minutes, but I wish to say to the Senate that the appropriation bills, from causes which need not be stated here, are behind; and I am conscious that if they are not pressed and considered in preference to other matters, when the Senate want to adjourn it will be kept here beyond its inclination by the delay of those bills. Here is the miscellaneous appropriation bill, which will occupy some days. The Indian appropriation bill is behind it, and several small bills, and then there is the deficiency bill, which is preparing, and which is to come from the House of Representatives. If these appropriation bills are not put out of the way before the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, comes here with his funding and tax bills, I can see that the Senate is to be very much embarrassed and delayed in its action on these bills. I therefore feel it my duty to apprise the Senate of this condition of things, and to move to take up this bill at the present moment. Of course, if the Senate were ready to vote on the Colorado bill, that would present another question; but I see the Senator from Vermont rises—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had the floor upon it on Saturday, and have got some reasons why I do not want to vote for the bill, and I expect to give them, if I ever have a chance to do so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. So that I am sure we are not going to vote on the Colorado bill now. We are not going to vote on it to-day in all probability. It is a bill that is to be contested; and I submit to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] whether, under the circumstances, he will not take an opportunity when he will not be obliged to antagonize it with these appropriation bills, which it is obvious enough must demand the attention of the Senate.

Mr. YATES. I desire to submit to the Senator another view of the case. This bill has been pending all the session. The Committee on Territories have not occupied much of the time; neither has there been a great deal of business before that committee. This bill has to pass the House of Representatives as well as the Senate, and the appropriation bill must pass anyhow. We are nearly through the debate upon it; the Senate is now ready to vote upon it; and I think, as it is the order of the day, that the Senate ought not to postpone it for the consideration of any other bill. I think these are good reasons why it should not be postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on postponing the order of the day for the purpose of considering the appropriation bill.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 20, noes 18.

Mr. CONNESS and Mr. YATES called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As the yeas and nays are to be called on this question I trust the Senate will indulge me in saying a word. I have not taken any part in the discussion upon the Colorado bill, and shall not attempt to enter into any discussion; but I speak merely in reference to the business of the Senate. That bill has been repeatedly before the Senate, and has met with unexpected opposition. It has assumed the shape now rather of an enabling act, and it does seem to me that if we are ever to dispose of that subject at all now is the time to do it. It has been debated at very considerable length. Why not dispose of it in some way, and have a definite vote upon it? I am sure we shall advance the business of the session better in that way, because if it is postponed now it will come up again. Suppose the Senator from Maine takes up his appropriation bill. After that is disposed of there will be another struggle. After the time that has been spent on this bill I am sure it will be economy of time to take it up and finish it. Let us dispose of it definitively. I hope we shall adhere to the order of the day.

Mr. CONKLING. I think the Senator is quite mistaken in supposing that the Colorado bill can be voted upon presently. I have been shown this morning already, in different forms, amendments proposing to commit the ratification or rejection of the constitution to a special election held for that purpose, to take it away from the general election at which a full vote is to be cast. I feel very sure that such an amendment will be resisted, and that provisions in the Colorado bill will be insisted upon which will lead to considerable debate.

Now, one word as to the appropriation bill. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] suggested that the Colorado bill must go to the House of Representatives. So, I beg to remind him, must the appropriation bill go to the House, because a large number of amendments are reported, which amendments will be the subject of controversy, and will go ultimately to a conference committee, which the Colorado bill is not likely to do.

Again, the Senator says the appropriation bill must pass at all events. Yes, Mr. President; and that, I submit, is precisely the reason why it ought to be taken up now. The appropriation bill must pass at all events, and those who have served in Congress as long as most of the gentlemen around me have know how appropriation bills pass at the last when all legislation is finished except the appropriation bills. They understand the haste and the casual way in which appropriation bills are passed under those circumstances. I hope that we shall take up the appropriation bill now. I wish we could have taken it up before, as we should have been able to do but for casualties which could not be controlled. We have reached now the latest time in the session, looking to what we know is the condition of business, when it can be taken up and deliberately considered, and it seems to me that it is a great mistake to put it aside for other business.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not suppose there is any time worse spent than the time spent in the discussion of the precedence of business here; but I rise, nevertheless, to occupy a minute, and to say that I hope this motion will not obtain. I hope, as said by the Senator from Illinois, that we shall finish something; because otherwise we shall go all over these discussions again. We were all prepared to vote on Saturday as to whether the constitution of Colorado should be submitted to the people of Colorado or not, and all the speeches that might be made in a month could not throw any light on that proposition as to how each Senator had determined to vote; but we did not vote. Of course we have got to submit to discussion; but I hope we shall finish something; and I object now, and hope the appropriation bill will not be taken up. Why take it up? Is this session to close immediately? I think we had better put that idea out of our heads. We must stay here until the public business is done, and well done. There is no demand except the demand of our own convenience to call us hence. I hope, sir, that we shall not procrastinate the consideration of this bill further by putting it aside.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator from Maine will remember that there can be no hostility to the appropriation bill. From the experience I have had in the Senate I believe it is the poorest economy of the time of the Senate that can possibly be had to consider a bill two or three days and then lay it aside for something else. We ought to have a rule by which the Senate could pursue a measure until it was disposed of one way or the other. If we lay aside the Colorado bill, I doubt whether it will ever be reached again this session. I think we ought to vote upon it. It went over on Saturday on my motion, and I am sorry now that I made the motion. I supposed of course that it would be voted on to-day; otherwise we should have, at least so far as my action is concerned, taken the vote on Saturday. I hope we shall vote to-day on the Colorado bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on postponing the order of the day for the purpose of taking up the appropriation bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cameron, Cole, Conkling, Davis, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norton, Sherman, Sumner, Vickers, and Willey—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Drako, Ferry, Fowler, Harlan, Howard, Morton, Nye, Pomero, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cattell, Corbett, Dixon, Doollittle, Grimes, Henderson, McDonald, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, and Van Winkle—15.

So the motion was agreed to.

ANDREW S. CORE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 522) to authorize the Commissioner of the Revenue to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core. The amendments were in line three to strike out the words "Commissioner of the Revenue is" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "proper accounting officers of the Treasury are;" and also to amend the title of the bill so as to read, "A bill to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core."

Mr. WILLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate hold an evening session this evening to enable me to dispose of a bill that I had up on Saturday, but yielded to the Colorado bill, and which thus lost its place. It is a bill of about one hundred sections and it will take some little time to read it. I should like to have it taken up to-night. I move therefore that we hold a session this evening for that special purpose.

Mr. CONNESS. Fix the hour.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate hold a session commencing at seven o'clock this evening, for the special purpose of considering the bill (S. No. 529) establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That is an important measure. I understand the Committee on Finance propose to be in session every evening for some evenings to come, and I presume every member of the committee would like to be here when that bill is disposed of. I hope therefore that the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts will not prevail.

Mr. WILSON. I have been waiting for three or four weeks to get this bill up. It is a long bill, and it will take an hour to read it. Last Saturday I had the floor and was about to take it up, but yielded to over-persuasion and it lost its place, and the War Department is pressing me to get the bill through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent, as the appropriation bill is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That motion can be made at some other period. I think we had better go on with the appropriation bill.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have a vote on the motion. I desire to pass the bill to-night. I am compelled to go away to-morrow, and do not intend to be here for ten days.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We cannot dispose of it to-night.

Mr. WILSON. I think we can.

Mr. FERRY. I think the bill can be disposed of this evening. It is merely a revision of the Articles of War. I have read the bill with some care. I think it can be disposed of almost as rapidly as it is read through.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senate will consent to meet this evening for this purpose.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, there are so many gentlemen on the floor that I am utterly unable to understand what the bill is that the Senator from Massachusetts wants us to consider this evening.

Mr. WILSON. The bill that I desire to take up is a bill establishing rules and articles for the government of the Army of the United States. I will state that the bill was originally framed by two Army officers and Professor Lieber. The bill was then submitted to General Sherman, General Sheridan, and General Augur, who have spent months upon it, and it is, in my judgment, an almost perfect measure. It is a long bill of one hundred and three sections, comprising the Articles of War, which it is very important to have passed at this session. I have been pressed by the Secretary of War to get the bill through. I had the floor on Saturday for that purpose, and very foolishly yielded it to over-persuasion to get another bill through which it was said would take but a few moments. I desire to have a meeting of the Senate this evening for the purpose of getting it through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to putting the question on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts? All this proceeding is out of order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to make a single remark. I am perfectly willing to vote for a night session if the Senator from Massachusetts is sure that we shall have a reasonably full Senate; but I am afraid that if we order a night session we shall not have a quorum, and those of us who come here will lose our time.

Mr. WILSON. I think we shall have a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion for an evening session to-day, commencing at seven o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Half past seven.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Half past seven o'clock is mentioned. The question is on ordering an evening session, to commence at half past seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 18, nays 11.

INTEREST DUE BY STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the permission of the Senator from Maine having the appropriation bill in charge to take up the joint resolution which was under consideration this morning for the purpose of having a vote upon it. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORRIS] will not be objected to, and I think the resolution will lead to no further debate whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill can be passed over informally by unanimous consent. Is there any objection?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection, if this resolution will lead to no delay.

Mr. MORGAN. It will lead to no delay. There will be no debate upon it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 94) directing the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever any State shall have been or may be in default for the payment of interest or principal on investments in its stocks or bonds held by the United States in trust, to retain the moneys due to such State from the United States.

Mr. MORTON. I move to amend the joint resolution by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That there shall be an account rendered in the first instance to the States in default showing the amount of moneys that have been withheld from the States in default on account of sales of public lands, or on any other account.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. THAYER and Mr. ROSS submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 1073) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1869; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. STEWART, Mr. MORTON, and Mr. RAMSEY submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 316) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 251) for the relief of Captain Charles N. Goulding, late quartermaster of volunteers; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. RAMSEY. With the consent of the Senator from Maine, I should like to take up the joint resolution which has just come from the House of Representatives. The Senate has previously passed a precisely similar measure, and it is important that this should be passed now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is it?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is a resolution extending the time for the construction of the Northern Pacific railroad two years. We have passed a similar measure here.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is it the same thing?

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes, sir; but under the rules of the House they could not reach that; and this being resolution day they passed the same measure as a resolution, and it comes here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be taken up by unanimous consent. Is there any objection?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it leads to no debate I will not object.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 316) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that section eight of an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget's sound, on the Pacific coast," shall be so amended as to read as follows:

That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to, and accepted by, said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: that the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from and after the 2d day of July, 1868, and shall complete not less than one hundred miles per year after the second year thereafter, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1877.

Mr. COLE. I should like to inquire if this resolution ties up the large belt of public land extending across the continent that is supposed to be on the line of the road when built up hereafter?

Mr. RAMSEY. I do not know that it does.

Mr. COLE. Has that land been withdrawn from public sale and settlement and pre-emption?

Mr. RAMSEY. This resolution is precisely similar to a measure that we passed the other day in the Senate.

Mr. COLE. Still I should like to know if it operates to that extent, of withholding from public sale and settlement and pre-emption the public land along the line of that road.

Mr. RAMSEY. It does for the time being; for two years.

Mr. COLE. And the road is to be commenced in two years. I think it will work great hardship upon the settlers on the public lands.

Mr. RAMSEY. No very great hardship. I do not know that the settlers complain of it. I think there are a very few on the line of the road.

Mr. COLE. I do not know how it may be along the line of that road.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If there is to be a debate on this resolution I must insist on going on with the appropriation bill.

Mr. COLE. I have nothing further to say on the subject.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to make one remark by way of filing a caveat. I have no objection to this resolution extending the time. I wish, however, to give notice that I shall not hold myself bound to grant a subsidy hereafter that comes and builds an argument upon the fact that we have extended the time in the case of this road. This is just such an extension as took place in 1866 to another road, upon which arguments of great solidity and of very imposing character have been built to show that we should give a large sum to other roads in consequence of that extension. I merely file that caveat now.

Mr. HOWARD. The two measures are entirely different from each other.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call for the regular order.

Mr. RAMSEY. We are ready to take the vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to taking the vote if it can be done without debate.

Mr. RAMSEY. There will be no further argument about it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill. No objection being made that course will be taken.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines ten and eleven, to strike out "$564,904 32" and to insert "$1,500,000" in the clause making an appropriation "for necessary expenses in carrying into effect the several acts of Congress authorizing loans and the issue of Treasury notes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line thirty-nine the following:

For facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electrical telegraph, $40,000.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to have some explanation of that word "facilitating." I do not really understand what it means.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the language of the law.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly the Government has aided to establish telegraph lines, but I do not understand that it is interested in the corporations or connected with their management.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. By the act of June 16, 1860, Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract with this company; in the language of this provision, to make a contract "for facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electrical telegraph." That contract was made by the Secretary of the Treasury—I have it here in my hand—by which the Government stipulated to pay $40,000 annually for the service of this company. This company was to do all the business of the Government, as will be seen by the contract, and the business of all its Departments, and besides it was to do the telegraphing for the Coast Survey, Smithsonian Institution, and, I am inclined to think, some others. Suffice it to say, that this appropriation is to meet an obligation of the law created by special statute, on which was founded a contract which the committee have examined, and find that it not only justifies and warrants this appropriation, but requires it. The question was raised, I believe, at one time whether this company had performed all its duty in regard to it. I have now the statutes of 1860 before me, which I will read:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the President of the United States, is hereby authorized and directed to advertise for sealed proposals to be received for sixty days after the passage of this act (and the fulfillment of which shall be guaranteed by responsible parties, as in the case of bids for mail contracts) for the use by the Government of a line or lines of magnetic telegraph to be constructed within two years from the 31st day of July, 1860, from some point or points on the west line of the State of Missouri, by any route or routes which the said contractors may select, (connecting at such point or points by telegraph with the cities of Washington, New Orleans, New York, Charleston, Philadelphia, Boston, and other cities in the Atlantic, southern, and western States,) to the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, for a period of ten years," &c.

That is all I need to say about it to gentlemen who do not remember it. It is not a new question at all. It is one of the annual appropriations required by the statute and by contract, and one of those appropriations which have heretofore been made without controversy so far as I know. On examination the committee are satisfied that there is no doubt about the fact that it is the obligation of the law and the obligation of the contract.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to know when the contract runs out or expires. I should like also to understand why the House of Representatives did not insert this clause in the bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That I cannot inform the Senator, except that if he looks through the bill he will see several appropriations that were not provided for by the House. This contract bears date 1861.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Extending until 1871, I suppose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause, from line forty seven to line fifty-four:

For supplying deficiency in the fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, $250,000: Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall communicate at each annual session of Congress a full and complete statement in detail of the amounts collected from seamen, and also the amount expended for sick and disabled seamen, in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 3, 1862.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should really like to have some explanation from the committee why they propose to strike out that clause. It is an appropriation that has been made regularly for several years without objection; and it seems that the House of Representatives, with all their desire to economize, thought that ought to be retained.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There was some difference of opinion in the committee as to the propriety of making this appropriation; and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] has some statistics on the subject, which, if he has them present, I should be glad if he would state. I believe they led the committee to the conclusion that the appropriation might as well be left out.

Mr. HOWE. I did not understand that there was any difference of opinion among the members of the committee as to the propriety of making this amendment. I thought the committee was of the opinion—I certainly was myself—that there was no good reason why the Government should undertake to maintain this class of employes any more than any class of hired persons. They are seamen employed in the merchant marine on private account, for the joint benefit of themselves and their employers. They are liable to be taken sick, and they have their whole salary, their wages, to take care of themselves when they are sick. That is all that anybody has who works on a farm, or who works in a factory, or who works in a mechanic shop; and if the Government undertakes to provide for these persons when they are sick, I do not see why, for the same reason, Government should not undertake to provide for every laborer in the United States who is taken sick. It is true this appropriation has been made for a great many years, and, I suppose, has come to be regarded as one of the ordinary appropriations of the Government, but it struck me as one of the abuses in our system of making appropriations.

I took occasion to look into the history of this particular appropriation with some considerable care. I ransacked the statutes in order to trace its history. The first attempt that the Government made to provide for disabled seamen was made in 1798. That was simply an enactment authorizing the collectors to collect of seamen employed in the merchant marine twenty cents a month, which should constitute a fund to be applied to the support of seaman who were sick or disabled. In 1799 it was provided that the moneys collected in any State should be expended in that State, with the exception, however, that that provision was not to apply to the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, or Connecticut. The first appropriation which Congress made for the support of sick and disabled seamen I think was in 1837. In 1802 the twenty cents a month had not only proved sufficient to take care of this class of our seamen, but the fund had accumulated in the Treasury so that $15,000 were appropriated out of the unexpended fund to build a hospital in Massachusetts. With that $15,000, as near as I can get at the history of the matter, they bought land and built a hospital, which some thirty years later sold for enough or within a few thousand dollars of enough to build a very large and extensive establishment which I understand they have there now. That was procured without any expense to the Treasury. The foundation for it was obtained from this fund. But in spite of that appropriation the fund still continued to accumulate so that in 1811 Congress appropriated $50,000 out of the unexpended money to constitute a fund for the support of disabled seamen in the Navy. I never could understand upon what argument that appropriation was justified. There certainly could not be any argument in justification of it except the one that there was a fund piling up for which the merchant service had no use, and Congress undertook to subtract $50,000 of it, and did, to furnish a foundation for the naval hospital fund.

In 1837 Congress commenced the work of building hospitals, and that work continued to thrive. For many years marine hospitals seemed to become all at once a favorite instrumentality with those who had secured advantageous town sites and wanted to build up a town. One of their first efforts was to get an appropriation for a marine hospital. They were built where there were town sites or where it was thought there was a good chance to start a town. I cannot ascertain that there was ever a dollar appropriated to build a marine hospital at New York. I understand they have one there; they use one; but how they came by it I do not know. Nor do I understand that there was ever a dollar appropriated to build a hospital in Philadelphia. There never was any money appropriated out of the Treasury to build one at Boston. But large sums of money have been appropriated to build hospitals on the Mississippi river all the way up and down. There is one at Napoleon, in Arkansas, to build which some sixty or seventy thousand dollars have been expended. I came across that in looking over the statutes, and it cost me a great deal of study to ascertain where Napoleon was. I had never seen it, and never heard of anybody that had seen it, and never have yet seen but one man who acknowledged having seen it, and I came across him this morning. I asked him if he ever was there; he said he was. I asked him what sort of a town it was, and he said there was no town; there was nothing there but a marine hospital. Evidently the marine hospital is worth a good many times what all the rest of the town is.

But up to 1837 this twenty cents a month furnished a sufficient fund to take care of the seamen. Then you had no marine hospitals. Now you build them everywhere. This amendment does not propose to make any disposition of those; they are there at the service of the merchant marine, furnishing ample accommodations in the towns where they are found for all the seamen who are likely ever to congregate there. If, however, the twenty cents a month is not enough—and I cannot conceive why it is not enough to-day if it was thirty years ago—it seems to me the remedy is to authorize the collection of a larger sum; but I have no statistics to satisfy me that there is more sickness in the merchant marine to-day than there was then. The marine may be larger; there may be a larger number of men employed; if so, there is a larger revenue, a larger fund collected by the twenty cents a month. But if that percentage is not large enough, it seems to me clearly that the Government should collect more. We have spent several million dollars in the construction of these hospitals, and I think the Government has done already all that it ought to do to support that class of our laboring men. There is no provision of law directing the expenditure of this money; it is appropriated just as the Secretary of the Treasury sees fit to appropriate it. I have no reason to suppose he does not dispose of it as fairly as anybody else would; but I do not think it ought to be appropriated for this purpose any longer.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose the principles upon which this appropriation has been made are very well understood by gentlemen who have considered the subject at all. In the first place, it is supposed to be of very great consequence to the country that the commerce of the country should be sustained in all proper modes. Of course, it is not to be sustained by appropriating money out of the Treasury for that purpose. As a general rule, it sustains itself; but gentlemen know very well that at some periods of our history commerce has been very prosperous and at other periods of our history it has been very much depressed; and according as it is prosperous or depressed, undoubtedly will be the amount received to make up this fund which is applied for the relief of sick and disabled seamen. There is very great difference between the class and kind of men who are employed as seamen and those who are employed in agricultural and in other pursuits. They are a shiftless class of men, never providing for themselves, as has been known from the very beginning of commerce, spending all they get as they go, having no homes, as a general rule, and no friends, while other men employed in other pursuits have homes and have friends. Owing to the character of the men themselves and the importance of sustaining commerce all nations engaged in commerce have recognized the necessity of making some provision for the care of these men when they are sick and disabled. If no provision is made for them by Government, the result is that they are uncared for and they die; they are left to suffer and perish. This is particularly the case, as I am told by my friend from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] on the Mississippi river, and that was the occasion for the erection of hospitals there. There are many men employed on the steamers on that river, and if they get sick they are put on shore, and there is nobody to take of them; they are neglected, and they perish, which is not very much to the credit of any people.

Consequently, as I have said, all commercial people have deemed it necessary to make some provision for the support of this class of men when they have become sick or disabled for the time, in order to take care of them until they may return to their ordinary pursuits. With a view to do this it was thought no more than just to impose upon the wages of seamen a certain taxation, and a law was early passed by which a certain amount is taken from the monthly wages for this very purpose, and it is called in the shipping papers and settlements that are made between the sailors and their employers "hospital money," and it is always calculated by the merchant; when he pays off a seaman he takes so much hospital money, that is twenty cents a month, from the pay that may be due to the seaman, and the merchant pays it over to the Government.

In the early periods of our commerce the practice was to provide, in every principal place, for the care of the seamen, by making a contract at so much per month, or so much per week, with somebody to take care of him. Nobody can be taken care of in that way except on a certificate from the collector of the port. He ascertains the facts and gives a certificate, and on that certificate the sick or disabled seaman is put under the care of the party who has contracted for so much per month or per week to take care of him until he is restored or dies. In the early history of the Government this hospital money accumulated; and gentlemen will bear in mind, undoubtedly, that the early period of our history was an exceedingly prosperous period for our commerce. We have had, as I before remarked, ups and downs in our commerce since; some periods at which it has been extraordinarily prosperous, and a great deal of money, comparatively, was received from this fund, and others in which it fell off and the fund was reduced. As our nation grew greater it was thought advisable to take some portion of this money which had thus accumulated and build hospitals, as other commercial people do. We have naval hospitals as other naval people have, and we also have these marine hospitals for the care of the seamen engaged in the merchant service.

For a long period of time all the expense of taking care of the seamen was paid out of this fund which had been deducted from their own wages, and it seems that at one time Congress having a surplus misappropriated a part of the fund and appropriated it for naval purposes, which was wholly unjustifiable, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said. At a later period we have drawn upon the fund very largely for the erection of marine hospitals. The fund has been in a very good condition generally. Many marine hospitals have been erected in the country; but whether all of them have been erected out of this fund or not I am not able to say. We have undoubtedly erected more than were necessary. More than were necessary were erected on the Mississippi river, and some were erected upon the lakes. Since I have been here I know it was once rather fashionable for every gentleman who lived at a shipping port to get a hospital for his place. I remember that one was procured by the late Senator Foot for Burlington, in the State of Vermont. That has since been found to be useless, and it has been sold and the money put into the Treasury. So I think with some hospitals on the Mississippi river. I believe there was one at Galena which has never been used to any extent. Whether it has been sold or not I do not know. There was one erected in Iowa, I presume at Dubuque or at Burlington.

Mr. HARLAN. At Burlington.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And that I think has been sold. I remember that the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] said it was of no use, and proposed to sell it. Perhaps there are some others which should be sold. But in that manner, and owing to the great falling off of our commerce during the war, this fund has been undoubtedly very much reduced; it has been exhausted, and the condition of things is such that the receipts from it are not sufficient to supply so much money as has been expended for the annual wants of seamen.

The simple question that presents itself to the Senate is this: shall we abandon this policy? Shall we now adopt a line of conduct with regard to our merchant service that no other mercantile nation on the face of the earth does adopt? Shall we say that this class of men, shiftless, improvident as they are, liable to accident, liable to disease, with nobody to take care of them—because the moment they are discharged at the end of a voyage the owner of the vessel has no further interest in them—shall be suffered to go uncared for? Or shall we maintain the system that we have hitherto maintained, and get as much as we can from the wages of the seamen and appropriate it for their benefit. Is it advisable to strike this blow at once at the marine hospitals and at the fund itself, and say that, sick or disabled or not the seamen engaged in our merchant service, in our commerce, external and internal, shall be entirely uncared for at the present time; that we will not meet this deficiency arising from the causes to which I have alluded and to which the honorable Senator himself has alluded; that we will just close our hospitals up, put an end to our contracts where there are contracts, and refuse to follow out the system adopted at the very beginning of our existence as a nation, and let this class of men go uncared for? You could not strike a heavier and more severe blow at the commerce of the country than you would do by adopting any such idea as that, and I hope that this occasion will not now for the first time be seized upon, and these seamen left to all the suffering which would be occasioned by the want of an appropriation of this description.

Mr. MORTON. I think, Mr. President, this is a question of humanity. I believe that humanity demands that there shall be a provision, and ample provision, made for our sailors and for those employed upon our rivers and lakes. The deck hands on steamboats—the river sailors if you please—and those upon the ocean and upon the lakes are notoriously an improvident and reckless class of men. Their habits are such that they do not save money; not perhaps one in twenty-five of them; and when they are taken sick they are put off the boat, and if there is is not some public provision made for them they are left to die. Take, for example, the Mississippi river. There is a great deal of sickness among those who are employed on steamboats, flatboats, and other craft navigating the lower Mississippi river. These men are of a class not taken into private houses. They are a class of men who have few local friends to take care of them. If a sailor is attacked with yellow fever on a steamboat on the Mississippi river he is put off at the first landing. The captain may get some poor man to say that he will take care of him; but what a chance? What capacity has he got for doing it? There must be provision made for these men or they will be left to die like the brute. I believe it is done by every country, and I think ours should not be the first one to abandon such a humane policy.

I may say, in this connection, that there is a great defect in our system of marine hospitals. They are worse managed than any other class of hospitals. For example, there is no superintendent of these hospitals. I am told that the business of these hospitals is all conducted by a couple of clerks in the Treasury Department, who are neither physicians nor surgeons, but mere clerks, and that there is nobody to manage, to go and inspect, and look after the hospitals.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My friend will allow me to say that a bill has passed the Senate authorizing the appointment of a superintendent of marine hospitals.

Mr. MORTON. I know it has passed the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It has gone to the House of Representatives, and I am told it will pass there. That will supply that very defect.

Mr. SUMNER. Has such a bill passed during this session?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; a few weeks ago.

Mr. MORTON. That is a very important measure.

Mr. SUMNER. It is.
